The Stockton

By George W. Leistner

DON H. PORTER.

THE story of the great mission hotel at Stockton is a story of the civic enterprise of the business men of the city.

Stockton has long wanted a hotel in keeping with the needs and dignity of the city. One man felt the need acutely—Mr. Lee A. Phillips. He called to his aid Mr. Frank A. West and Mr. Samuel Frankenheimer and the three went to work. A site ideal in size and location was found in the central part of the city and a year's option of purchase was secured.

Preliminary plans and specifications were prepared by Mr. E. B. Brown, the architect of The Stockton, and it was decided that five hundred thousand dollars would be required to purchase the site and construct the hotel. The Stockton Investment Company was organized and leading business men of Stockton composed the Board of Directors: Messrs. Thompson, Hough, Guernsey, Phillips, Frankenheimer, Holt, Peters, Atherton, West, Simpson, Gardner, Cowell and Nicol. An active campaign for funds was started and in thirty days the hotel was assured. Two hundred and seventy-five business men promised $274,400 toward the hotel and $200,000 was raised by bonding. This money was paid during the panicky times recently experienced and only four subscribers failed to make a payment. Less than $2,000 will be lost of the amount subscribed. Nothing is more indicative of the public spirit of Stockton than the generous way in which the business men of the city contributed toward The Stockton.

The Stockton is built of re-inforced concrete and covers an entire block 300x100 feet. Located in the heart of the city, facing a public square, overlooking the waters of Stockton channel, and having a street on each side, the site is unique and peculiarly adapted to hotel purposes.

Architecturally the motif is Spanish Renaissance. The main portion of the building is five stories in height. With its long colonnade, overhanging balconies and red tiled roof the structure presents a most handsome appearance.

The distinctive feature of the lobby is the immense fireplace. It is said to be the largest fireplace of any public building in the State. It is built of concrete with tile facing and gives a tone of warmth and comfort.

A mezzanine floor surrounds the lobby. The finish here is a beautiful light oak with the floor tiled.

The dining room opening off the lobby is finished in pure white with leather walls. Along the street side are three bays of plate glass with leaded glass transoms. The grill adjoining is uniquely fashioned and done in green. With fireplace, deer antler fixtures, and beamed ceiling the room has a most comfortable appearance. Telephones are at the tables. Above and between the grill and dining room and within sound of the lobby is the music gallery. The kitchen has been given careful consideration. It is large, well lighted, and conveniently arranged. A cold storage plant has been installed.

A most unusual feature of this kitchen consists in plate glass windows looking into it from the mezzanine floor. These windows will enable guests at any hour of the day or night to inspect the sanitary arrangements and to watch the preparation of their food. Such an arrangement is unique and its advantages are too obvious to need explanation.

The hotel contains over two hundred rooms. Every one is an outside room. One hundred and forty-three rooms have bath connections.

The bed rooms have been equipped with what is known as the "somnole" table light for the convenience of those guests who are accustomed to reading in bed. These lights are as easily adjusted to individual comfort as a portable telephone and are expected to give a great deal of satisfaction. There need be no fear of eye strain when one is reading in bed at The Stockton.

A feature that will gladden the commercial traveler is the large well lighted sample rooms to which the entire fifth floor is devoted. A bed room and shower bath adjoins each sample room.

A ball room and convention hall is on the sixth floor and opens on a roof garden. The show place of The Stockton and that which will doubtless form its most distinctive and popular feature is the roof garden. This covers an area of ten thousand square feet, and is surrounded by a pergola which will be trellised with roses and climbing vines. A fountain plays in the center.

From the roof garden one looks directly over the waters of Stockton channel with its constantly moving panorama of incoming and outgoing steamers. Stockton channel never has a dull day. Away off to the west and directly down the channel Mt. Diablo rises and completes as pretty a picture as artist could paint.

The hotel is furnished at a cost of $75,000. Comfort rather than elegance has been the key note. Particular attention has been paid to the harmony of colors and every room spells good taste and comfort. Cleaning will be done by the vacuum system and the heating is by steam.

The Stockton will be opened by Don H. Porter, formerly of The Kenyon of Salt Lake City. The name Porter is synonymous among traveling men with good living and both the people of Stockton and Don H. Porter are to be congratulated—the one in securing a good hotel man, the other a good hotel.

How to Reach Stockton by Water

By Edward F. O'Day

En Route, Steamer "Isleton," March ..., 1910.

WITH a holystoned deck beneath one, with fellow travelers clustered at the rail, with a smell of salt in the air and with a patch of water widening and lengthening between the busy pier and the busy vessel, it matters little whether one is embarking on the "Mauretania" for Liverpool or on the "Isleton" for Stockton. The pleasurable sensation is much the same, provided you be a lover of the water. The duration of the voyage, the luxury of the appointments, the character of the company, the calm or the storm of the elements—these are matters for afterthought. But the exhilaration that comes with drawing away from land is felt only once and as far as I have been able to discover, it may be felt as keenly on San Francisco Bay as in New York Harbor. The trip to Stockton is a short one, so the sociability or reserve of one's fellow passengers counts for little and nasty weather need not enter seriously into one's calculations. The appointments of the steamer, however, are of vital interest, for your traveler, whether he traverse the ocean in the "Mauretania" or the bay in the "Isleton," is bound to be critical, perhaps finicky, about his meals and his sleeping place. If these be good, he is content. If weather conditions and the company are propitious, he is delighted. And out of that delight what may not come? I know one traveler who might answer with an interesting tale. A beautiful moonlight night, two comfortable deck chairs in accidental juxtaposition, a chance remark about the colors of the sunset—and he found a wife. Not all who voyage to Stockton are so fortunate; but there is always the romantic possibility.

Most of us know Stockton pretty well, from Madden's to the Yosemite Club and from the old Yosemite Hotel to the Southern Pacific depot, but how many know the delights of reaching the "Gateway City" by river boat? Strangely enough, very very few. Yet it is one of the pleasantest overnight trips imaginable and if it does not become popular with the opening of the splendid new hotel that is but a step from the head of Stockton Channel, I will beg leave to wonder at the dullness of San Francisco pleasure-seekers.

The rising of the shadows and the coming of evening on San Francisco Bay cannot be adequately enjoyed on a ferryboat; the time of transit is all too short. But on a steamer like the "Isleton" one may view these ever new wonders with leisurely and undistracted attention. Looking back over the foamy wake churned by the big wheel at the stern the eye rests in contemplation on the familiar skyline which loses its prosaic distinctness as the mists of twilight deepen about it. Soon it is a silhouette which the poetic gaze may translate to crags and turrets and battlements with banners drooping here and there above the brooding hills and the canyons of silent traffic. Then of a sudden the obscured sun dips in the unseen ocean and sends skyward the glory of its dying rainbow hues, bathing the city for a little while in colors never yet transferred to canvas. This glory, like all glory, dies and the night lights begin to twinkle, one by one, until soon the deepening darkness is bridged from south to north by a span of winking lamps. We have seen enough of the city; let us turn to the stars that are now shining above us. Heavens! how one strives for poetical expression on these Stockton boats. Let us, rather, come back to earth (or water, if you please), and go in to dinner.

If you must have your cocktail first, here is a youngster with a well-stocked bar who will mix it cunningly. And where in river travel will you find a cosier, more attractive dining saloon? Where does the silver and the glassware shine more brightly, where is the linen snowier? And where, by the same token, will you sit down to a better cooked, better served meal? Let Echo, an experienced miss who knows river travel on the Misissippi and the Yukon, on the Rhine and the Danube and the Nile, let Echo answer and if she speaks truthfully she will say, "On none of these." It may be that I was particularly hungry, it may be that I was unusually happy in my waiter, but certainly I enjoyed that meal. That waiter stands out in memory. He strongly resembled in person, if not in manner, a certain man I know who has no end of prominence in society but whom I have met otherwhere. The resemblance was so striking that I called him—but I shall not mention the name. I doubt if he be on the "Isleton" still; he is a treasure of waiters and it is probable that some club is hoarding him. Yet I am told the river boats have others like him. The dinner he set before me I shall not rhapsodize over, though I might an I would. Let others discover the excellent cuisine of the "Isleton" and the rest of the river boats for themselves.

For the ladies there was the music of a piano player with copious records of the classic and ragtime muses, for the men of us the after-dinner cigar on deck to soothe digestion. Not that all the ladies stayed within; I noted a couple or two spooning under the stars. We have passed Angel Island and Point Richmond and our busy wheel is churning the waters of San Pablo Bay. Yonder are the lights of Vallejo Junction. Soon we will be gliding through the Strait past Port Costa and into lazy Suisun Bay. It is getting cold and the warmth of the smoking room is alluring. The youthful mixologist is filling a few orders and over a cigar and a social glass men are talking of the price of potatoes and asparagus, of the value of delta lands and Stockton real estate, and spinning yarns, as they always do in the smoking rooms of steamers.

If I had not been luxuriously drowsy I might have seen the "Isleton" stop at Martinez and Antioch to unload and load freight. But I went to bed, to one of the cosiest beds I have ever lain in, certainly to the cosiest I have ever had on ship board. It was not a berth but a real bed, wide and long enough for perfect comfort, with a bright electric light alongside which made it pleasant to read for a few minutes before dropping off to sleep. Still more pleasant it was when a knock came at my door and the perfect waiter entered, bearing a tray of tempting fruit. Where except on the Stockton river boats will you receive such an unexpected attention? With a breath of clean cold air blowing into the room from the open window I lay between spotless linen that night and slept the sleep of the just or at any rate, the sleep of the healthy and comfortable.

In the morning I was up betimes and after munching a rosy apple—blessings on that perfect waiter!—I dressed and went out on deck where the sun was warming the brisk air of early morning. We were pounding along the San Joaquin river, past farms and farm-houses that spelled prosperity. Several times we drew inshore and discharged freight at the wharfs. Piled there in enormous numbers I saw sacks of potatoes and onions destined to be carried to San Francisco markets when the next steamer went down. I have never seen more appetizing potatoes and onions than those which are raised in the San Joaquin delta region. One cannot watch the loading and unloading of freight on the San Joaquin without being impressed with the advantage of the method whereby cartage is cut out and boat and car meet directly. At the smaller stations, of course, there are no cars; the farmer hauls his crop to his own wharf and awaits the coming of the steamer.

Beautiful indeed are the scenes along the San Joaquin River. It is a fairyland which the steamer traverses. The banks of the rivers are concealed beneath dense growths of willows and a profusion of vines which give the watercourse a most picturesque setting. Incidentally, I have been told, these luxuriant growths protect the levees from the action of the water, holding them in place even when the river is rushing swiftly with an overplus of waters.

As the "Isleton" nears the Stockton Channel the river takes on a livelier appearance. There are more farms and dwelling places. There are children in row boats enjoying the morning sunshine, the boys with bare feet and bare heads, scornful of freckles, the girls well shod and with broad straw hats to protect their complexions. How sweet is the sound of youthful laughter coming over the water! Like a black arrow skimming the river a motor boat shoots by with loud noise, the driver barely visible. What a delicious mode of travel a motor boat must be! No fear of breaking a speeding ordinance disturbs the mind of the boatsman. The waters are his and there is no craft on the river which can show him a wake.

Now we are in Stockton Channel, the waterway two and one-half miles long, which connects the river with the city of Stockton. Here land and water are in closer touch. I look out over the fields with their rich loamy soil of decayed tules and watch the blue heron stalking stiff-legged through the furrows. What a solemn stately bird he is! The farmer is in two minds about him. It is true he eats the pestilent gophers, but he also eats the grain. However, as he eats more gophers than grain the farmer usually looks upon him with favor. Much the blue heron cares what the farmer thinks as he soars through the air, for all the world like Monsieur Paulhan or Mr. Curtiss.

As we near the city of Stockton the "Isleton" passes innumerable barges, schooners, tugs and other crafts, the "mosquito fleet" of the river. The channel is lined with flour mills, lumber yards, shipyards, warehouses and coal bunkers, all showing signs of prosperous activity. We are nearing the head of navigation and the traffic of a busy city is beginning to be in evidence. The skyline of Stockton shows itself, with the mission roof of the new hotel in the foreground. Finally we nose past other river steamers, barges, tugs, and slide up to the pier. The engines rest, the sternwheel beats the water with fainter and fainter blows, the gangplank is out and our pleasant overnight trip has come to an end. We have been through part of the California Netherlands and have traversed them as comfortably as one could wish to.

Of course the "Isleton" is not the only steamer on which you may make the trip from San Francisco to Stockton or from Stockton to San Francisco. There are other steamers, belonging to two rival lines whose competition is so keen for freight and passenger business that the service and the comforts are kept up to the highest point of efficiency. I understand that travel on all the Stockton boats is as pleasant as it is on the "Isleton."

Why this river trip is not more popular I do not understand. The volume of passenger travel is respectable, but nothing more. How anybody who has been forced to make that dreary trip to Stockton by railroad should hesitate before trying the overnight river service is a mystery to me—now. I admit that it is only recently that I have discovered the Stockton boats. But having discovered them, I am devoted to them, enthusiastic about them, and in the good old summertime I am going to make a few little trips to which I look forward with delight.

It will be possible then to step from the gangplank to the door of the fine new hotel, The Stockton, without worrying about car, cab or hotel bus. By that time, I venture to predict, Stockton will be a favorite rendezvous for week-end parties looking for a novelty. The attraction of Don Porter's cuisine, of the sunkissed pergola on the roof and of the music which Edgar Bayliss will dispense will be drawing more and more city folks to the new Stockton and the two lines of river boats will be carrying them back and forth.

Stockton

By Robert McTavish

WE have all heard the story of how Senator Stanford wanted to build the Southern Pacific railroad depot in the center of Stockton and how, when the citizens refused him permission, he declared: "I will make the grass grow in the streets of your town."

That threat led to the placing on the map of Lathrop, named after Senator Stanford's wife. The grass has never grown in the streets of Stockton, but there has been nothing much except grass and weeds at Lathrop for many years. It never began to be a rival of Stockton as a city and its importance as a railroad station has long since been taken away by Tracy.

Reckoned by years it is not so long ago that Senator Stanford made his historic though futile threat; reckoned by the progress of Stockton, the town which he would have liked to wipe out, it seems centuries ago. The Southern Pacific depot which the citizens of Stockton compelled Senator Stanford to build outside the town is within ten minutes' ride of the center of Stockton's business activity today. The little town which protested against the invasion of its streets by steam railroads has grown to a city of more than 30,000 inhabitants. Where one railroad wanted to blot it from the map, three are glad now to serve it with main line trains.

There is reason for the progress of Stockton; reason in its geographical situation, its climatic advantages and the character of the men who through several generations have reared it from a village to a city and are still engaged in pushing it to the front among the cities of California. Situated at the head of navigation of the San Joaquin River, it is the gateway to a country of unrivaled productiveness, a country richer than the valley of the Nile, a country wherein may be found all the products of temperate and semi-tropical countries. Beyond this valley lies a great mining and lumbering region as well as the Yosemite Valley, the Mecca for nature-loving tourists from all over the world. Placed near the only convenient passes through the Coast Range, Stockton has been destined for great commercial prosperity because the products of the rich country behind her and the travel for all that country must pass through Stockton on the way to San Francisco and tidewater.

Climatically Stockton is splendidly equipped. West winds temper the cold of winter while sea breezes moderate the heat of summer and in both winter and summer the nights are cool and comfortable. Normal mean temperature for the city rises from 46 in January to 72 in July and August and sinks to 47 in December, giving an average of 60 for the year. This is the climate of all-the-year flowers, of oranges and cherries, of grapes and pears and figs and prunes, of tropic palms and hardy grains. It is the weather which the storm-harassed and heat-driven people of the East come to California to find and which they have persisted in finding, almost exclusively, in Southern California.

There are reasons for that. Southern California has long been noted for the excellence of its big hotels. Northern California has only recently been devoting its attention to the service of luxurious taste. Where nature has done so much, man's art and artifice are only beginning to second her. That is not so true of Stockton as it is of many other cities in the north, for Stockton has been unusually progressive for many years. The reason is found in the character of her sons and daughters, and that is the third of the three reasons which we have given for the progress of Stockton.

Alert, wide-awake, anxious to improve their city, the citizens of Stockton nevertheless put up for many years with miserable hotel accommodations. Commercial travelers dreaded to stay there overnight. Sacramento, Stockton's nearest rival, used to point with derision to this defect of the San Joaquin city. But the men of Stockton, busy with other things, probably had not time to get around to this matter. Now they have found time and the result is that Stockton may now invite tourist trade, confident that she can take care of it fully as well as the favorite millionaire haunts of Southern California.

Happy is that city which has land and water connection with its neighbors; then may it resist the exactions of its transportation companies by playing the land service against the rail service and vice versa. That is what Stockton has been able to do for many years. The keen competition of two transportation companies that run boats to and from the city keeps water rates at a healthy figure and while railway rates are even now unsatisfactory they are much improved since the days when the attitude of the single railroad tapping the city was epitomized in the threat of Senator Stanford. There are three railroads now, which makes a great deal of difference.

With three railroads and two lines of steamers connecting the city with the country about her and with a firstclass hotel conducted by one of the most successful hotel managers of the country, Stockton is prepared to enter upon a new era of civic distinction. That is no commonplace, no meaningless assertion. It is recognized as the truth by the wisest of Stockton's citizens and admitted by all outsiders whose business or social connections enable them to study the city from close range.

But easy transportation and a comfortable hotel do not make a city great. There are many other things which must be attended to. Stockton is aware of this. The streets of this city are splendidly paved and she has two street car systems, both lines using the most modern equipment. One of these lines gives an interurban service which is being gradually extended to Sacramento and down the great San Joaquin Valley. Already it taps a country of wonderful richness. Yet it is not so long since Stockton had an indifferent car service. Neither is it so long ago that her old-fashioned dwelling places were regarded as good enough for families which had prospered mightily through many years. Today they are replaced by artisically constructed residences constructed without regard to cost. Antiquated and unsightly business buildings have given way to modern and handsome structures. The Y. M. C. A. Building, recently completed, cost $75,000 and it only took three weeks to raise the money. The Elks Club cost about $150,000 and is free from debt. No need to mention how the half million dollars needed for the construction of the new hotel was obtained in panicky times by popular subscription and bonding. Stockton is a city of unusual individual wealth and her citizens are in a position to carry out swiftly any financial project which appeals to their business sense, their esthetic taste or their civic pride. The people of Stockton responded heartily when an election was held to vote bonds for the improvement of San Joaquin Valley roads. As a result $1,890,000 are to be expended in this worthy undertaking.

While Stockton is sensibly proud of her own progress, she is too wise to forget that she cannot go forward without the co-operation of the rest of San Joaquin County. Therein has been the secret of much of her success. Stockton pulls with the county, not against it, as so many cities are doing in other counties. Stockton feels herself just as vitally interested in the good roads which are to be built throughout the county with her assistance as she does in her own streets for which she alone must carry the burden. She is doing everything in her power to further the formation of a new irrigation district in the southern part of the county at a cost of $2,000,000. While she is proud of her own rapid growth in population, she is equally or almost equally elated over the fact that the number of farms in the county has increased from 1900 on 1890 to over 5,000 in 1909. After all Stockton is only showing her sterling common sense, for what is a city without a helping country behind it?

Of all the country that is tributary to Stockton the most interesting is the delta region composed of the islands of the San Joaquin. By the uninitiated the islands of the San Joaquin would naturally be imagined to be little islands like, let us say, Goat Island or Angel or Alcatraz in San Francisco Bay. They are nothing of the kind. They are immense tracts of land containing thousands of acres of the richest land in the State under intensive cultivation. To own an island in the San Joaquin delta is to be a favored son of fortune and the islanders are actually numbered among the wealthiest citizens of Stockton. They are gentlemen farmers with automobiles and splendid residences in the fashionable home district of Stockton and they have only one worry —the fear of inundation. Floods have from time to time worked havoc with their crops, covering their farms with water which remains for a year or more. Just as the overflowing Nile enriches the soil of Egypt, so the floods of the San Joaquin River impregnate the island principalities of the gentlemen farmers with the seeds of more abundant crops for the future. Diverting canals constructed at great cost are gradually raising a barrier against the dangers of floods to the delta lands and the system by which the lands are farmed really raises the burden of worry from the shoulders of the gentlemen farmers, placing it upon their tenants. The fight against floods is waged on an enormous scale and is really one of the most picturesque activities of contemporary life in San Joaquin County. When an island like Roberts Island which is 250,000 acres in extent, becomes inundated it is really a herculean task to fight the waters. At the present time Mr. Macdonal Douglass who owns 10,000 acres of rich land on this island, is engaged in the construction of a diverting canal which will save his lands from future floods while a fine system of irrigation will insure the constant fructification of the soil. Not all the island owners of San Joaquin are as progressive as Douglass, but they are gradually falling in line with the suggestions of the engineers who have studied the problem of floods.

One of the most picturesque of the island owners is George Shima, the Japanese "potato king." Shima's word is law in matters pertaining to the vegetables which he grows and his prices are the market prices. Distinguished by square dealing, he has made for himself a place that is unique in the life of San Joaquin County. Shima is not a gentleman farmer; he prefers to superintend his dividend-paying business directly. While more favored island owners are taking their ease in the Yosemite Club he is busily engaged among the brokers of the levee or on his island farm.

It is interesting, inspiring, to meet in Stockton the men who are building their city and county into a greater and more prosperous structure. Real estate men, architects, builders, engineers, farmers, orchardists, vineyardists, manufacturers, railroad and shipping men, brokers, bankers, insurance men, these are but some of the many who are bending every energy to make Stockton a greater city. All of these and many others, including, in a place of honor lawyers and other professional men, lent their aid to the new hotel project when it was first bruited and they are equally prepared to contribute time, brains and money to any other enterprise which they consider advantageous for the future of their municipality.

Has Stockton a great future? Ask any citizen of the city who keeps abreast of the times—and there are few who do not—and he will regard you with surprise. That question is deemed superfluous; an answer, so much breath wasted. You will not receive a direct answer to the bromidic interrogation, but if you keep your eyes and your ears open, a single Stocktonite, in the course of a morning, will supply you with practical demonstration of his belief. New building operations, the opening of new tracts of land, the improvement of streets and sewers, the investment of money in improvement bonds for city as well as county—these are but a few of the matters which engage the everyday thoughts of a Stockton business man. It is no city for drones or doubters, sceptics or lack-faiths. The few men who had not the courage or the prescience to subscribe money for the building of the new hotel have bitterly regretted their refusal ever since. Today they are pointed out on the streets of Stockton; they are not popular at the clubs; they are not as prosperous in business as of yore. An unorganized, undirected, uninspired boycott has dealt them a stinging rebuke for their deficiency in civic spirit.

Is there not a great deal that we of San Francisco can learn from the almost unanimous public spirit of Stockton? Would it not be well if we caught the contagion of their abounding enthusiasm, their happy good nature, their confidence in the future, their man-to-man friendliness and their active contempt for the silurian and the cave-dweller? Everybody who knows San Francisco realizes with a sense of shame how backward she is in many of those big qualities which are regarded as distinctively metropolitan. Let us go to Stockton and learn some of them. Let us visit our littler sister by the San Joaquin and take counsel of her good qualities. Let us not look upon her, with snobbish city superiority, as our country relation, for she is nothing of the kind. The culture which we admire she has; the luxuries which we demand she enjoys; the spirit which we fondly call metropolitan she can teach us.

Now that she has a firstclass hot. a hotel which would do credit to San Francisco or any large city, we can go to her and stay awhile without missing any of those comforts about which we affect to be so finicky. Let us stay long enough to get acquainted and then go back often to keep up the friendship. We need her and she needs us. Let us acknowledge this to each other and set out to co-operate in prosperity. If there were no San Francisco, Stockton would suffer; if there were no Stockton and no San Joaquin Valley behind her, God help San Francisco. She is easily reached by rail and reached with the greatest comfort of river travel by steamboat. In the name of sociability and commonsense business acumen, let us see a little more of Stockton from this time forward.

A CAR OF THE CENTRAL TRACTION COMPANY

Central California Traction Company

Besides giving Stockton a splendid urban street car service the Central California Traction Company taps a suburban country which is one of the richest and most prosperous in California. Its up-to-date trolley cars, equipped with every modern convenience, take care of the ever-increasing traffic of the farm and orchard country outside of Stockton, rendering increasingly easy of access some of the most fertile acreage of San Joaquin County.

One of the best tests of the progressiveness of a community is the character of its traction facilities. Where civic spirit is sluggish and civic ideas behind the times, transportation facilities are pretty apt to be inadequate; but when a city is being carried along on the tide of general improvement, insufficient car service will not be tolerated. Men and women demand the right of going from place to place with rapidity and comfort and their demands are sure to be satisfied. Stockton is such a community. Its citizens are awake to the advantages of up-to-date business methods; hence they are well served by the directors of their transportation facilities. The Central California Traction Company serves them particularly well.

Mr. Alden Anderson, a banker whose name is respected from one end of the State to the other, is the president of the Central California Traction Company. On the board of directors are a number of prominent men whose business methods are heartily in accord with those of Stockton's chief progressives. The company is doing a great work for Stockton and San Joaquin County and it has mapped out a comprehensive scheme of betterments which will soon make it still more useful.

Stockton's Famous Picture

By Arthur L. Levinsky

ON the wall of the "Hoffman Cafe," conducted by William H. Newman, in the Yo Semite Building, in Stockton, there hangs a large picture which has become historical, and in but a few years will be most valuable. It represents a ballroom where many are dancing, some in conversation, and others are gazing upon the festive scene.

An eastern artist came to Stockton many years ago and by some means obtained photographs of several of the leading members of the Yo Semite Club. He then used the photographs as the heads of the various gentlemen in the ballroom scene—no photographs being taken of ladies. Those whose pictures appear in the scene are the following:

Thomas Cunningham, better known as "Tom" Cunningham who, for approximately twenty-five years, was continuously Sheriff of San Joaquin County, during which time he made an international reputation as an honest, fearless officer, and a famous detective. Notwithstanding the fact that during the many years that he was in office he captured, unaided, many of the most desperate men in the United States and Europe, he never fired a shot;

Hon. S. D. Woods, the well known lawyer, (now of San Francisco), who was elected to Congress;

Ralph P. Lane, the well known grain and insurance man;

John Garwood who has now retired from business;

Hon. James H. Budd who at that time was an ex-member of Congress and who, thereafter, became the Governor of this State;

J. M. Welsh, who was Mayor of the City of Stockton, and who at that time was the President and Manager of the Stockton Milling Company, and President of the San Joaquin Valley Bank;

Hon. James A. Louttit, ex-member of Congress, and prominent attorney;

H. E. Baggs, who was thereafter Mayor of Stockton;

Dr. S. N. Cross, the well known physician;

Frank P. Adams, then connected with The Stockton Gas and Electric Company, and who now represents "Uncle Sam" in South American affairs;

P. A. Buell who was the President and Manager of P. A. Buell & Company, the large lumber dealers, and who was the original "Booster" for the City of Stockton and San Joaquin County;

Hon. R. C. Sargent who was generally known as "Ross" Sargent, a millionaire land owner of San Joaquin County;

George E. Catts, formerly Mayor of Stockton and now President of the Stockton Savings Bank;

Frank D. Cobb, a member of and manager for Hale & Co.;

Dr. Fred P. Clark, now Superintendent of the State Hospital at Stockton;

George E. Wilhoit, the well known real estate man and capitalist;

Arthur L. Levinsky who is still practicing law at Stockton because he cannot get away;

E. C. Harlow, at that time an assistant manager with the H. C. Shaw Company;

E. L. Colnon, the then editor of "The Mail" and afterwards president of the State Board of Harbor Commissioners;

Colonel George B. Sperry, then president of the Sperry Flour Mills.

Of the foregoing Cunningham, Budd, Welsh, Louttit, Buell, Sargent, Harlow and Colnon have passed unto the Great Beyond.

In the picture Ross Sargent stands in the foreground, talking to a young lady, while two or three cards are dropping from his pocket. He was a remarkable man—one of California's Pioneers—a man who never played a card, but a great lover of horses. After the picture had been hanging for some time he approached the owner and said: "Well, I guess you boys have had a good deal of fun with this picture, and I am glad to know it, and you can keep it hanging forever, but get someone to cut those cards out, because you know, I never played one in my life."

Illustrative of his character is this fact: He was a member of the firm of Sargent Brothers which comprised four brothers who had been associated in business as farmers and stock raisers since 1850, and who trusted implicitly in one another, each drawing what money he wanted, and buying what he wanted for his own individual use, but keeping no account. A few years before the dissolution of the co-partnership, Mr. Sargent had his attorney prepare a document which was signed by each member of the firm, and which in substance stated that each one, during all of these years, had done as he pleased, spent what he wanted, used what he wanted, and that no account had been kept and no charge made against any individual member of the firm and that in the event of the death of any member of the firm, prior to the dissolution of partnership, it was mutually contracted and agreed that each member was the owner of an undivided one-fourth interest in all the assets, without deducting any moneys that might have been drawn. Some three years later the firm was dissolved and all the members are now dead.

It is strange, but nevertheless true, of those who have passed from this earthly sphere, that they took a prominent part not only in the history of California, but also in making possible the present progressive condition of affairs in Stockton.

The group in the picture were friends—not mere acquaintances—for each possessed for the others genuine affection and whatever successes they had made in life were to a great degree attributable to the manner in which each would work for the others. The time will come when few will be left of that "Old Guard." The picture being really a work of art, original and unique, attracts the attention of the stranger and many are the questions asked regarding it, and of those who compose it. May it be hoped that when the last thereof shall have climbed the "Golden Stairway," that he may meet all who have preceded him, and there may they again continue the friendships which made their lives happy and distinguished.

The Patten of the Potato World

NINETEEN years ago a Japanese who had been laboring in the potato fields of the San Joaquin for two years, decided that he would plant and harvest a crop of his own. His crop was so insignificant that the big buyers would not bother about it. It took him four days of traveling on foot to find a man who would take it off his hands.

Today that Japanese has nearly five thousand acres of potatoes under cultivation. His crop averages about 700,000 sacks. He has his potato headquarters on Middle River, a branch of the San Joaquin with subsidiary stations at various other points; he has offices in Stockton and Sacramento; owns a $30,000 home in College avenue, Berkeley; and leases a charming summer place in Ocean Park, Los Angeles.

The Japanese who has accomplished so much in two decades is George Shima, the Patten of the potato world.

Twenty-one years ago George Shima landed in San Francisco, one of a number of Japanese laborers. He had been without educational advantages, unlike many of the Japanese who come to this country in pursuit of fortune, but he had a native talent for business, a mind capable of absorbing knowledge from experience, and a taste for what was best in life. It was many years before he could prove his ability and indulge his tastes, but finally he arrived. Hard work, fair dealing and unremitting attention to his own affairs explain in part his wonderful success.

The entire potato production of this State amounts to about 2,500,000 sacks annually and nearly one-third of this output is controlled by Shima. The rest of the output is divided among many growers and as Shima is marketing agent for many of these, his supremacy in the potato field is unquestioned. The result is that Shima makes the price of potatoes.

Shima is an expert in the cultivation of tubers. His seed is selected from the finest stock. Every potato planted must be of an exact size, on the theory that like produces like. He employs a weather expert who figures out to within five days the first arrival of frost. With this information in advance Shima plants his acreage with potatoes which will attain a certain size before the frost comes. Another axiom of Shima's is that old ground cannot produce good potatoes, because this vegetable absorbs a great deal of the fertilizing ingredients in the ground. So he has tied up lands for many years to come. Recently he signed contracts to take over 4,000 acres of land in the Roosevelt tract near Stockton in the years 1911 and 1912. The Rindge Estate is now bringing this tract under irrigation for his use.

Doing business without written contracts Shima has never had any trouble about the carrying out of a contract. His employes are the best cared for in the potato country and there are nearly one thousand of them. Personally Shima is a delightful personality with unusual occidental cultivation. English poetry is one of the delights of his leisure. Among other things he is president of the Japanese Society of California.

The I X L Clothing Store

THE I X L Clothing Co., very favorably known in the City of Stockton and all the adjoing counties as The I X L, was founded more than thirty years ago.

After being conducted very successfully on the corner of Main and El Dorado streets for 23 years, the volume of the business grew to such an extent that larger quarters were an absolute necessity. The opportunity presented itself of obtaining a very desirable location in the new $500,000 Hotel Building on Weber avenue and Hunter street and the management decided to lease a large portion of the ground floor, 60 feet frontage with a depth of 100 feet and a basement of the same dimensions.

tistic trims, but also because of the handsome paneling, all carried out in solid mahagony. The interior of the store is metropolitan in every respect. There is no clothing house in the country which can boast of more perfect time and labor saving arrangements than The I X L. Most of the merchandise, clothing, hats and furnishings good are carried in dust proof floor and wall cases. On top of the shelves, along three sides of the store, goods are displayed in glass front shadow boxes, a unique and effective plan of showing merchandise. The juvenile department is the admiration of everybody who has seen it. It is located in the rear of the store, and while it seems to be a separate room, is actually a part of the store. Before entering into this department the onlooker sees a display of goods in cases and upon entering he beholds a room which has more the appearance of a cozy parlor than a salesroom, with tables and plenty of chairs for the convenience of the public. The clothing is kept in shelves with glass doors, the furnishings in stock boxes.

The success and great growth of The I X L, according to the statement of Mr. Steinhart, is largely due to the unalterable policy of the house of honest dealings, dependable merchandise and one price to all. No misrepresentation is permitted and claims are adjusted to the entire satisfaction of the customer. The I X L adopted the one price system at the time of its arrival in the city, and has adhered to this principle with a rigid steadfastness; in fact it was this concern which inaugurated this system in the City of Stockton.

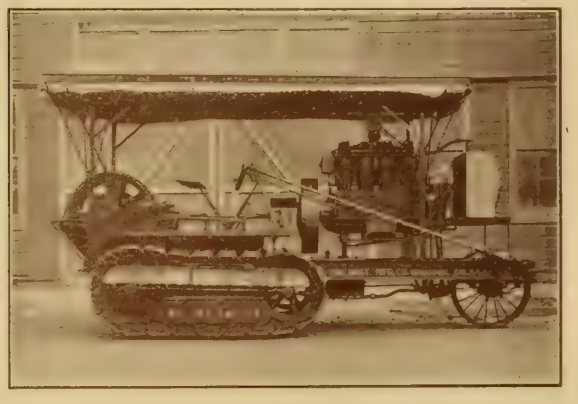
Logan, Stockton's Photographer

With but a few trifling exceptions the photographs used in this Stockton edition of Town Talk were made by Charles W. Logan. The name of Logan is a familiar one all over the San Joaquin Valley and the photographer himself is one of the best known men in the City of Stockton. In his gallery in S. San Joaquin street all the men, women and children of Stockton who have ever figured with any degree of prominence in the social, business, professional or political life of the city have sat to the Logan camera. In the filing cabinets of his inner rooms is an invaluable collection of negatives dating back many years and illustrating the progress of photography and the progress of Stockton and the San Joaquin Valley at one and the same time. Logan is not merely a photographer of men, women and children. He has leveled his camera at every building, every street scene, every point of vantage in the city and there is not a spot of beauty or importance in the county which he has not photographed. On this account Logan's gallery is the constant resort of newspapermen and other writers. No matter what you may wish to describe relating to San Joaquin County you can illustrate it from the negatives in Logan's collection. Logan is not merely a painstaking but an artistic photographer. His work is of the best, by whatever standard measured. It may be judged in many of its phases by the pictures published in these pages. But our snapshots are the work, not of Logan, but of an amateur!

Manufacturing in California

FEW people there are who have not seen, or at least heard of the many wonders and natural resources of California, and especially those of San Joaquin County, but the story of its manufacturing industry and inventive genius has seldom been narrated and is known to comparatively a few. Nevertheless, these industries have kept pace; yes, more than kept pace, they have been and are the prime factors in the development of this great country, and are surely worthy of mention, even if they were not so truly interesting.



HOLT CATERPILLAR TRACTION ENGINE, "THE REAL SUCCESSOR TO THE HORSE."

FREIGHTING ON THE MOJAVE DESERT.

WHERE THE CATERPILLAR TAKES THE PLACE OF TWENTY-SIX HORSES.

This writing is not so much of the general manufacturing industry of our great State, or Stockton in particular, as it is of some wonderful machinery that is being built in that city. Wonderful not only in the way it is built, but in its ideas which are beyond the common comprehension.

A Wagon Without Wheels, and More—

A Power Wagon without Wheels, that will not only propel itself over any kind of roads in any kind of weather, but that will do the work of thirty horses as well. A Power Wagon that will do any work that horses will do; will do it faster, and most important of all, will do it for one-half the cost. "Can it be possible," one will say. It is possible, and what is more, is thoroughly practical.

This machine, which is made by The Holt Mfg. Co., in Stockton, and is termed the "Caterpillar Traction Engine," was invented by Mr. Benj. Holt. The idea for a Traction Engine of this character was first conceived by Mr. Holt, something more than six years ago, and was brought about by the demand for a satisfactory and cheaper power for doing various kinds of hauling work. It is now six years since Mr. Holt built his first "Caterpillar" and proved his principle to be correct. Ever since that time, with the aid of a corps of competent engineers he has been working out, testing and perfecting the Caterpillar, until now it has been proven beyond a doubt that it is the cheapest and most satisfactory motive power ever devised. To say this machine is wonderful cannot really express the thought, and it can certainly be classed as one of the greatest inventions of the age. Mr. Miles C. Moore, Ex-Governor of Washington, exclaimed on first seeing the Caterpillar in operation: "Lincoln emancipated the Slave; Edison emancipated the Mule; and Benj. Holt emancipates the Horse." That is a forceful statement, but nevertheless true, and it can well be said that the invention has been for the common good.

The Caterpillar Traction Engine has been on the market about a year and one-half, and ever since the first one was sold, this great factory has been running to capacity, and even then has been unable to supply the demand. The saying "A trial will convince" has certainly proven true with reference to the Caterpillar, as every one who has used one of them, and has had more work than one could handle, has duplicated his order. For instance, the City of Los Angeles is using twenty-eight complete Caterpillar Freighting Outfits; the Union

PLOWING SCENE IN THE VALLEY

Oil Company is using six; the Crocker-Huffman Land and Water Co., and also the Sharon Estate, are each using three Caterpillar Engines and Plowing Outfits. These are a few of many instances, and only go to show the real value of the invention.

Steam Traction Engines of the Wheel type, for both freighting and agricultural purposes have been manufactured by The Holt Manufacturing Company for many years. They have played no small part in the great development of the country and much credit is due them. They are used extensively throughout the Pacific Coast and have proven great money savers to the owners. The accompanying photographs show these machines in operation under different conditions, doing various kinds of work, and their value cannot be over-estimated.

The invention of the Combined Harvester by Mr. Benj. Holt, in the early eighties completely revolutionized the harvesting of the immense crops raised in the West, and ever since that time The Holt Mfg. Co. have been building these machines for both Horse and Steam work. Today Holt Combined Harvesters harvest fully two-thirds of all the grain raised on the Pacific Coast. Their output in this line for this season will be enormous, and the machines they are turning out are a marvel of beauty and simplicity.

Besides the manufacture of these wonderful machines that have played such a great part in the building up of the country, The Holt Mfg. Co. are manufacturing Plows, Scrapers, Wagon Wheels, etc. They also conduct a general jobbing business and carry one of the largest stocks of hardware, Iron and Steel, on the coast. Being situated in Stockton, their facilities for making prompt deliveries on goods of this character could not be better. Three transcontinental railroads, a superb system of natural waterways, and many interurban railroads handle the business and help make Stockton the great city it is, and even greater city it is to be.

A factory of the proportions of The Holt Mfg. Co., and one that has done so much for the betterment of conditions, surely deserves some special mention. It is interesting to note that The Holt Mfg. Co. is not a new institution, but a company founded in the early eighties, by men who are workers, men of genius, and men whose motto is "A square deal to every one." The beginning of this company and its rapid growth from that time until the present day has been phenomenal, yet it is only reasonable that any company doing so much good for a community and doing so much toward the building up of the country in general, should prosper. They have prospered, yes, but all gains they have made have been invested in building up and increasing the capacity of their great plant, which enables them to turn out more machinery and a better product. The Holt Mfg. Co. today covers about sixteen acres of ground, and has in its employ four hundred men. It is spending many thousand dollars each month in Stockton, and is one of the greatest assets of that city.

The management of the plant is still under the personal supervision of Mr. Benj. Holt, its President, who is constantly at the factory overseeing the work. Mr. Holt is ably assisted in this work by Messrs. C. Parker Holt and Ben C. Holt, Vice-Presidents, Mr. C. A. Bachelder, Treasurer, and Mr. R. S. Springer, Secretary. These young men are all very enthusiastic in their work and are making for The Holt Manufacturing Company, and Stockton, a name that will be known the world over.

Buhach

THE City of Stockton is well advertised as a city of industrial plants. It is also famed throughout the country as the place where Buhach is made.

Buhach is pronounced as though written Bu-Hack. Moreover it is pronounced by grateful users over the entire country as the most satisfactory insecticide on the market.

A peculiar thing about Buhach is that while it causes instant death to all insect life, it is absolutely harmless to man, beast and fowl. This is because the volatile oil in Buhach acts like fire upon the breathing apparatus of insects.

It is interesting to note that Buhach is a coined word, patented by the Government, and is the sole property of the Buhach Producing and Manufacturing Company. About three decades ago, when they were figuring to put this product on the market, the word Buha, meaning flea in the Dalmatian language, was written in large letters, in heavy ink, on a piece of paper. A fly straggled across it and made blots which suggested the termination, and the word was written Buhach. Students of philology should find this legend valuable because the word Buhach is now in the Century and Standard dictionaries, and is, therefore, incorporated into the English language. This one point should go to prove how universal is the use of Buhach, since it has become a household word throughout the country. Down in Argentine an enterprising South American chap has put an insecticide on the market and calls it BUFACH, using the same size tins and the same style labels, thus hoping to delude the people who do not perceive the deception.

Buhach is a clean dry powder. As for origin, it is made solely and entirely from a flower which botanists know as Pyrethrum Cinerariae Folium. The word Pyrethrum is derived from a Greek word meaning fire. The plant is raised on the Buhach Plantation, near Atwater, in this State. The flower looks not unlike the marguerite, and it is a beautiful sight to see acres and acres in bloom during the spring time. "At the psychological moment" these blossoms are cut by hand and shipped to the factory at Stockton. Here they are ground between old fashioned mill stones and made into Buhach. There is nothing added to make bulk and Buhach is absolutely free from any adulteration. It is no secret that other insecticides are made up of various ingredients, chief of which are Hungarian Daisy, shumac, and injurious acids mixed with talc as a base. Such mixtures are positively injurious to human beings. As has been pointed out, nothing enters into the composition of Buhach other than the blossom of the Pyrethrum flower. That is why Buhach costs more than other insect powders, but the person who buys a pound of Buhach gets one pound of real insect powder.

Buhach is invaluable for getting rid of flies, fleas, ants, mosquitos, bedbugs and all other insects. Each package of Buhach has full directions for its use. It is sold by druggists and grocers everywhere. There are many imitations upon the market and the public is warned to look for the Trade Mark so as to get the genuine article. Buhach is manufactured only by the Buhach Producing and Manufacturing Company of Stockton, California, of which Mr. Joseph F. Peters is president and general manager.

Stockton Mineral Baths

There is no better known resort in or around Stockton than the mineral baths conducted by William J. McCallum. Within easy reach of the city by street car service and by a good road which can be quickly traversed by an automobile, the baths are the resort of all who enjoy a swim, desire the hot mineral water for medicinal treatment or appreciate a good dinner. Genial "Billy" McCallum is renowned for his excellent cuisine and his dining rooms are always crowded by the fastidious. On Sundays and holidays the baths are thronged by young and old.

Heterodox Views of Governor Hughes

As a reformer Governor Hughes of New York is unique inasmuch as he does not believe we are half so bad as we are painted by the muckraking magazines. A student of conditions in politics and in business, his emotions are not stirred by the vehement insistence with which we are regularly admonished by the rabble-rousers of magazinedom to take up arms against the evils that menace us as a free people. Mushroom philosophers of the Irwin and Steffens type may echo for us the wails of the tenements, the moans of the submerged tenth and the cries of the downtrodden victims of the "interests," but Governor Hughes, no mean reformer himself, as eager as anybody to uplift and purify, is not to be persuaded that God is not in his heaven. "We have had recent examples of breaches of trust, it is true," says Governor Hughes, "but now we are more honorable today in our standards of business and public life than ever before in the history of the country." The exceptional man who is more familiar with the history of his country than with the turbid trash that purports to be a record of current events knows that Governor Hughes has spoken the truth. He knows there has been vast improvement in the morals and practices of the American people since the days of President Grant. But the average citizen to whom the muckraking magazines appeal is not to be expected to give credence to Governor Hughes's dictum. Good, easy and unsophisticated man, whatever he sees in print is to him something in the nature of holy writ. It is much easier for him to believe that the times are out of joint and that our government and all big business interests are in the hands of rogues than that men of average respectability are from sordid motives taking advantage of the morbid state of the public mind by deliberately slandering their country.

Our Transportation Problem

Occasionally the Examiner in a moment of abstraction inadvertently apprises its readers of something that would really be to their advantage. As for instance when speaking of the advisability of tunneling Twin Peaks it suggested that San Francisco is in need of "a considerable extension of its street railroad service." It goes without saying that the editor's intellectuals were not alert when he lapsed into this reverie on the inadequacy of our street railroad facilities. As was the case with the divine Homer the editor of the Examiner is at brief intervals the victim of brain-fag. Assuredly our transportation facilities are inadequate, but in view of the reason why it is not likely that the Examiner would deliberately and with premeditation discuss the matter above a whisper. To none of its policies is the Examiner more passionately devoted than that of inducing hostility to public service corporations. By the devices that give color to this policy Mr. Hearst propagates the delusion of his instinctive abhorrence of concentrated wealth. In pursuance of this policy he preaches the paramount advantage of municipal ownership, the principle of which, he tells us, is the catholicon we must adopt if we would rid ourselves of everything that enervates the body politic. Now of course it is obvious even to the most feeble minded that if we must wait for municipal ownership to provide us with ample transportation facilities it would be sheer lunacy for any of us to harbor the expectation of living long enough to witness the darling consummation. Considering the size of the bonded debt which we have shouldered with becoming enthusiasm it would certainly be somewhat irrational to indulge the hope that transportation service may meet the demand through the medium of municipal ownership within the lifetime of any infant in arms. Our situation would indeed be pathetic were we to be compelled to look to Mr. Hearst's pet hobby for relief. The hope that we prefer to indulge is that the obsession which Mr. Hearst brought upon the people will relax in the near future and that the municipality will consider it the part of wisdom to provide for its necessities before indulging in the luxury of experiment. Meanwhile there is nothing else to do but to cultivate patience. Having given capital a scare we must wait till it recovers from its fright. In time, perhaps, we shall apprehend the folly of intimidating vulgar wealth and retarding the development of the city. Perhaps in the next lucid interval we shall perceive that it is more to our advantage to encourage railroad building than to point with pride to the streets that we own and that cannot be used without our permission. It is of course extremely painful to some of us to give bloated bondholders opportunities to swell their swollen fortunes, but unfortunately unless we gratify their unholy passion they will content themselves with cutting coupons.

Where Experience Counts

In the United States Senate seniority in the matter of service counts far more than individual ability. For which reason it is to be hoped that Senator Frank Flint will be a candidate for re-election. The Senator who does more than familiarize himself with the duties of his office during his first term is an exception to an almost invariable rule. As much as in the practice of any profession or in the management of any business, training, experience and long familiarity with an infinity of detail tell in the Senate of the United States, and therefore the value of a Senator to his State and to the nation is in proportion to the length of his service. This is a fact that has yet to penetrate the intellectuals of the people west of the Mississippi River. The twenty States lying west of that river have a total representation in the Senate of forty members. Of that number not more than nine have seen ten years service in that body and not more than eighteen have served more than a single term. East of the Mississippi River there is a lively sense of the importance of being represented in the Senate by men of experience. Of fifty-two Senators from that section twenty-six have served more than a single term and eighteen more than ten years. Nearly all the important committees are presided over by eastern men, not because they are from the East or because they are men of great ability, but because they have familiarized themselves with all the dips, spurs and angles of legislative practice and have become learned in the affairs of the government. Mr. Aldrich who is at the head of the powerful committee on finance took his seat in 1881. He is not a Webster or a Calhoun, but he carries in his head more information about the intricacies of national finance and the monetary affairs of the whole country than can be gleaned from books or records. Prominent among the Western men in the Senate is Senator Perkins of this State who was first elected in 1893, and who is now at the head of the committee on naval affairs. He ranks above such men as Lodge and Elkins, not because of his transcendent ability but because in pursuance of the general rule of promotion he has landed at the head of a committee of the first class while they are still committeemen of the second class. The United States Senate, as somebody has said, is distinctly a place for fixed stars and not for comets, yet the West shows no disposition to appreciate a fact that is of the highest importance to a great and growing section of the union.

The Love of the Fanciful

A reviewer of bestsellers is authority for the information that in this practical, common sense era, the public demands books that are photographic in their realism, and will not waste time on fantastic fiction or on stories that deal with the marvelous. Were this true we should feel there was cause for lament. It would mean that imagination was in a state of decay and that love of the ideal was no longer a characteristic of human nature. It would be conclusive of a love of the drab and the prosaic to the exclusion of the things that give buoyancy and cheerfulness to life. What a sad, dull world this would be were we not possessed occasionally with the desire to soar beyond the clouds to get more room, more air and more horizon! What a monotonous bore life would be were we preoccupied eternally with the things that repeat themselves through the ages, never having our wonder excited or our latent poetic faculty aroused! To hold that there is no taste for anything in literature but the realistic is to affirm that the romantic appeal is futile and that the primitive childlike longing for pure marvel, for what is dream-like, for splendid pageants and hair-breadth deliverances has been extinguished. This is incredible. It is not to be confirmed by experience. The success of the author of Peter Pan is alone sufficient to assure us that there is still a widespread taste for pure fantasy. And even though Mr. Barrie had never captivated theatregoers with the confusion and topsy-turvy of elf-rule or amused us with the diverting absurdities of The Admirable Crichton still we should not concur in the dictum that we had ceased to find delight in the strange and improbable and in the doings of such astonishing agents as the heroes of chivalry and the genii and fairies of wonderland. Such specimens of the prankish and dream-like movement of the poet's fancy as The Tempest and the Midsummer Night's Dream persist to persuade us of the undiminished sway of the unbridled imagination. And at the same time we are sensible of Robert Louis Stevenson's position in the domain of fiction. Stevenson is distinguished for nothing so much as the survival of the child in him down to the day of his death. Like Scott and De Quincey his boyhood was passed in "an isle of dreams, and his fantasy ripening into imagination became the dominant note of all his works. His popularity is due in a large measure to his power of touching us with a sense of the supernatural. Everyone with a smack of youth left enjoys his New Arabian Nights, his Prince Otto and his Treasure Island, and these works are outselling year after year the most popular of the books of the hour. And surely Walter Scott is no has-been of the fiction field. His supernatural touch and tragic grandeur show no signs of losing their hold, though as a romancer in the domain of history he exaggerates his types until the thread of truth is at times not to be discerned in the web of fable which involves it. If the love of the marvelous appears to be dying it is because few of our contemporary writers are blessed with imagination. Most of them bear the same relation to literature that the manufacturer of wax figures bears to the sculptor, the average photographer to the portrait painter. Kipling and Wells are notable exceptions. They are good dreamers, and like all men of genius they owe some of their finest creations to the revelations of sleep. Many poets were distinguished by the finer quality of their dreams; and their finest creations were the result of an impulse to throw aside the trammels of reality, to indulge in those sportive movements which are natural to the dreaming fancy, and to summon up forms fantastic and intangible, fleeting shadows that circled them as they emerged from slumber. Until men cease to dream they will enjoy the marvelous in literature, for to dream is to have imagination and to have that faculty is to delight in the excursions of fancy.

Taft Advised to Be a Trimmer

Our Coprophagous contemporary, the Boughten Bulletin, affecting solicitude for the welfare of President Taft, has been giving him some shrewd advice of the kind that is characteristic of San Francisco's unique moral agent. Taking the election in the Fourteenth Massachusetts district as the text of a sermon on the signs of the times the Bulletin pronounces it a warning of impending danger, and informs the President that as a majority of the Republican districts of the nation are ripe for a similar revolt, it is to his advantage to join the insurgents. Now there is more truth in this than is usually to be found in the columns of our habitually disingenuous contemporary. The Republican party is split wide open. The outlook for Democracy has seldom been more propitious. President Taft is on the lid of a volcano. In all probability it would be to his advantage to join the insurgents and make loud noises by way of giving verisimilitude to an attitude that is every day becoming more popular. The Bulletin's advice is therefore shrewd advice, and, as we have said, characteristic. It is the kind of advice that any moral pervert would regard with favor. In giving this advice the Bulletin is unconscious of the moral obliquity that it betrays. The Bulletin's conception of civic honor is peculiar being in principle akin to its conception of the principles of ordinary decency. Its smug editor flatters himself that he has high ideals; but it would not shock him to learn that the President of this great nation was a commonplace peanut, pothouse politician who would not scruple at sacrificing his self-respect that political success might be guaranteed by hypocrisy. Be successful at all hazards and at whatever price, is the Bulletin's motto. Hence the shrewd advice which this delectable journal has given to President Taft. The Bulletin's ideal President is a thorough politician, Proteus-like altering his face and habit to suit occasion; he is like Luther's drunken peasant who was always ready to fall from his horse on one side or the other. It is to be hoped of course that President Taft does not harmonie with the Bulletin's ideal. We are firmly convinced that he does not. He has said that he would rather be right than President, and though no mortal can ever be sure that he is right, he can at least to himself be true, taking each man's or the mob's censure, but reserving his judgment as Polonius advises. Whether President Taft be wrong or the insurgents right, it is for him not to encourage that childish form of prejudice which falls in love and cools, adores and curses with the same haste and unreason. It is not for him to be swayed by the caprice of the multitude whom he believes to have been misled by counsellors of the Bulletin stripe. To protect the people from themselves, as Jefferson has said, "is the noblest function of the statesman." We believe President Taft wishes to perform that function.

Most people make an awful fuss about buying clothes. It is easy for a man to come to this modern men's clothes shop and select his garments, because we handle nothing but men's clothes; consequently all the attention is given in that direction. Competent salesmen greatly facilitate matters for the purchaser, as knowledge of what is right and wrong is authentic. We try our best to make a customer a friend as well. We don't give anyone the rush act.

Ballade of Vernal Atmosphere

I'd like to sing a song of spring—
  It's here, if I am any judge—
I'd like to write of birds a-wing,
  Like that great poet Alphonse Mudge,
But heavy is the air with smudge
  That now, alas! my eyes can't pierce;
I cannot make the spring muse budge—
  This bonfire smoke is something fierce.

Let eight plunk lambkins gambol o'er
  The green—I'll never leave my den
To feast my eyes, which feel quite sore—
  I am the weepingest of men;
Of verse I'd write yards nine or ten,
  And also by the ton or tierce,
But, coughing, I lay down my pen—
  This bonfire smoke is something fierce.

Where are spring's joys when all the air
  Is charged until one's throat is raw?
Who'd write of woods and flowers fair—
  The thought provokes a loud guffaw;
I'd write in satire, like B. Shaw,
  Or irony, like Ambrose Bierce;
Doggone yon pile of burning straw—
  This bonfire smoke is something fierce!

Perspective Impressions

That the people of Stockton are doing things will probably be inferred by thousands of the readers of this week's Town Talk.

"Wedlock without love is a sin," says a prominent actress. She might have added that love without wedlock is a popular fad.

The Church Federation of Oakland has determined to prevent the Johnson-Jeffries fight. It's about time for the managers to adopt a cut-rate for clergymen.

Editor "Dunk" McPherson of Santa Cruz has discovered Esperanto and pronounces it "the best substitute for all other languages." But "Dunk" needs a substitute for only one language.

The Hon. Francis J. Heney has gravitated to the Chautauqua circle. Which means that grass is short and clients like angels' visits. Even Rudolph appears to be, among other things, ungrateful.

Monte Carlo, the smallest State in Europe, has been given a constitution. It always has a system from which it derives more benefit than it can get out of a constitution.

San Jose is to have a Rose Carnival. With "Red" Hayes as the central flower the carnival can be called by any other name without affecting its fragrance.

In Cairo Mr. Roosevelt assuaged the wrath of the Moslems by telling them that he did not say what he was reported to have said in his Khertoum speech. If Dr. Jordan had copyrighted his most cherished policy what a hard time Teddy would have squaring himself as he pursues the uneven tenor of his way.

The Philadelphia strike has petered out, but our gallant courageous newspapers aren't saying much about the defeat of the unions. Their affection for the wage-earner doesn't impel them to call his attention to the most recent exemplification of the inadvisability of heeding the exhortations of professional agitators.

The Sage

By Maxime Gorki (Translated by David Weinstein)

Once upon a time there lived a sage.

He had understood the melancholy mystery of existence, and this mystery had filled his heart with a poignant and sombre anguish which extinguished the smiles of life and caused to die its joys. With the cold regard of reason the sage had scrutinized the depths of his time, and found only darkness therein; nor did the face of the future bear a brighter hue for him. He made his way through the streets and highways of his native land, and the head of this solitary thinker shook sorrowfully at everything that met his weary gaze. And in the multifarious din of life the gospel of the prophet had the plaintive sound of a funereal bell:

"Men, you live on enwrapped in the clouds of darkness. Your life is but a vain struggle. It is from the abyss of ignorance that you emanate, and the impenetrable darkness of ignorance awaits you!"

The people listened to these lugubrious words; they understood their bitter justness, and sighingly raised their eyes towards those of the sage.

But after having followed him for a while on his lonely way, they returned to their labors and their wives, eating their dry bread, drinking their coarse beverages. And whilst they smilingly contemplated their playing children they forgot of their miseries and of the pains they felt the day before.

They struggled against one another for riches and power, yet they listened attentively to the gospel of love. With their hands gory with the blood of their neighbor, they caressed their sweethearts and gave to their friends the traitor's kiss. They stripped themselves mutually, and, enriched by these robberies, defended their property with zeal. They lied without shame, what time they were saying that Truth alone ought to reign over man. A few there were who even believed in the strength of Truth, and these suffered for their faith. They liked the music which caused them to weep with tears of ecstacy; Beauty made them enthusiastic; and yet they admired many things that were vile and repellent, and committed many hideous acts. They were enslaved to one another all in saying that they thirsted for liberty. They had contempt for those who submitted themselves to their power; and these, cowardly as the birds of prey, hated their masters in secret.

Desiring always the better, they sought anxiously around them, but they knew not how to create this "better" in themselves, for they were absorbed by the niggardly cares of the comforts of existence. They applied all the strength of their minds to hatred and lying, to the invention of coarse cunning, in order to glut their insatiable greed for the goods of this earth.

It is thus that they lived—like swine in a sty. And yet these odd, foolish creatures believed themselves to be fallen angels!

And their life was like an inexhaustible, muddy volcano, which shot in the clear, heavenly space the infected vapor of moans and cries, the viscous cinders of sufferance and pain, the fusty mire of bestial desires.

The solitary sage walked across this vain agitation of the men, and said, in a voice of omniscence:

"What is life to you—you who have never lived it? What is truth to you—you who never speak it? You know not why you exist. And it is your misfortune!"

When he met some lovers, he said to them, sadly:

"Death awaits you—you and your posterity!"

When he beheld men building sumptuous dwellings he addressed them reproachfully:

"All that will be the prey of destruction!"

When he passed near to some children playing in a field amid the flowers which resembled them, he sighed and thought in his heart:

"My eyes behold the harvest of Death!"

And when he listened to the other sages, those who loved life and taught its wonderful secrets to the young in the temples of science, he said, smiling:

"Mediocrity! That is the name of your wisdom. For the earth will perish, with all its temples, its sciences, with its truths and errors, and you ignore the day and the hours of the annihilation!"

But once, in the confines of a busy city, in a narrow alley inhabited by the outcasts, amid the heavy odors rising from the dirt and the stench, the sage saw a compact group of workmen. One was addressing the rest, and the sage was astonished at the attention with which they listened to him. Never had the people listened to his teaching with an equal ardor. And the goad of envy piqued the heart of the sage.

"Comrades," said the orator to the crowd, "we are submerged in the mire of toil, like the pebbles at the bottom of the sea, whilst above us roll the rapid waves of the life of our masters. For them our bodies are merely the stepping-stones by which they rise to the summits of Truth, and from thence they direct the strength of their minds against us in order to oppress our souls the more effectively. They know all; we know naught. They live; we merely linger on. They have learned wisdom; we merely a few fairy tales. Everything that is luminous is in their hands; we have naught in ours—not even sufficient bread with which to fill our hungry bodies. But our hunger will vanquish their satiety, for we live the life of the spirit and we are vigorous. We want to live, we want to learn, we want to be men! We want to appease our sapless souls by filling them with the wisdom of the earth built on the rock of our patience. We want everything that exists. We want to create that which is not yet!"

"Men!" said the sage to him, with a smile of condescension. "Error! That is the name of your words. Human knowledge is limited, and mankind will know no more than it is capable of knowing. And what does it signify if you perish from starvation or from satiety, like those against whom you direct the half-blunted arrow of your wisdom? And what matters if you sleep ignorant in the grave or have your shroud covered with the pious doctrines of your masters? Bethink yourself, everything that exists on earth, aye, even the earth itself, will be precipitated into the black abyss of oblivion, into the dungeon of death—"

The silent men raised their eyes towards the sage. Immovably they listened to his wise words, and the more he spoke the more did their faces assume a cold and sombre air. Suddenly one of them, addressing his fellow, cried:

"Jim, my arm's in a sling; just you fling the old monkey one in the eye!"

And this was all!

Yes, of course, I know them. They are a little coarse, these working people. But can we blame them? For, so far, no one has yet taught them better manners!

Dancing in the Tenderloin

There is dancing in the tenderloin. There is also a fresh spasm of morality among the chaste members of the California Club. These good and zealous women seem to be laboring under a misapprehension regarding the character and purpose of the tenderloin. For when they heard there was dancing in the tenderloin they behaved as though they had heard that all the churches in town had been converted into vaudeville houses. Their emotion was akin to that which might have been aroused had they learned that a Pittsburg millionaire had established a harem in a local seminary for young ladies. The puritanical members of the California Club apparently are more in need of enlightenment than the encouragement which they have received in their delusion from our canting daily press. It would do them much good for President Wheeler of the State University to read a paper to them on the subject of the tenderloin; for him in whom they have much confidence to explain that the tenderloin is not the auxiliary of any institution for the spread of puritanism or the promotion of a wax-doll morality. It would certainly do them no harm to learn that there is not the slightest danger of the tenderloin or its habitues being corrupted by the waltz or the two-step or even by Lydian measures that move and prompt the pleasing pangs of love. President Wheeler, who has given some study to the tenderloin, to its motive, its mood and its mysteries, might explain to the ladies of the California Club that the sport therein indulged by jolly nymphs wreathed in smiles and given perchance to artful, nay, wanton wiles is the kind that only wrinkled, dull Care derides.

A Moral Lecture

This subject of dancing in the tenderloin is one susceptible of much elaboration for the purposes of a moral lecture to moral women. Appropriate to this theme are general observations on the evil of concentrating too much attention on the virtue of sex. This is what is known as the feminine morality. Women regard love as the greatest of passions and they place their ideal in the perfection of love. Hence the idea that any vulgarizing of this passion is the greatest of sins. Now love is subordinate to right. Without probity there could be no good in the world. Chastity is not the source of order, the synonym of reason or the criterion of excellence. These are matters that should be impressed upon feminine reformers, for they could accomplish much good in the world were they to spend less of their time in useless effort to realize their ideal. They would then have more time to devote to the abatement of great evils. In dealing with the subject of dancing in the tenderloin the transition to dancing in the smart set is easy and might be made to good purpose now that there is talk of importing the Chantecler dance from Paris. The Chantecler dance as described in the daily papers is a symbolical dance the inspiration of which comes from the barnyard. In this dance the male biped goes through the conventional antics of the rooster when engaged in fascinating a hen. His skirted partner plays the hen, and the whole performance judging from the obscene description which the dailies have given us is not merely vulgar; it is nasty. In this curious age fecund in curious things, it will not be surprising to see the Chantecler dance imported by high society and eventually introduced even in the decorous tenderloin.

Our Celebrated Friskiness

The idea of dancing in the tenderloin does not seem to me to be at all in the nature of a menace to public decency. On the contrary it seems to me to be in the nature of a pastime indigenous to the tenderloin, like smoking, drinking, flirting and other things. The tenderloin without dancing would be as colorless as a Fourth of July parade without a band. So long as we are tolerant of a tenderloin we should be tolerant of dancing therein. And what would San Francisco be without a tenderloin? Far from what it proudly boasts that it is. We preen ourselves on being a laughter-loving community; we are pleased to be celebrated for our gaiety, our friskiness and our French restaurants; we indulge in a good deal of swagger on the strength of our freedom from the trammels of conventionality, yet we have been taking seriously some very pious and zealous ladies who would make our glorious tenderloin as uninteresting as a church social. But of course there is no sincerity in our attitude toward these good women. They may think they have provoked a hullabaloo, but they have done nothing more than given our parochial press a pretext for swatting the McCarthy administration and vindicating once more its own inherent virtue.

Balls of the East Side

The difference between a parish masquerading as a metropolis and the real thing is illustrated by the tone of the newspapers by which the spirit of each is represented. While our press has been affecting holy horror at dancing in the tenderloin the New York press has been celebrating the revival of the famous East Side balls, which in the matter of abandon far surpass anything to be witnessed in this city. Tom Sharkey gave an all-night ball on the East Side a few weeks ago, and the dailies devoted columns to descriptions that left nothing to the imagination. The Sharkey ball was frankly a Bacchanalian revel participated in by working girls, girls from the slums and girls from cheap theatres in costumes approximating in scantiness those of the famous artists' ball of Paris. On St. Patrick's eve the famous Mulligan ball was revived. "The sale of tickets," says the New York World, "continued from 8 o'clock in the evening until after 6 o'clock the next morning." More than 8,000 persons were packed into Terrace

Garden. "The notable feature of the affair," says the World, "was the return to the scanty costumes and forms of revelry that many have believed are things of the past in New York. In brief the ball was a resurrection of the days when tights, masks, wild gaiety and seemingly unlimited supplies of wine ruled at many of the large public dances. Of the 4,000 women present more than one-half were in fancy costume, abbreviated skirts or no skirts; there were bare-foot dancers and extremely decollette gowns were so numerous as to fail to attract attention."

Tights Galore and Wine Ad Lib

Continuing, the World, without comment, says: "Amid the swirl of gleaming shoulders, silken hose and fluffy short skirts moved several hundred East Side shop girls, who varied their working dress by pinning up the skirt a few inches and wearing gay paper hats. One of the mysteries of the affair was the suddenness of the revival of risque display. There had been no booming of the affair as anything unusual and visitors were amazed at the sight that greeted them as they reached the scene. There were little girls in long skirts and women in short skirts. There were pink tights, blue tights, white tights and black tights. Nor were the risque costumes confined to the girls. One of the men wore a costume that seemingly consisted of a barrel. There were men in bathing suits that would be frowned upon at Coney—native warriors garbed as in the jungle. One girl wore a crown made up of small electric lights illuminated by means of a concealed battery. Dancing began sedately enough at 9 o'clock. After a few visits to the refreshment rooms the dancing became more lively. By midnight the waltzers were showing some whirls, and at 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning the dance floors were the scenes of impromptu Apache, Bowery and skirt dances. A flock of wine agents came with the dawning of St. Patrick's Day, and the waiters could hear nothing but wine thereafter. Freddie Kernochan, who has led many cotillons in places far removed from Third avenue, for the third time led the grand march at a Mulligan ball, his partner being Mrs. Mulligan. Mr. Kernochan described the ball as the 'greatest ever.' As the milk wagons began to rattle past the members of the overworked orchestras began to ask if any one was ever going home, but 6 o'clock in the morning found the conundrum still unanswered. In fact, sunlight brought a crowd of new arrivals, who had just heard the news that the ball was a 'revival' of the old days and who rushed to be in at the finish. Yes, it was a great ball, and there was no kick coming except from the girls who excel in that art." From all of which it is to be inferred there was really a hot time in the old town, the austerity of Mayor Gaynor to the contrary notwithstanding. And not a protest has yet been heard.

John Martin's Generosity

I have just heard of a recent act of generosity on the part of John Martin, the president of the State's big light and power combination, which should not be hidden under the bushel of his modesty. Some time ago Mr. Martin became interested in a dredging project in Colorado which looked so good to him that he not only invested in it himself but enthusiastically urged several of his friends to put their money into it too. Some of Mr. Martin's friends who are better equipped than he with technical information about dredging methods, examined the scheme and expressed dissatisfaction with it. They said it would not turn out as Mr. Martin expected it to and they refused to invest any money. But Mr. Martin had confidence in his own judgment and communicated his enthusiasm to eight of his friends who turned over to him five thousand dollars apiece for investment with hope of speedy returns. The dredging project fell through and all the money sunk in it was lost. But Mr. Martin, himself a heavy loser, paid back out of his own pocket five thousand dollars to each of the eight men whom he had induced to invest.

"Every time the baby looks into my face he smiles," said Mr. Meekins.

"Well," answered his wife, "that shows he's got a sense of humor anyway."

A Pessimistic Critic

On all sides of us are fastidious literary critics who tell us that while there is book-making ad nauseam there are few if any contemporary writers in this country producing literature of any value. But Mr. Edgar Saltus goes further and says "there is barely a novelist anywhere whose wares will endure, hardly a poet whose verses will survive." Mr. Saltus is deserving of respect as a critic. He is a man of real literary attainments. There was a time, long before he began collaborating with Fra Elbertus and Ella Wheeler Wilcox on the editorial page of the Examiner, when he gave promise of doing something that would entitle him to transportation on the Limited to the Valhalla of literature, but he seems to have lost faith in himself and to have grown pessimistic. It may be, however, that he has merely worked himself into a mood to combat the warmed-over optimism which Mr. Hubbard has sucked out of a reservoir of compounded philosophy to distribute in capsule doses to culturines. At any rate Mr. Saltus sees little promise in literature anywhere save in California. He is looking backward with a melancholy regret that bespeaks a superior mind and also a prophetic soul dreaming of things to come. He has much reverence and gratitude for the worthy dead, but none for the living. And even of many of the dead, whom other critics have appraised as worthy, Mr. Saltus has a very poor opinion. He tells us that Germany has had but three men who could write comprehensively; "and one of them, Heine, was a Frenchman; another Schopenhaner, was a cosmopolitan, while the third, Wagner, was a mountain." This is fine journalistic rhetoric, the chief element of which is surprise, but this is achieved by the sublime art of being supremely silly. To say that a man is a cosmopolitan is not to deny the right of a nation to claim him as its own. All genius is cosmopolitan. Furthermore all genius is mountainous in the sense that it towers above the molehills of mediocrity. The author of Faust was a mountain, yet Mr. Saltus is unable to see him. Jean Paul was a range of mountains, yet he has not come within the range of the Saltus vision. But, as Carlyle says, "Richter requires more study than most readers care to give," and perhaps this is the reason that Germany's intellectual colossus is not appreciated by our fastidious critic.

The Renaissance

Mr. Saltus would turn his intellectual light on dim places, but there are corners that escape the gleam of his lantern. He knows nobody in France worthy of mention—not even Anatole France, a man with a mind more nearly approximating that of Voltaire than any that has burgeoned in France since the author of the Philosophical Dictionary passed away. However he is acquainted with such lesser lights as George Moore and Henry James and pronounces them the only great literary men in England. He doesn't even mention George Meredith. Finally coming down to California he praises us for having recognized Bret Harte and Joaquin Miller, but says nothing of Ambrose Bierce or of Mark Twain, the most notable living representative of American letters. Here in California, Mr. Saltus thinks, will come the new renaissance. But why he thinks this it is difficult to conceive since he fails to indicate where is germinating the seed from which the flower of literature is to come.

Wheeler's Deserved Self-Appreciation

President Benjamin Ide Wheeler has risen to a towering height in my esteem as a result of my reading the Charter Day address with which he moved and edified a large audience in Berkeley. It goes without saying that President Wheeler is endowed with all the qualities that are essential to success in the management of a great modern university. He is above all things a good "mixer." He circulates well where circulation tells, and he keeps his big school in the public eye, drawing prestige to it through the medium of distinguished personalities. Very little more is wanted to satisfy the test of efficiency in university management, and what little more is wanted the amiable Dr. Wheeler supplies. All of which I have known; but the subtlety of the distinguished scholar in the fine art of tooting his own horn by way of accompaniment to a hymn in praise of others has come to me as a belated revelation. Listen to him as he winds his horn:

"Friends of the University of California and members thereof, I wish to thank the students and professors for the excellent way they have taken care of the university in my absence. They have not only taken excellent care of things, but have worked harmoniously and well for the good of the university and its development. I know that they have done this for the love of me, but incidentally they have proved that I am not needed. It is delightful to find that one has got things into such shape that he isn't really necessary any longer."

Thus we see that sweet as the syren's tongue his accents fall as deftly he insinuates praise of himself among encomiums generously distributed among the satellites whose love he knows he has won because he knows it is deserved. President Wheeler would certainly be deserving of our felicitations even though in his modesty he should feel that sufficient for him was the delight that comes from knowing that as a result of his consummate ability he has brought the State University to a state of absolute perfection. So great a man in my opinion is deserving of something more than the bouquets that he flings at himself; a raise of salary, for example.

The Observance of Holy Week

I asked a theatrical man the other day whether there had been any appreciable falling off in the attendance at the local theatres during Holy Week and especially on Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Holy Saturday. He answered me in the negative. It is evident that there are sufficient people in this city to fill the theatres at any time or season, no matter what religious regulations there may be to keep certain sectarians away. In other words the theatres do not have to depend on any particular class of people for their patronage. Many Catholics and Episcopalians refrain from attending the theatres during the Lenten season and many more who do not observe this form of self-denial throughout the rest of Lent, would not think of going during Holy Week. But it seems that there are not enough of these in proportion to our other population to hurt the theatres financially. There was a time in this city when it was different. Then Lent was regarded as a bad time for the theatres and Holy Week particularly bad. If I am not mistaken, for several years Alfred Bouvier closed the Baldwin Theatre during the concluding days of Lent.

Theatres and Churches Both Filled

It would be unjust to say that because the theatres were well patronized during Holy Week, San Francisco is a wicked or irreligious city. San Francisco may be the Paris of America, but like Paris she has many churches and again like Paris, they are always well attended. The theatres were filled during Holy Week, but so were the churches. At all the services given by the Catholic and Episcopalian clergy throughout the city there was thronged attendance. This is a manifestation of our city life which is too often overlooked by those who cry out about San Francisco's iniquity. These complainers see too much of the seamy side of our life and not enough of the better side. If they spend their nights in the Tenderloin studying our vice, why do they not spend their mornings in the churches, estimating our religious population? They would find that this city has an enormous body of regular churchgoers which is an excellent offset to the large body of our purely frivolous class. San Francisco is not going to the demnition bow wows as rapidly as some hasty observers think.

"Do you consider it a moral wrong to cheat a lawyer?"
"No, but I consider it a physical impossibility."

The New Orleans Fair Boom

The gentlemen who have undertaken the Panama-Pacific Canal Exposition project have begun to realize that there is a far more troublesome and pretentious rival than San Diego in the field. New Orleans is the city whose claims San Francisco will have to combat. There are others cities in the South that want the exposition, but the probability is that the Solid South will eventually demand that it be held in New Orleans. Some shrewd and vigorous campaigning has been already done in the interest of that city. Its boomers have visited Washington, and President Taft has told them that he knew of no city he should prefer to theirs as the site of the exposition. The boomers moved on Washington with the Governor of the State at their head accompanied by the Louisiana Senators and most of the House delegation. Since then the tip has come out from Washington that the Administration in pursuance of its policy to conciliate the Solid South will favor New Orleans; also that the Administration has no very strong affection for a certain city in the Far West which is now booming for Governor a gentleman who has gone out of his way to hurl insults at the President from public platforms. The New Orleans boomers, it should also be stated, are doing some campaigning in the North and have obtained some favorable expressions from influential papers. The New York Sun has been persuaded not only to advocate the claims of New Orleans but to knock San Francisco, which, says that journal, is "a city of boundless joy and immeasurable possibilities, but too far from the rest of the country and from Panama." It is evident that San Francisco must be up and doing.

Is the Machine Behind Johnson?

The Examiner credits Editor George H. Rhodes of the Ukiah Times with having "developed the unique theory that Hiram Johnson is the real low down candidate of the Southern Pacific, and that Alden Anderson is merely a mask to be thrown aside when the time comes to produce Johnson's smiling face." Far be it from me to attempt to deprive Editor Rhodes of even an infinitesimal fraction of such credit as may be given him for evolving a unique theory, and I hope that I shall not be suspected of harboring such a design when I assert that as soon as the Lincoln-Roosevelt League chose Mr. Johnson for its standard bearer I observed that the selection would not be likely to alarm the octopus. In Town Talk of February 26th were printed these words: "Mr. Johnson is temperamentally so safe and sane that despite the promises he will surely make to paralyze the railroad and burst the ignominious bonds that bind we shall not be amazed to find him receiving the support of the machine"; also, "The machine moves in a mysterious way its wonders to perform." It is perhaps needless to say that my calculations were based on Mr. Johnson's public record as a reformer. Editor Rhodes is perhaps better qualified than I to enlighten the public.

Our Young Champion

City and County Attorney Long confessed recently that he was unable to draw a permit under which the United Railroads could operate the Sutter street cars on the outer rails of Market street without jeopardizing the interests of the city. If Mr. Long had made a similar confession at the time he was undergoing examination for admission to the bar he would have been sent back to spend a little more time preparing himself for the exigencies of his profession. Yet Mr. Long is a very fair specimen of the kind of professional talent which ingratiates itself into public favor. It is the kind of talent which finds public office more profitable than private practice, and it is for that very reason that it embarks upon a political career. If Mr. Long's legal ability was on a level with his talent for politics he would be one of the ornaments of the bar. His case, however, is not hopeless. He is susceptible of much improvement at public expense; and as a man of ordinary mentality cannot spend many years of his life in the office of city attorney without absorbing some useful knowledge the probability is that when eventually he is separated from his job it will be at a time when he will have become able to give the taxpayers a run for their money. Meanwhile though the people have no redress they can extract some amusement from the efforts to be made ostensibly to compel the traction company to relinquish its vested rights but in reality to titillate the dear people with the performance of their favorite play, "The Baiting of a Public Service Corporation, or The Demagogue Raising Hell!"

Guest—Mercy! What's that awful profanity downstairs?
Hostess—My husband has come in late and has fallen over the new Persian prayer rug.

Vice-President McCormick

One of the things for which San Francisco has reason to be grateful these days is the promotion of Mr. E. O. McCormick to the vice-presidency of the Southern Pacific Company. There is no man in the country more enthusiastic about San Francisco than Mr. McCormick. Some ten years ago he came hither, a stranger, in the capacity of manager of the passenger traffic department. He came with the reputation of being the most popular railroad man in the country, and he wasn't here many weeks before it could have been decided by popular vote that the reputation was deserved. When he was promoted to the position of chief traffic manager of the Harriman system, with headquarters at Chicago, there were many that while rejoicing in his good fortune were grieved that it should necessitate a change of residence. And Mr. McCormick himself left town with mixed emotions. He was reluctant to leave San Francisco, and as he often said, it was his fondest dream that some day he might return. Since his return he has been bubbling over with enthusiasm.

A Poem Published by Request

The following letter has just been received:

Editor "Town Talk," Dear Sir: From time to time you publish poems which interest me so much that I place them in my scrap book. I wonder if you could find for me an old favorite which I have not seen for many years? It is a poem by Saxe telling how an angel stole out of Heaven while St. Peter slept and was found by a husband in the arms of his bride. I have not seen this poem for many years and would be greatly obliged if you would publish it. Sincerely, H. G. W., City.

H. G. W.'s memory is at fault. It was not the celebrated John G. Saxe who wrote the poem in question, but one David Barker of Maine, the author of a number of graceful verses. Barker's poem, however, called forth an answer from Saxe and the two poems have frequently been published together. It is a pleasure to reprint them here. No doubt other readers beside H. G. W. will be glad of the chance to place them in their scrap books. Barker's poem is as follows:

One night as old St. Peter slept,
  He left the door of Heaven ajar,
When through a little angel crept,
  And came down with a falling star.

One summer, as the blessed beams
  Of morn approached, my blushing bride
Awakened from some pleasing dreams
  And found that angel by her side.

God grant but this—I ask no more—
  That when he leaves this world of pain
He'll wing his way to that bright shore
  And find the road to Heaven again.

When Saxe read this poem he felt justly indignant at the implication of carelessness placed to the charge of St. Peter and accordingly he vindicated the fair fame of Heaven's Chancellor in the following lines:

Full eighteen hundred years or more
  I've kept my gate securely fast;
There has no "little angel" strayed
  Nor recreant through the portal passed.

I did not sleep, as you supposed,
Nor has a "little angel" left,
  And gone down with a falling star.

Go ask that blushing bride, and see
  If she don't frankly own and say
That when she found that angel babe
  She found it in the good old way.

God grant but this—I ask no more—
  That should your number still enlarge
You will not do as done before
  And lay it to old Peter's charge.

What Lane Says He Knows

"I know," says Interstate Commerce Commissioner Lane, "that President Taft is in sympathy with the claims of San Francisco." Mr. Lane alludes to our claims upon the Administration in respect of an appropriation for an exposition. He made the statement quoted above at a luncheon given by the gentlemen who have taken charge of the exposition project. The statement served to aid digestion. But statements designed to produce elation when made on a full stomach in an atmosphere above normal in temperature may be usually attributed rather to a desire to please than to a passion for disseminating truth. What Mr. Lane says he knows with reference to Mr. Taft's sentiments is in flat contradiction of what Mr. Taft himself has said, as may be learned from a preceding paragraph dealing with the New Orleans exposition boom.

Our Struthionoid Contemporary

Some of the things that were said at the exposition luncheon were not reported in the dailies. Some pertinent observations made by Governor Gillett, for example, were not set forth in type by one of our veracious dailies. Looking Mr. Hornick, manager of the Call and a member of the committee, straight in the eyes the Governor said: "Let me suggest that if San Francisco wishes to obtain favor from Washington it would be wise for certain papers to cease their daily unjust hammering of the Administration. If I were working in the interest of New Orleans I would collect such clippings from the San Francisco newspapers as are cruelly abusive of the Administration and send them to Washington." Evidently Mr. Hornick understood that these remarks applied to the Call, for they were not included in the Call's report of the Governor's speech. This method of flattering the ostrich, which is characteristic of parochial journalism, the Call has frequently had occasion to censure, for with the San Francisco press it is a habit. But the Call does not merely reprehend those vices which it is not inclined to; it assume virtues foreign to its nature by pretending to abominate a lack of them in others.

Petty Larcenous Journalists

From the Call I learn that when the municipal printing contract was up for discussion before the Supervisors the other day it was suggested that possibly there was collusion between the Post and Boughten Bulletin. There was of course substantial reason for this suggestion as it is well known that some years ago those two journals were in collusion and that they committed a great deal of petty larceny. But it was explained by a representative of the Post to the satisfaction of the Supervisors that there was no possibility of a repetition of this crime while the Post was under its present management. He said that it was under a management twice removed from the present that the Post was guilty of collusion with the Boughten Bulletin, the management of which has remained the same. The story of the collusion between the two journals is an old one. Allusion to it has been made more than once on public platforms, but it was not until last Monday that the details got into the public records. At the meeting of the Supervisors it was authoritatively stated that under the compact by which the Post and Bulletin defrauded the city the sanctimonious Mr. Crothers obtained a rakeoff of 8 cents a square. To what extent Mr. Fremont Older was implicated in this larcenous performance is a matter that has never been divulged. It is known only that he was managing editor of the Bulletin, that he shared in the loot of crime, and that as now he was at once the inspiration and pride of the good Mr. Crothers, the same good Mr. Crothers with whom shoulder to shoulder he has been striving to put crooks into jail.

The Conversion of Crothers

In justice both to Mr. Older and Mr. Crothers it should be explained that the Boughten Bulletin did not pocket the eight-cent rakeoff during the whole life of the printing contract. Kind Providence interposed in behalf of Mr. Crothers' conscience which has never been seasoned and toughened to the power of resistance that distinguishes Mr. Older's. So tender a conscience as Mr. Crothers' must have experienced poignant torment all the while that the rakeoff was coming in to his prehensile fist. Great must have been his relief when his guardian angel recovered him from sin and started him once more along the narrow path of rectitude. The rescue was brought about by a change of management in the Post. When the new manager got on the job, Mr. Crothers came round for his "bit," but was sternly rebuked. "I'd be guilty of a crime if I kept up such a compact," said the new manager, and thereafter he ignored the agreement under which the Bulletin had permitted the Post to get the contract. It was thus that Mr. Crothers suffered the kind of death that St. Paul speaks of, the death that makes possible resurrection into a new life of virtue. Hence the current austerity of the Bulletin.

A Candidate Wanted

That astute director-general of politics, Mr. Gavin McNab, has not yet found a suitable standard bearer for the diminishing hosts of Democracy; at least he has not found one willing to enter the fray. Theodore Bell he pronounces impossible. To attempt to animate a Bell campaign, in McNab's opinion, would be like trying to revive a corpse. Bell has had his funeral and the mourners are not to be rounded up for another journey. McNab, I am told, would like to induce James V. Coleman to become a candidate. Coleman as a standard bearer would certainly infuse enthusiasm into the ranks of the Democracy. He is one of the old-school of Democrats, but he has remained faithful to his party through all its obsessions and aberrations. He was prominent in the councils of the party a quarter of a century ago, and he was almost nominated for Governor at San Jose by the convention that sent E. B. Pond to defeat. Coleman is a man of wealth and a good campaigner, being possessed of a gifted tongue and the power of stirring the emotions.

The Return of Tartarin

Some verses published by the New York Sun about the time Mr. Roosevelt emerged from the African jungle seem especially appropriate now that Cairo has experienced him in all the turbulence of his most impassioned mood. They are entitled "The Return of Tartarin":

Out of the East on wings of fire
The simoon, with relentless ire,
Howled through the waste, and where it passed
All things bowed down beneath the blast
That shook destruction from its crest;
And then—came one in khaki drest
Bearing a Stick, and at his frown
It quieted down.

With blazing eyeballs sniffed the air,
Shook his vast mane, and at the world
In thunder tones defiance hurled;
When through the growing shades of night
He saw a Stick leap into sight,
And prescient of the awful whack
He shuddered and went back.

The rivers rush from gorge and dell
The Nile's majestic flood to swell,
That ceaseless through old Egypt's length
Rolls onward with resistless strength;
At least it rolled until one day
The Cloud Compeller came that way
Shaking a Stick, and at his look
It shrivelled to a brook.

The wide earth bends beneath his tread,
Nor man nor beast dare lift his head,
The dictionary pales and quakes,
The alphabet in terror shakes,
The sinful nature faker squirms
Beneath his heel—so now, ye worms,
Back to your holes, no more to roam—
He's coming home.

The Impulsive Teddy

What Mr. Roosevelt did in Egypt was of course characteristic. The Omniscient One is prepared at all times to discuss any old subject and no human power can hold his tongue. He understands the political situation in Egypt better than the people themselves, and as the Universal Oracle he conceived it to be his duty to give them some solid chunks of advice interspersed with time-worn platitudes of the copy-book variety. Though politics is a subject tabu in the University of Egypt Mr. Roosevelt should not have been expected to be under restraint. Mr. Roosevelt is divinely commissioned to spread his gospel over all the earth and the waters thereof. His message is for all mankind. It will perhaps be regarded abroad as somewhat peculiar that Mr. Roosevelt, while considering it the part of wisdom and discretion to eschew discussion of the politics of his own country should have no hesitation in plunging into a discussion of the politics of a foreign country in which he was enjoying the hospitality of the people. But before Mr. Roosevelt gets back home it will be seen that he is essentially peculiar; that, in fact, being a law unto himself he is absolutely lawless.

The Assassinated Pasha

If Mr. Roosevelt's remarks in Cairo were uttered with a view to adding warmth to the reception which is to be given him in England he is likely to be disappointed. The Nationalists of Egypt have many sympathizers in England where there are insurgents as radical as those of this country. The British insurgents have not been lamenting the assassination of Boutros Ghali Pasha which Mr. Roosevelt vehemently denounced. Boutros Ghali had a bad record from any point of view except as a servile mouthpiece of Lord Cromer's curious political morality. He was the confidential friend of the infamous Ismail Pacha. He was the presiding judge of the Deushamai Tribunal. He strengthened the antipress law, a circumstance that probably commended him to the favor of the statesman whose attempt to revive a species of tyranny to punish the New York World is fresh in the public mind. Boutros Ghali will also be remembered as the author of the shocking oasis deportation scheme. His murder was the direct consequence of the oppression instituted by Lord Cromer.

"Bob" Beardslee's Candidacy

While other candidates for State offices are already engaged in the hurly-burly of active campaigning, "Bob" Beardslee of Stockton who is an aspirant for second place on the republican ticket, is quietly attending to his law practice and biding his time. Beardslee is an experienced campaigner and he knows the futility of beginning a fight too soon. So while others are already exhausting their energies at this early date, with the election seven months away, he is doing little more than letting it be known that he is a candidate. Herein, it seems to an outsider, Beardslee is wise. His law practice is extensive and takes him continually to all parts of the State. Being well known all over California on account of his long and efficient service in the legislature, "Bob" has only to announce his political intentions for the coming election to make an impression on the various county leaders. When the time comes for real work he will have enthusiastic helpers in all sections and will enter the field with a strong following, in fine fettle for hard campaigning. Sentiment for Beardslee is encouraging and augurs his election. He has presided over the lower chamber of the State legislature and is therefore equipped for the presidency of the senate by his knowledge of parliamentary procedure. Many of the men with whom he has served hitherto will be in the upper house next year and his popularity will insure the most sympathetic relations with them. The fact that he was chairman of the ways and means committee in the last legislature and prepared a budget which went through without alterations argues his efficiency in financial legislation. Take it all in all, it would be hard to select a more likely man for lieutenant governor. The wise political forecasters are already prophesying his success.

A Hint to the Newspapers

When will our local editors awaken to the fact that they are missing a lot of spicy news by not keeping live correspondents at Reno? The eastern press keeps an alert eye on Reno all the time, for it has realized for lo, these many moons, that nearly all of the big divorce scandals break there, that rumors of contemplated domestic severances can be confirmed there more quickly than elsewhere and that the doings of divorce-seeking residents make excellent reading. The eastern papers learned these things in the heyday of the Dakota divorce mill and applied the discovery to Reno some time ago. But our local papers are slow to follow suit. They are not well served by their representatives in the Nevada town and miss many good stories altogether, getting others only when the parties drop into San Francisco for a little diversion. It would pay the papers to keep just as good men in Reno as they do on the hotel detail in this city.

Help for Mrs. Vanderbilt

One day last week one of the newspapers chronicled the fact that Mrs. Willie Vanderbilt, domiciled at the time at the Fairmont, found it impossible to sleep on account of the bad condition of her nerves. Since that innocent fact was recorded Mrs. Vanderbilt's mail has grown to twice its usual size. Every post brings her all sorts of letters from men and women who are anxious to help her cure that insomnia. Some are well meaning cranks who offer favorite remedies which they vouch for as having cured the most obstinate cases. Others are quacks and patent medicine dealers who want to sell their wares, while others are willing to supply Mrs. Vanderbilt with remedies free of charge on condition that she write testimonials as to their effectiveness. It would be quite a feather in the cap of a quack if he could advertise that his nostrum had cured a Vanderbilt of insomnia. But Mrs. Willie has paid no attention to any of her correspondents.

She Heard the Waves at Midnight

From one of my friends who is not averse to a little frolic now and then I learn that one of our toppiest society matrons was a participant in the gayety of the Ocean Boulevard a few nights ago. It was at The Breakers far down the beach that my friend first recognized this lady. Despite the fact that she was heavily veiled, her striking figure and her magnificent jewels betrayed her identity to his observing eye. Later he saw her again at the Casino and it is to be inferred that she was then on the last lap of the giddy round and headed for home. With this matron were two chaps quite prominent in society who showed unfeigned delight in the company of their fair incognita. Well they might, for it is not often that this lady favors the frolicsome resorts along the ocean with her presence. Much more frequently is she seen in the haughty precincts of Burlingame and the exclusive drawing rooms of Pacific avenue.

That Chantecler Luncheon

Accounts of the Chantecler luncheon at Coronado interested me greatly. It must have been an inspiring sight, that of Major and Mrs. Dobson, Miss Eleanor Sears and Dick Tobin with wide-open receptive jaws catching morsels tossed to them from the Country Club piazza. But was it ornithologically correct? From a limited experience with barn-yard fowls I hold an impression that they scratch for and peck at their food. Without deflecting due credit from the spirit of progress which prompted the Coronado feast, may we not see the idea properly carried out? Something after this manner: guests to be assembled at feeding hour on El Cerrito field and the provender thrown to them, whereupon they should be required to secure it in the conventional barn-yard way. After this the Chanteclerette would be a pleasing diversion. This would be sounding the latest cry in the Chantecler craze.

Tableaux Vivants and Morals

The most excited perturbation took hold of the matrons and girls of the smart set of Burlingame who are arranging the historical picture fete when they began scrutinizing the histories of the fair but frail ladies whose wit and beauty exercised autocratic power during the pre-revolutionary days of France. They had all looked so charming in the portraits of the masters—La Pompadour, Maintenon, Du Barry and the other immortelles of the Bourbon dynasty. The pictures had been decided upon. Pompadour, the red-haired, lily-faced beauty, looking so wisely innocent, was in particular favor. One of the Josselyn girls whose Titian hair is of precisely the same tint as that which lured Louis XV, was chosen for the part. Immediately the Pompadour record was looked up. Pompadour, it will be remembered by those familiar with their history, was the first celebrity to acquire fame by a "corner" in wheat which she and the fond but financially acute king sold to the famine sufferers at fabulous prices, and it was she who kept the king happy by providing him with beautiful young girls, many of whom were kidnapped from the streets of Paris. Worse and more they read, and as they read the girls' horror increased. Never would they stand La Pompadour, not even for one night, in a make-believe picture fete. And so it went. Lady Hamilton, the most celebrated beauty of her time, came in for a terrible grilling that must have made the shade of the famous beauty flutter with mortification, provided she is more sensitive than she used to be. So she was no better than she should be? A beggar maid? Eloped with Nelson and hid in his ship at the battle of Trafalgar? Well, she was a game sport anyway, one irreverent pert young thing remarked. So the angel-faced Lady Hamilton was allowed to remain, but Du Barry, Pompadour and the other French hetairai were excluded.

A Beautiful Intruder

Nothing has created such a fever of excitement among the fashionables for a long time as these pictures. Every woman who has ever been flattered for her beauty of face and figure fancied she should be asked for the tableaux. One lady, a bride of some few seasons, and a very handsome woman, imagined that someone telephoned her to go before the august committee of ten to be posed in a picture suited to her beauty. She went, saying that the voice through the phone was so indistinct that she could not make out who it was that spoke. So there she was, looking as radiantly beautiful as a blush rose. The committee, one by one, went into another room. Confusion and surprise overwhelmed them. Who had sent for her? She didn't belong "to our set." What was to be done? It was a situation that taxed their combined mentality. Finally, one of the ladies remarked that the lady was probably a victim of auto-suggestion. This was voted an extremely clever remark. The tension relaxed and the committee returned to tell the lady that they would consider her name and inform her later on of the part she was to assume. The lady is still waiting to hear from the committee.

Gus Muenter's Romance

Before this month is two weeks old a pretty romance of the government service will be crowned by the marriage of Gus Muenter, the zealous collector of internal revenue at this port, to Miss Mary E. Alexander of Washington, a law clerk in the office of the solicitor of internal revenue. Gus Muenter who used to represent San Joaquin County in the State senate, where he won honorable distinction, and whose position now makes him a resident of San Francisco, is well known throughout this State as a most capable young public servant. His bride-to-be is a most remarkable woman. She has been characterized by Secretary of State Knox as one of the three best women lawyers of the country. Miss Alexander entered the government service in the national capital several years ago and her ability has rapidly carried her to her present position which was especially created for her by Congress on the recommendation of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Miss Alexander could not have occupied this responsible post had she not made a special study of law after entering the federal service. Mr. Muenter met his bride for the first time two years ago when he went to Washington to present the government side of the sweet wine case which was then engaging the attention of winemakers in this State. The romance which began then will reach the climax to which all such romances happily tend when the marriage will be celebrated in the home of one of Miss Alexander's relatives in Philadelphia on April 12. Miss Alexander is described as a woman of charming personality who, despite her public career, is devoted to domesticity. She is of a studious turn and is mistress of several languages. Congratulations have been showered upon Mr. Muenter since his engagement was made public.

Madeline McKissick's Trouble

From army friends I hear that it is quite probable that a court martial will result from the suicide of Lieutenant Clarence Janney, the husband of Madeline McKissick, formerly of this city. Her friends here will be very sorry to hear this, as there has already been scandal enough over the affair. Lieutenant Janney, it will be recalled, killed himself at the home of Lieutenant-Colonel Robert F. Ames at Fort William McKinley in Manila. His suicide came at the end of a dinner party at which the lieutenant and his wife had been guests. A silver champagne cooler was the cause of the quarrel which led to Janney's suicide. The cooler originally belonged to him, but seems to have been given by Mrs. Janney to Lieutenant-Colonel Ames who was of the Twelfth Infantry, the regiment of her husband. Janney recognized the cooler during the dinner and upbraided his wife for having given it away. He insisted that she apologize to him and she did so, the dinner being resumed. A little later, however, he left the room and returned with a revolver, killing himself in the presence of his wife and host. An army board investigated the facts, making a report to Major-General Carter, in command of the Department of Luzon. The general returned the report to the members of the board with the request that they secure additional testimony covering certain features of the case. From this it has been inferred that a court martial is contemplated.

The King and Mrs. Higgins

From a knowing correspondent in the foggy capital I learn that that carefully enclosed section of London society which is composed of King Edward, his bosom friend Mrs. Keppel and a few initiates in the secrets of Grosvenor Place (and which decidedly does not include the Queen), is all agog over the royal recognition recently extended to Mrs. Harry Higgins. Mrs. Higgins, as we must all hasten to know, now that she has been gilded by the rays of regal favor, was formerly Mrs. William Lawrence Breese of New York. Must I identify her more particularly? Well, she is the mother of Lady Allstair Innes-Ker and of course we all know who she is. It was at a dinner party given by Lady Savile that the king showed his pleasure in the society of Mrs. Higgins. It was a small and select gathering and needless to say, Mrs. Keppel was there. Mrs. Keppel is always at the dinner parties favored by the king. Edward won't go unless Mrs. Keppel is invited. Etiquette demands that the king and Mrs. Keppel be left rather alone for the breathing spell between dinner and bridge, but on this occasion the king called Mrs. Higgins to the ottoman where he and Mrs. Keppel were reclining and engaged her in conversation. For more than an hour Mrs. Higgins sat at the right hand of the king and conversed while Mrs. Keppel sat at his left in silence. Then he invited Mrs. Higgins to be his partner at bridge and though she is a very poor player and dreaded the ordeal, luck favored her and her royal partner and they won right along. It was a great evening and as a result of the distinction conferred on her Mrs. Higgins has become a somebody in Mayfair and Belgravia has taken note of her existence. Her gowns are now described in the papers whenever she goes out. We may expect to see her photographed with the king at Carlsbad or Biarritz one of these days. On a conservative estimate there are one thousand American women in London who would like to be Mrs. Harry Higgins.

A Berkeley Wedding

One of the most interesting social events of the week was the wedding of Miss Amanda Troplong of Berkeley to Mr. Grant Gordon, well known as the circulation manager of Sunset Magazine. The ceremony was performed on Wednesday morning in St. Mark's Episcopal Church in the college town. The bride who is a charmingly petite brunette wore an empire gown en train of cotele satin, trimmed in rare lace and draped in mousseline de soie, the veil caught up with orange blossoms from the groom's Southern home. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and tulle and wore a necklace of pearls, the gift of her mother. The bride was attended by Miss Ethel McConnell as maid of honor and by Miss Claire Cole and Miss Caroline Koford as bridesmaids, the latter wearing gowns of pale blue messaline trimmed in silver and carrying shower bouquets of pink bride's roses. The bride was given away by her mother, Mrs. Troplong, who was gowned in pale grey, broadcloth and wore orchids. The groom was attended by Mr. Dan S. Hammack of Los Angeles; the ushers were Mr. Nels Kinell, Dr. Albert Home and Mr. Harold Pitchford. After the wedding the bridal couple departed for a tour of Southern California. They will be at home after April 15 at 2501 Chilton Way, Berekeley. The bride is the daughter of the late Justice Octavius B. Troplong, formerly of the Philippine Bench, and Mrs. Emma D. Troplong of Berkeley.

"The Pipe of Desire"

Miss Margaret Kemble will give an interpretative study of Frederick Converse's "The Pipe of Desire" at the Hotel St. Francis on Monday afternoon at three o'clock. Miss Kemble's interpretative studies have been deservedly popular during the past season on account of their sound criticism and informing exposition of the latest musical tendencies. Hitherto she has dealt with European composers, but Frederick Converse is an American, a musical professor of Harvard, and what Miss Kemble has to say of his much discussed work will undoubtedly be more interesting on that account. "The Pipe of Desire" was staged at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York for the first time last month. Since that time the critics have been busy with it and musical students of this city will hail the opportunity to hear it analyzed by so sympathetic a musician as Miss Kemble.

An Interesting Engagement

An engagement which will come as a pleasant surprise is that of Lieutenant George Patton, U. S. A., now stationed at Fort Sheridan, and Miss Beatrice Ayer of Boston, daughter of prominent and wealthy people of that city. Lieutenant Patton is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. George Patton of Pasadena, nephew of Mrs. J. de Barth Shorb of this city and cousin of those interesting matrons, Mrs. Carroll Buck, Mrs. John Murtagh and Mrs. James King Steele. Another cousin, Miss Ethel Shorb, is at present in Rome. Lieutenant Patton graduated last June at West Point with high honors. As yet no details have been received in regard to the wedding, but it will take place early in June.

Cap and Bells at the Cliff House

The sixth anniversary breakfast of about one hundred members and guests of the Cap and Bells Club took place at the Cliff House on Monday, March 28. Mrs. M. O. Austin, president of the club, made an address of welcome; and Mrs. Glenn C. Barnhart acted as toastmistress. Responses were made by the members in original rhyme; the subjects of the toasts being: Clubs, present, past, future; Aviation, Halley's Comet; Audibon Society; Progressive Woman; Anti-Noise Ordinance. The following members responded: Mesdames Dugan, Hebbard, F. L. Coburn, Helen Heinsch, Abbie Edwards, L. L. Gage, F. S. Samuels, E. P. Heald, L. D. Foster, Helen Barker, D. E. East. Mrs. U. Grant Bartlett and Mrs. Emil Blankenburg rendered beautiful selections in both solo and duet, accompanied by Mrs. Swan. The affair was one of the pleasantest ever given by the club.

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. Charles Kohler of Stockton is visiting her grand children, Mrs. Pierre Moore and Miss Sidney Davis on Scott street. Miss Sidney Davis will soon leave for the East on a visit to her cousin, Mrs. Warren Childs of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Whitney with Miss Whitney and Miss Shaw, all of Brooklyn, are spending a few weeks at the Vendome, San Jose.

Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Huston with Miss Blanche Huston of Portland stopped over for a few days at the Vendome on their way home.

Mr. Ralph J. Cebian went down to the Vendome for the week end to visit his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cebian.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Krause, Miss Dorethy Krause and Mr. G. H. Krause have taken apartments at the Vendome for the season. Mr. Krause is a banker of Colorado Springs.

Polo on the Potter Country Club grounds made that point a center of attraction on Saturday afternoon, many staying for tea afterwards. Mrs. David Clark was of these, giving a "tea party" for four friends. Among other were Mr. Julian B. Haswell and a couple of friends; Mrs. Charles Perkins who had a party of five; a little group of which Mrs. Hussy of Miramar was the pretty hostess; and Mr. Andrew Kerr who had five or six people with him. Prior to the game a luncheon was given at the club by Mrs. James H. Bishop.

Mr. Edwin Gould and his party, including Mrs. Gould and their two sons, Edwin Gould Jr. and Frank Miller Gould, also Mrs. Gould's mother, Mrs. George F. Shrady, Mrs. C. E. French, Mrs. R. E. Coykendall and Phillip H. Fraser, arrived in a private car "Dixie" at the Porter recently. Mr. Gould is a son of the late Jay Gould, and brother of George J. Gould. They will remain for some time.

Mr. Seward Webb has again taken apartments at the Potter this season. Mr. Webb who is of the Vanderbilt family, is a great railroad man and is partial to the charms of this resort.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Henderson of Elko, Nevada, who have been making an extended tour of the Southland have returned to their apartments at the Fairmont. Mr. Henderson is

Luxuriousness of Life

Is best attained by alternation of country and city delights. How much more thrilling are the lights, crowds and gayety of the city when you come to them from your garden bounded, vine covered and beautiful home on the hills. And how charming that home seems again when you come back to it out of the wearysome noises of traffic, clanger of street cars, and all the dirt and smells of the dusty city. That is why so many people are seeking homes on the lovely hill slopes of the

Mrs. Cuyler Lee of San Francisco is at Del Monte for a short visit.

Mrs. Bronte M. Aikens returned during the week from an enjoyable visit to her sister, Mrs. John G. Kirchen at Tonopah.

Mrs. Carrie Borrowe will leave this week for Arizona on a visit to her brother, Daniel Bosquie, who is superintendent of one of the largest mines in Arizona.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Foster and their daughters, Misses Marie, Louise and Enid, who have been passing the winter in San Francisco have returned to their beautiful country home, the "Hacienda," in Ross Valley.

Mrs. Lilly Layman will arrive in this city early in May on a short visit. Mrs. Layman will be remembered as Miss Lillie Thompkins, prominent in the early day exclusive set. Mrs. Layman is now traveling in India.

Mrs. George Sperry will leave next month for Alta in the Sierras where she will spend the summer.

The Misses Marion and Elsie Everson of Oakland will soon leave for a lengthy tour abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Adams Blackmer have taken a cottage in Burlingame for the summer.

Mrs. E. Walton Hedges who is at present in Paris will leave in the middle of April for Carlsbad where she will remain several weeks.

Mrs. Wellington Gregg and her interesting daughters, the Misses Enid and Ethel, will leave this month for a lengthy tour abroad. Miss Elyse Schultz, the intimate friend of Miss Enid Gregg, will accompany the Greggs as Miss Enid's guest.

Mrs. Hayter Reed, wife of the general manager of hotels of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, was a guest of the Palace, stopping for a few days in San Francisco en route to her home.

Dr. Ernest Barry is at Del Monte for a few weeks of rest and quiet and finds it an ideal spot for that purpose.

Admiral Uriel Sebree went down from the city last week with Horace G. Platt and is visiting one of his relatives, Mrs. John M. Gilkeson, who has had apartments at Del Monte during most of the winter.

One of the most prominent business men and most expert golfers of Denver, Mr. Fred W. McCartney, is at Del Monte for several weeks' sport on the links.

Several dinner parties made Sunday an interesting day at the Hotel Victoria. Among those entertaining on that day were Mrs. J. M. Vance, Mrs. F. G. Atkinson, Mrs. J. O. B. Gunn and Mrs. A. F. Dixon.

Mrs. B. N. Rowley entertained at luncheon on Monday, a half dozen friends sharing her hospitality at the Victoria.

Mrs. A. F. Thane had a party of friends as her guests for dinner on Sunday evening at the Hotel Victoria.

A party of eastern men, representing the United Manufacturers of Automobiles, are guests at the Hotel Victoria during their stay in town. The group includes E. F. Osgood, E. H. Clark, R. W. Potter, Bert Stevens, E. W. Robinson and P. V. Dowling.

IF IT WERE YOU?

¶ People never object to getting things cheaper. Cost of living has increased in recent years. ¶ But gas and electricity have grown cheaper. ¶ They are generally produced by the so-called public-service concern, which has its selling rates fixed by law. The concern must show the supervisors its books and figures. ¶ Thus they become public, only the public never bothers to look. ¶ To reduce the rate is always easy; it pleases tens of thousands, hurts but a few! ¶ But to force one to sell at less than a reasonable income from an investment---that is where any other business would protest.

Stage

Otis Skinner in "Your Humble Servant"

In theatregoers who know and care about acting in its highest and truest forms the announcement of Otis Skinner's engagement at the Columbia Theatre next Monday in his latest New York success ought to excite a thrill of enthusiasm. Otis Skinner is acknowledged to be an exceedingly fine actor, and the high position he holds in the esteem of the public has been achieved by years of conscientious and devoted labor. His new play promises to be a genuine novelty. It comes from the pens of Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson and it is described as a realistic picture of stage life of the present day. The title, "Your Humble Servant," indicates the nature of the leading role. Mr. Skinner will appear as "a servant of the public," a touring actor who heads one of those itinerant troupes which visit the small towns and are never heard of in the big cities. "Your Humble Servant" is said to be unique in theme and treatment and Otis Skinner has been provided with a part written in an exceptionally happy vein. It has a touch of poetry and a tincture of philosophy. His leading woman this season is Miss Izetta Jewel who has been especially chosen for the exacting role of Margaret. The rest of the supporting company is of the calibre that may always be expected of an organization bearing the Frohman trademark. Seats are now on sale. A special matinee will be given Wednesday when the best seats are to be $1.50.

Maud Allan, the Great Dancer

Maud Allan, the San Francisco girl whose art as an interpreter of masterpieces of music by means of the dance has given her a world-wide fame and who is said to be the very highest paid performer on the stage with the exception, possibly, of five or six operatic artists, is announced for four performances during the coming week at the Garrick, the dates being next Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights, April 5, 7 and 8, and Sunday afternoon, April 10. As the musical portion of the entertainment is of the highest importance Managers Will Greenbaum and Martin Beck who are risking a small fortune in providing this entertainment for our music and art loving public, have engaged the finest and largest orchestra that has ever played in a theatre in this city, aside from the high priced operatic performances. Half a hundred of our best instrumentalists under Paul Steindorff will assist Miss Allan, besides playing some beautiful selections between the star's dances. The whole entertainment will be of the dignity of a grand symphony concert with Miss Allan's marvelous interpretative work as a special attraction.

May Robson Coming

That delightful and extremely funny comedy, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," which May Robson offered at the Garden Theatre in New York two seasons ago, will be the attraction that will reopen the Van Ness Theatre on Monday night, April 11, remaining there for two weeks only. Since her New York engagement Miss Robson has visited all the principal cities of the Pacific Coast, where she has duplicated her metropolitan success in every particular. Of the play it may be said that it contains just the proper mingling of the grave and the gay, just enough pathos and humor to make it interesting. Aunt Mary keeps you laughing almost the entire evening.

The Burton Holmes Travelogues

The sale of seats for course tickets for the Burton Holmes Travelogues will open Monday morning at Sherman, Clay & Co's and on Thursday the seats for single lectures will be offered. No more interesting, beautiful and at the same time instructive form of entertainment than these Travelogues could be imagined. For sixteen years they have crowded the Lyceum Theatre in New York every Lenten season and have met with similar success in many other big cities of the East. The smaller towns are rarely visited, as the demand for the entertainments is so great in the principal cities. This will be the fith series that Manager Will Greenbaum has brought to San Francisco. Wright Kramer, the eminent young actor and fellow traveler of Burton Holmes, will do the talking, but the beautifully colored views and the thousands of feet of original motion pictures are what really tell the tales. The subjects this year give scope for some rare photography and colorings. Here is the list: "Our Own Hawaii," "New Japan of Today," "Old Japan of Today," "Java, the Eden of the Dutch Indies," and "More About Paris."

Another Week of "Salvation Nell"

"Salvation Nell" which is announced for a second week at the Alcazar, commencing next Monday evening, has scored one of the most emphatic successes in the annals of that house. The universal appeal of the theme of the play, the realistic setting with which it is invested by the Alcazar management and the high order of interpretative power which the principal players have brought to bear upon it combine to make it a most memorable production. In this great dramatic venture the prestige of the Alcazar company is not only maintained, but enchanced. Evelyn Vaughan's conception of the scrubwoman is at once many-sided, human and marvelously wrought. John Ince, as Jim Platt, sacrifices everything to his art and presents a character repellent in its brutality, yet fascinating in its realism.

OTIS SKINNER
In "Your Humble Servant" at the Columbia Theatre

MAUD ALLAN AS "SALOME"

In this part the California dancer is said to outstrip all rivals.

Indeed hardly a flaw is apparent in the big cast. Not one lay figure is noticeable among the half-hundred players. Of the scenic accessories there is only one opinion—they eclipse those of the original production.

Maud Powell's Farewell Concert

Maud Powell, one of the very greatest violinists that ever visited this city and an artist whose playing arouses her hearers to the highest pitch of enthusiasm at every concert, will give her farewell program at the Garrick this Sunday afternoon, April 3, at 2:30 p. m., assisted by Waldemar Liachowsky, by far the best accompanist that any violinist has brought us since Ysaye gave us Lachaume. The program is an exceptionally beautiful and interesting one and includes the rare old Italian "Sonata" by Locatelli, the ever welcome Mendelssohn "Concerto," two unaccompanied "Etudes," one by Fiorillo and the other by Paganini, and a group of smaller but brilliant gems, such as the Gluck "Air," one of Mozart's quaint "German Dances," Hubay's characteristic "Zephyr" and the brilliant "Polonaise" in D by Wieniawski. In addition to all this Mme. Powell has consented to add to the offering the two Debussy gems with which she made such a success at the St. Francis Musical Art Society. One of these called "The Golliwaog's Cake Walk" is quite the funniest novelty that this French modern has given us.

Promising Acts at the Orpheum

A delightful musical comedy condensed into a twenty-five minute sketch, but retaining all the brilliancy of a big production, is "The Leading Lady," which will be presented for the first time in this city at the Orpheum next week. The principal roles are entrusted to Marguerite Haney, a pretty vivacious soubrette who scored a hit in "Paradise Alley," and two clever London comedians, Ralph Lynn and Ed. Coleman. To back them up is a sextette of pretty Broadway show girls who introduce a number of catchy songs. The company carries its own stage setting, a beautiful scene representing the interior of one of New York's magnificent hotels. Edwin Holt, one of the best actors on the American stage, will return after an absence approximating a year and a half in George Ade's delightful comedy, "The Mayor and the Manicure," which is on record as one of the greatest hits of its kind in vaudeville. Charles F.

ANOTHER OF THE ALLAN DANCES

The dancer has evolved an interpretation of the "Spring Song" which is said to be inspiring.

Semon will introduce next week a comedy act that is not only bewilderingly original but which fairly bubbles over with genuine fun. T. Roy Barnes and Bessie Crawford will appear in a breezy skit entitled, "The Patent Fakir and the Lady," which abounds in melody and comedy. Next week will be the last of Stelling and Revell, Nonette, Witt's Girls from Melody Lane, and Mlle. M. Corio and Signor Bartoletti in their original Apache dance "La Petite Gosse."

The Third Sunday "Pop" Concert

The third of the Sunday "Pop" concerts by Will Greenbaum's Lyric Quartet is announced for Sunday, April 10, at Kohler and Chase Hall. Mr. Allan Bier, a young San Francisco pianist, will make his debut on this occasion, playing the difficult piano part in a Schumann "Quartet." The soloist will be Miss Mary Pasmore, the first violin of the quartet, who will introduce to us the recently discovered "Concerto" by Hayden in which she will be assisted by Miss Harriet Pasmore at the piano. The string quartet of the afternoon will be one of Schubert's posthumous works.

Dr. Pauline at the Savoy

"As the Sun Went Down," with Estha Williams and an excellent company, will be presented for the last times at the Savoy this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee one of the world's most fascinating acts will be offered. This is the great Pauline, the wonderful French scientist whose demonstrations of the superiority of mind over matter have been the talk not only of vaudeville lovers of this country and Europe, but also of physicians and psychologists in every city where he has appeared. Pauline is making his first trip to the west, but every one should know of him for he has been the subject of many magazine and newspaper stories for the last year. It is doubtful if any other hypnotist has ever received the publicity and attention given to Dr. Pauline. He is a French physician, graduate and degree holder of many European medical schools, a student of the great Charcot of Paris and is now recognized by medical men as the most advanced investigator into the science of hypnotism and auto-suggestion in the world. Pauline has a personality that defies description. He wins his audience the moment he appears. Pauline will appear at the Savoy with a high-class company of vaudeville artists and during his engagement there will be a matinee every day, when the prices will be half of those at night.

The Flonzaley Quartet

The Flonzaley Quartet of Switzerland is unique in that it is the only organization of the kind in the world, the members of which devote their entire time to the perfecting of their ensemble playing. For eight years there has never been a change in the personelle of the quartet and no member has ever played with an orchestra, appeared as a soloist or given a lesson since the first day the organization was founded. This "together" work must be heard to be even faintly appreciated. Greenbaum brings the attraction here to open April 17..

"Message From Mars" at Ye Liberty

The offering of the stock company at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, for the week commencing next Monday evening will be "A Message from Mars," the comedy written by Richard Ganthony which has been one of the most successful plays in England or the United States during the last decade. Its story is a novel one, for as his hero the author has chosen the most selfish man to be found upon earth. He advanced a step or two in astronomy at the same time and introduced a messenger from the planet Mars to teach the man of the earth a lesson in self-restraint and to convey to him the necessity of being considerate of others. The play has the reputation of being, not only interesting and amusing, but remarkable for its great strength in teaching a moral. "A Message from Mars" has never been seen at popular prices across the bay before, so it should be a strong attraction at Ye Liberty. After one week of the comedy "The Squaw Man" will be revived.

In the Limelight

William Collier made quite a hit in New York recently with a pamphlet which he called "Collier's Weakly." The comedian smashed many a theatrical illusion by his pointed but amusing editorials and news items.

Mrs. Fiske will come to San Francisco this season with her new plays. One of them is Ibsen's "The Pillars of Society," which she has just presented in New York.

Maude Adams will be here in the latter part of June with her Barrie play entitled "What Every Woman Knows."

Henry Woodruff has made quite a big hit in his new musical play called "The Prince of Tonight."

The final performance of "The Round-Up" will be given at the Columbia Theatre this Sunday night.

Grace George will shortly make her appearance at the Columbia in her new play "A Woman's Way." From all accounts Miss George has the best comedy vehicle of her brilliant career.

San Francisco has already seen two of the great hits by the authors who are responsible for Otis Skinner's new play, "Your Humble Servant." They were "Cameo Kirby" and "The Man from Home."

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—Very little has occurred in Wall street during the recent week to affect security values; in fact the fluctuations in the leading securities have been comparatively narrow, representing chiefly the operations of the professional talent. The holding aloof from the market by banking syndicates has been largely the result of a desire to await the further adjudication of labor difficulties on our railways; also the turn of events in the London monetary situation, which has become somewhat of a menace to the speculation in the chief security of the world. The raising of the Bank of England rate to four per cent may be followed by a further advance to four and one-half per cent the coming week and while such an advance is not likely to affect us much here, it would produce some unsettlement in the speculative position of the market. Railway tonnage is now moving freely and earnings reported in the recent week shows large increases in most instances. Traffic officials are looking for heavier business in the present season; hence we find conditions sound as concerns the future of securities and higher prices should be noted later on.

Wheat—Weather and crop damage reports from the wheat belt have overshadowed everything else and have kept the trade much stirred up. High winds and continued dry weather in the Southwest and dry weather most of the time in the entire winter belt have slightly increase the damage thus far sustained by winter wheat. That the trade does not consider drought a serious condition as yet is plainly evident from the slight net gains in prices and the very modest increase in speculative interest in the markets. Moreover, until more unanimous reports are received regarding the area damaged, it will be hard to figure out anything greater than very moderate acreage losses on the winter wheat area seeded for the crop of 1910.

Corn—Considerable improvement has been seen during the past week in the corn situation. As a matter of fact this was about the only direction for it to go. Cash and May delivery has improved more than the distant months, the shipping demand has grown somewhat better and the offerings from the interior, as is proper when farm operations are in full blast at this season of the year, have been much reduced.

Cotton—Until the last day or two the cotton market has been quite dull but always firm, business until Monday seemingly being limited to the room traders. The congestion in the nearby months is so pronounced and the feeling is one of such great uncertainty regarding the outcome of the manipulation that it was, and is, generally checking business. In this respect the position is a natural one, as it is the result of manipulation. What the outcome will be on these near months is extremely problematical. The bull position is backed, it is stated, by practically unlimited money and by great experience. The bear side is also a wealthy one and the moving of immense lines of cotton from New York and to New York simply shows how serious the fight is. The reports from the new crop are beginning to overshadow the news regarding demand and consumption. The weather map is being studied with great care, particularly the conditions in Texas. The tenor of all advices, aside from there being no rain, appears to be that excellent progress is being made in field work and our former statements of increased acreage seems to have been in no way exaggerated. No doubt this protracted dry spell in Texas, in connection with the hardening of prices in the spot market, is having the effect of putting the new crop at such a high level of prices. Yet we maintain that one good soaking rain will cause an immediate drop of maybe one cent. And our position in regard to the ultimate prices of the new crop for earlier months—October and November—is still maintained and we would go short at the present price, and ride.

Copper—Copper producers and selling agencies are going through a dull period. Few sales are being made. Transactions last week were reported below 13 cents. The large selling agencies and consumers show no disposition to sell metal at concessions, though there was reported one sale of two million pounds of metal for a western wire concern at thirteen and one-half cents and the contract called for delivery in the early part of May. The Anaconda Copper Company last week voted to increase its capital stock from 1,200,000 to 6,000,000 shares. The amount of stock to be offered by the Anaconda companies for properties of other companies is as follows:

Boston & Montana C. C. & S. Mining Co.	1,200,000
Butte & Montana Cons. Mining Co.	300,000
Washoe Copper Company	380,000
Trenton Mining and Development Co.	120.000
Big Blackfoot Lumber Co.	300,000
Parrott Silver & Mining Co.	90,000
Diamond Coal & Coke Co.	100,000
Red Metal Mining Co.	500,000
Alice Gold & Silver Mining Co.	30.000
Making total issue with the original Anaconda	1,200,000
Total	4.220,000

The Amalgamated Copper Co. owns a majority of the Parrot stock and practically the whole of the stock of the other companies transferring their properties, with the exception of the whole of the stock of the Red Metal Co., and a majority of the stock of the Alice Company, owned by the Butte Coalition Mining Co. The Anaconda company will be the owning company and the Amalgamated the holding company. It is figured that the merged companies will have an ownership in the production of 275,000,000 pounds of copper and produce the metal at an average cost of nine cents per pound. This would bring an earning close to $10,000,000 a year. As a result of the introduction of economies made possible through the more unified operations, a saving of nearly $2,000.000 a year is anticipated. In regard to the action of the copper stock market the last few days, and the drop in prices which began with a break in the Boston and New York coppers on the report of Granby possibly passing its dividend and also that Granby's reserve stock was less than half of what had been reported, there is evidently more behind this slump in prices which has extended itself to almost as great a degree in the New York Stock Exchange metal stocks, than is shown on the surface. There is up to date no definite news. It may be a bear drive or even a fight among the powers that be. A few days should show the cause when we may look for prices founded more on intrinsic values. Until then we recommend a neutral position.

Local Securities—The local stock and bond market continues to maintain a steady tone without an abundance of trading or many real wide fluctuations. The principal movement for the past week or so has been in some of the more or less inactive listed stocks. City Electric on rumors of an increase in dividends has risen to new high records and also Northern California Power and Pacific Lighting stocks have been in demand at advances. Associated Oil has been rather pegged around $50 as has Spring Valley Water around $49. Alaska Packers has increased a fraction in price to above $90. Hawaiian Sugars stocks and the issues of the Pacific Gas & Electric and Pacific Telephone companies have remained practically unchanged. Among the listed bonds no great changes are shown with the principal activity in Associated Oil 5s, California Gas & Electric 5s, City Electric 5s, Northern California Power Con. 5s, Peoples Water 5s, Pacific Telephone 5s, Southern Pacific refunding 4s, Spring Valley 4s and United Railroads 4s.

Does Northborough Church, near Peterborough, contain Cromwell's bones? The only positive evidence to that effect is that of the nurse who saw the hearse containing them driven by night through Huntingdon, not stopping there, as she hoped and expected, but taken further north, and also that of the postboy who said he was paid the mileage fee to Northborough. There is no indication of them having gone so far north as Newbury Abbey, although a stone in the passage there says: "Under this stone rest the bones of Oliver Cromwell," etc., and the facts of Cromwell's widow coming to live here and being herself buried here are in favor of the persistent tradition in the parish that Cromwell was secretly buried here and another body substituted for his on the night that it lay at the Red Lion, Holborn.

It must be at least unpleasant to shoot at a target while snakes are crawling around one's legs, yet that is what the bluejackets in the Philippines have been doing, according to an official report to the Navy Department. Ensign Morrison, who conducted the target practice of the men on the Callao at the naval range at Olongapo, says that it is the most difficult range that can be imagined and when the men were not running through water ankle deep or lying down in two inches of soft red mud, they were beset with insects and reptiles, and when the grounds were dry the timekeepers of the skirmish runs were busy killing the snakes that were crawling around the men lying on the ground firing at the targets. Three typhoons also added an element of excitement and uncertainty while the practice was going on.

Whenever the great Australian musk duck utters its charactteristic deep toned note it at the same time throws up a jet of water on each side of its body by the action of its feet. On one occasion a wounded blue waterhen was observed making desperate efforts to escape the attack of a hawk. Gradually the waterhen approached a musk duck which was swimming placidly in the neighborhood, and when it got close enough sought protection by dodging first on one and then on the other side of the duck. After a few moments the latter began to take an active part in the combat by uttering its loud note every time the hawk made a stoop at the waterhen, at the same moment splashing up a backwardly directed jet of water in the eyes of the aggressor. Three times the hawk received a douche, after which it retired from the combat, leaving both the duck and waterhen in peace. This curious action is not peculiar to the Australian musk duck, but is a regular habit with our common coot when attacked or threatened by a bird of prey; with this difference, that a number of coots will act in concert and make a great splashing with their wings, which has the effect of driving their common enemy away.

The Editor in His Anecdotage

The Scotch of It

Nothing galls the natural pride of the true-blue Scotchman more than to have his country overlooked. A striking instance of this feeling is said to have occurred at the battle of Trafalgar. Two Scotchmen, messmates and bosom cronies, happened to be stationed near each other when the celebrated signal was given from Admiral Nelson's ship: "England expects every man to do his duty." "Not a word about poor Scotland," dolefully remarked Donald. His friend cocked his eye and, turning to his companion, said: "Man, Donald, Scotland kens weel eneuch that nae son o' hers needs to be tell't to dae his duty. That's just a hint to the Englishers."

Well Done

On old Carlisle bridge in Dublin there used to be a fruit stall kept by Biddy, the apple woman, who was a well-known figure to all passers-by. She had a ready tongue, and never did a verbal opponent retire with all the honors. An American visitor, who had heard rumors of her skill at fence, one day took up a watermelon displayed for sale and said, gravely: "You grow pretty small apples over here. In America we have them twice this size." Bridget looked up, coolly surveyed the joker from head to heels, and replied, in a tone of pity: "Ah, what for should I be wasting my breath to talk to wan that takes our gooseberries for apples!"

Unpardonable

When "Bob" Taylor was Governor of Tennessee he was noted for being as tender-hearted as a woman, and the way he pardoned out convicts was something awful. He was waited upon by a committee of the Legislature, who very flatly and in no uncertain way told him that this "wholesale pardoning must stop." "Gov'nor Bob" looked at the committee, tapped a bell, asked for his pardon clerk, and when he came said: "Make out pardons for every man in the penitentiary." The clerk bowed and withdrew. Then the Governor looked at the committee, who were staring as if they thought he was going mad. "Gentlemen," he said, finally, "I am Governor of Tennessee, and if this committee or any other ever again seeks to interfere with my constitutional right to pardon, I'll sign every one of these pardons which the clerk is making out. Good morning."

Working by the Day

John D. Rockefeller Jr. was talking to his Sunday-school class about industry.

"Our industry," he said, with a faint smile, "should not be of such a nature that the remark once applied to a certain Scot could ever be applied to us.

"I'll tell you what the remark I allude to was.

"Two old farmers were walking down a road near Dunfermline when one of them pointed to a distant field and said, shading his eyes from the sun:

"'That figure over there—I wonder if it's a scarecrow.'

"He stopped and regarded the figure very attentively for a space. Then he concluded, in a satisfied tone:

"'Yes, it's not moving. It must be a scarecrow.'

"But the other farmer had sharper eyes and a better understanding, maybe, of certain types of human nature.

"'No,' he said dryly; 'no, it's not a scarecrow. It's a man working by the day.'"

A DAINTY TOILET ARTICLE

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the Theatre, attending Receptions, when shopping, while traveling and on all occasions should carry in her purse a booklet of Gouraud's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes.

It removes dirt, soot and grease from the face, imparting a cool delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of Five Cents in stamps or coin. F. T. Hopkins, 37 Great Jones Street, New York.

Letters

"By the Bay"

Another of the numerous—one might almost say innumerable—pretty booklets from the press of the Elder Company is entitled "By the Bay." Its contents consist of short poems, none more than the small page in length, and all or nearly all suggested by the varying aspects of the bay and its surroundings. They are the work of Lucia Etta Loring Smith, and the frontispiece is from a bas relief modeled by Bradetta L. Smith. The edition is limited to two hundred and fifty copies, and the excellent taste and workmanship of the mechanical production will make it an appreciated addition to any one's store of "little" books.

An Interesting History

"Moore's History of the States, United and Otherwise," is less of a history than a running comment on the events which have occurred within the boundaries of this country since Columbus "found it when he was not looking for it and died without knowing he had found it." The volume makes the easiest kind of reading, hence it goes without saying that the composition is the reverse of slipshod, but one who takes it up under the impression that it is going to prove a continuous performance of irreverence and irresponsible joking is apt to discover very soon that there is keen insight and unsparing honesty behind the criticism. Judge Charles F. Moore has had the good taste to avoid stirring up sectional issues and resurrecting ghosts. Fully one-half of the volume is devoted to the events since the accession of McKinley to the presidency, probably covering the period of which the author is competent to speak by reason of personal observation and participation, and a considerable portion of that to our toy war with Spain, or, as he prefers, the Spanish War, since to speak of it as war against Spain would imply a contest and everyone knows there was no contest. The reign of Theodore Roosevelt is the title of the chapter devoted to the administration of the Terrible Teddy, an indication of the trenchant nature of his comments thereon. The "History" is brought down to date, with the debate over the tariff and the discussion of the North Pole controversy. While deserving of the same kind and quantity of appreciation as is given to Irving's "Knickerbocker," this is hardly the thing to put into the hands of the half-baked pupils of our athletic clubs, else it will be but too pat to fulfill its mission as set forth in the preface, that of providing "respectable authority for the misstatement of facts so frequently indulged in by writers and public speakers." Though the reader is cautioned that "Who quotes from its pages must do so at his own risk, for no statement herein is guaranteed by the author," the fact that a remark has once made its appearance in type is but too apt to constitute authority. Young America, who is fairly conversant with the doings of the James boys and blissfully ignorant of the existence of the British monarchs of that name, may, for example, swallow without mastication the whimsical connection of Jamestown, the James river and Jesse James. Moore's History is jam with a pill concealed in it. You may elude the pill but you cannot escape the sweatmeat. Published by the Neale Company.

"The Faith Healer"

William Vaughan Moody's play, "The Faith Healer," probably acts better than it reads, for the book version is not convincing. The story is familiar enough to playgoers. A mysterious stranger makes his appearance in a rural neighborhood and is put up temporarily at a farm house one of the inmates of which is a bed-ridden paralytic. Michaelis believes that he possesses the power of curing disease through faith and exercises his belief with the sick woman who is enabled to rise and walk without assistance. The working of the seeming miracle converts the household, half of whom had at first no confidence in the claim, but "seeing is believing." The rumor that the faith healer was at the farm is sufficient to gather a concourse of the lame, the halt and the blind who constitute almost a mob clamoring for relief of their own disabilities and severely testing the accommodations of the farmstead. Attendant on the sick woman is a clergyman and a regularly graduated and licenced physician, each of whom, in his own way deprecates and belittles the ministrations of the healer who, at first so confident in his powers, now, at a critical moment, has doubts of himself because he has fallen in love with a young girl of the household and feels that he has been tempted aside from his high calling. Rhoda, who has only lately joined the family of her relatives, recognizes in Dr. Littlefield her lover of a former time, and Littlefield signifies his intention of renewing the siege to her heart. The cruical test is the demand of a youth mother that her baby, all but dead, shall be restored to health. Dr. Littlefield, though willing to do what he can for the sick child, believes that aid has been sought too late, but Michaelis, encouraged by Rhoda, regains his own faith in his power, the child recovers, Rhoda is convinced beyond doubt, the flippant Littlefield and the clergyman are route, and the action having now reached the dawn of Eastern morning the healed paralytic goes out to the assembled multitude, a lily in her hand, to testify to the undoubted reality of her cure and the greatness of the healer. No doubt, with suitable stage accessories and good acting "The Faith Healer" can hold it place on the boards but in book form it would appear to be attractive chiefly to those practical students of the drama who are contemplating going and doing likewise. Transportation Evolution

From Red Man's Express to the "Electric" Victoria or Coupe.

The earliest mode of transportation in this country was that which the Pilgrim Fathers found the Indians using when the ponies of the latter dragged two long poles upon which were tied the red man's tepees and provisions.

From this down through the periods of the ox-cart, the two-wheeled chaise, of which the late Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes sings so eloquently, to the Brewster buggy and the automobile, seems but a hurried step in the great process of transportation evolution.

In this procession of marvelous development some one car must necessarily blaze the way, and it is not speaking disparagingly of the others to refer to them as "trailers."

As the records of electric car performances plainly point, the "Babcock" is the car which has led the van from every standpoint of efficiency, safety, luxury and economy. It combines the grace, elegance and luxury of this type of vehicle with the comfort and wear-resisting qualities which warrant the purchaser in pinning his faith to this particular make of "electric."

The purchaser should not be asked to buy "claims," but be offered only results accomplished by a car of standard equipment and stock battery.

In some instances, there have been foisted upon the public results gained by the use of specially prepared batteries and freak cars, and manufacturers were not honest enough to tell this fact. It is in this, perhaps, that the "Babcock" has won its meed of confidence at the hands of the public, for almost every record-making test has been accomplished by just the same kind of a car you would purchase if you choose from the Pioneer Automobile Company.

Send for the Artistic 1910 Babcock Catalogue, written by Elbert Hubbard, of special Roycroft Design, and printed at the Roycroft Printerie.

Auto Notes

C. E. Mathewson, Pacific Coast manager of The Diamond Rubber Co., is just in receipt of the actual figures covering every national and large automobile show in the United States for the 1910 season. Combining all the shows the totals give Diamond Tires 150 more sets than the next nearest competitor —an increase of 50 per cent over the lead had in the combined count of the year previous.

H. E. Doty, Pacific Coast manager of the White Company, has recently been informed that the City of Portland after trying out numerous makes purchased a White Gasoline car for the use of its Engineering Department.

Mr. G. A. Schelling of Santa Rosa has been appointed agent in that territory for the Ford cars. Mr. I. L. De Jongh, manager of the Standard Motor Car Co. who recently returned from a trip in the northern part of the State, reported that he made arrangements with Mr. Schelling to represent the Ford cars and he also ordered a carload of these machines to be shipped immediately to the new agent.

H. Hushbeck of Alameda recently purchased an Oakland "40" car, delivery of which he has just taken from S. G. Chapman.

Lewis Barnard, an auto enthusiast of Portland, Oregon, is touring California in a new White Gasoline car. He expresses himself well pleased with the machine which is running in fine order.

George B. Polhemus, San Jose agent for the Winton Motor Carriage Company, found last week very prosperous. As a consequence he has just called upon the Winton branch with orders for three cars.

Mr. E. L. Cutting, traveling representative for the Standard Motor Car Co., returned recently from a trip through Nevada and reported that he placed the agency for Ford cars with Mr. J. R. Bradley of Reno, Nevada. Mr. Cutting says: "There are not many cars being used in Reno, owing to the weather conditions. Still the motorists of the sage brush country expect a busy season." Bradley is expected to take a large number of Ford cars this year.

S. G. Chapman has been kept busy since his last shipment of cars arrived making deliveries. That the reputation enjoyed by both the Hupmobile and Oakland has become state wide is shown by the number of orders coming in from all parts of California. Among the recent deliveries are Hupmobiles to Roy Phelps of San Jose, Mrs. Morrison of San Jose, H. H. Shields of San Francisco and three to G. W. Hobson of Fresno. Oaklands "Forties" have gone to Dr. Wallace I. Terry of San Francisco, and J. H. Martin of Coalinga.

The automobile tire is largely responsible for the present development of the motor car, declares C. E. Mathewson, Pacific Coast manager of The Diamond Rubber Co. "One of the glaring omissions in nearly every story of the development of the automobile is the entire absence of mention of the part which the automobile tire has played and is still playing in its growth," he said. "Nevertheless, it is an incontrovertible fact that the modern automobile would have been utterly impossible of achievement without the simultaneous development of the tire to the present state of near perfection. The automobile tire is the true foundation of the automobile. When it was figured out that an air cushion should be provided to relieve the strain, it led to the single tube pneumatic tire, since the introduction of which the progress of the automobile has been magical down to the present age of the shoe and inner tube, with such modern luxuries as non-skids and demountable rims. With the present development of the automobile tire, it may well be said that it is possible to make the motor car joltless, jarless and vibrationless."

A few weeks back H. E. Doty, Pacific Coast manager of the White Company, shipped an order of five White cars to British Columbia, and now, after they have been thoroughly tried out so great is the satisfaction given, that a return order for fifteen cars has just been received by telegraph. "This," said Doty, "is the largest shipment ever made from San Francisco to British Columbia. Undoubtedly as I before predicted this season has opened up the White's biggest year in British Columbia, and in fact in the whole northwest."

Did you ever see a big man weighing over 200 pounds trying to get into a modern low-priced roadster and try to look comfortable? A. C. Wheelock, who sells Hudson cars in Fresno, California, always has an example to point out when this question is asked. E. O. Hall, the head of the Consolidated Canal Company of Fresno, is one of the most enthusiastic motor car drivers in that section. Mr. Hall weighs 230 pounds and stands 6 feet 3 inches in height. He covers an average of 100 miles every day with his Hudson car seven days in the week. This is over 35,000 miles a year which comes pretty close to the long distance record of any automobile driver. He believes the Hudson is one of the few cars comfortable enough to permit a man to drive this tremenduous mileage.

E. B. Waterman, Fresno agent for the Winton Motor Carriage Co., has just come to town to take delivery of a Winton "6" touring car. He also placed an order for a toy tonneau Winton which will be delivered to A. L. Dingley of Fresno.

H. E. Doty, Pacific Coast manager for the White Company, reports the shipment of an "0-0" White Steamer to George Brackett at Portland.

An enterprise, decidedly more extensive than anything of its kind before undertaken, has just been launched in Paris by the firm of Shephard and Mann. This company has recently purchased twenty 7 passenger touring cars ten of which are Chalmers and the remaining ten of foreign make. These cars are to be rented to European travelers for touring purposes. They are in charge of chauffeurs thoroughly acquainted with all the continental tours and experienced in the ways of frontier formalities, police regulations and customs requirements. Beside owning the twenty cars the firm controls the use of a great many more and are in a position to take care of a large amount of business. They have offices already established throughout Europe and the United States. The Pioneer Automobile Company is to care for their interests on this coast. The rates charged are $35.00 per day for travel in France and $5.00 extra for other countries. Ninety miles per day is allowed. For anything in excess of this a slight additional charge is made. The use of the Chalmers by this company significantly indicates the American made car's invasion of the European field.

"The East," said Wm. H. Durphy in a recent conversation, "is full of interesting instances of the superiority of motor driven commercial vehicles over the horse-drawn. Just prior to coming west I assisted in placing twenty-five Chase Wagons with the Ewert & Richter Storage and Transfer Co. of Davenport, Iowa. This is one of the genuinely big concerns and they have a stable of eighty-six head of horses. Shortly after beginning our demonstrations I happened into President Ewert's office and he handed me the following letter asking me if it would be of use to our company:

To Whom it May Concern: Having had my doubts about the commercial cars giving service even on our city streets, I had an opportunity today to try a Chase Motor Wagon on a hurry special delivery of a piano for the Robert Smallfield Piano House, the piano being for Mr. Ed. Meirer, living two miles west of Eldridge, Iowa. Weight of load: Piano 1,000 pounds; myself and Mr. Durphy, sales manager, 475 pounds; total 1,475 pounds. We left at 9:10, arriving at 10:20; the return trip we made in 40 minutes, making our actual running time for the twenty-two miles less than two hours. The roads were very rough and rutty which I consider a splendid test, yet the motor never faltered and there was no hitch in the entire trip. It would have taken a pair of horses fully seven hours to make this trip. I am satisfied that the Chase wagon will pull its load over any roads that are traveled by horses, and that it is more economical to keep.

Waiter, have you Gorgonzola cheese?
Yes, sir.
Is it nice and white?
Yes, sir, very white.
And good and hard in the middle?
Yes, indeed, sir, stone hard in the middle.
Thanks; I don't want it. Gorgonzola ought to be green and soft.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY PETITION FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 7806, Dept. 9, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of SARAH S. NORTON, Deceased.

EDWARD S. NORTON, administrator of the estate of Sarah S. Norton, also known as Sarah Saxe Norton, having presented to this Court and filed herein his duly verified petition praying for an order of this Court authorizing and directing the said administrator to sell, at private sale, an undivided one-quarter interest in certain real property situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Southwesterly line of Spear Street, distant thereon two hundred and twenty-nine (229) feet and two (2) inches Southeasterly from the corner formed by the point of intersection of the Southeasterly line of Howard Street with the Southwesterly line of Spear Street, running thence Southeasterly and along said Southwesterly line of Spear Street forty-five (45) feet and ten (10) inches; thence at a right angle Southwesterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at a right angle Northwesterly forty-five (45) feet and ten (10) inches, and thence at a right angle Northeasterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being Beach and Water Lot No. 752.

And good cause appearing therefor,

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in said estate show cause, if any they have, before this Court on Monday, the 25th day of April, 1910, at the hour of ten (10) o'clock a. m. at the Courtroom of this Court, Department 9 thereof, in the Grant Building at the corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, why the said petition should not be granted.

And it is further ordered that notice of the time and place of the hearing of said petition be given by publishing a copy of this order in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation published in this City and County, for four successive weeks next before the hearing of said petition.

Dated, San Francisco, California, March 23rd, 1910.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 28,088.

MARIA ROMEI, Plaintiff, vs.
GIUSEPPE ROMEI, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Giuseppe Romei, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1910.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 20,653.

MARY E. NORMAN, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY E. NORMAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

FIRST PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street, distant thereon seventy-five (75) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Sanchez Street, thence running Easterly and along said Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Southerly ninety (90) feet; thence at a right angle Westerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

SECOND PARCEL.—Commencing at the point of the intersection of the lines of the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, thence running along the South side of Twenty-fourth Street in an Easterly direction fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles in a Southerly direction parallel with Vicksburg Street ninety (90) feet; thence at right angles in a Westerly direction running parallel with Twenty-fourth Street fifty (50) feet; thence along Vicksburg Street Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement.

THIRD PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street, distant thereon ninety (90) feet Southerly from the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, and running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Vicksburg Street Twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Vicksburg Street twenty-four (24) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet to the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that the title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 17th day of March, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in "Town Talk" newspaper on the 26th day of March, A. D. 1910.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: None.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MORTGAGE SHOULD NOT BE RENEWED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 5272, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN LYNCH, Deceased.

It appearing to this Court from the verified petition of MICHAEL COSTELLO, Administrator of the Estate of John Lynch, deceased, praying for an order for leave to re-mortgage certain real property belonging to the said estate that it is for the best interest of the said estate that the said real estate should be re-mortgaged.

It is therefore ordered that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court on Wednesday, the 6th day of April, 1910, in the Courtroom of said Court in the Grant Building, at the corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the said City and County, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any there be, why an order should not be made for the re-mortgage of the said real estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four consecutive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation published in the City and County of San Francisco.

Done in open Court on the 2nd day of March, 1910.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 26,821.

HARDA ZOIE, Plaintiff, vs.
NICHOLAS ZOIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Nicholas Zoie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion and abandonment of the plaintiff without any sufficient cause or reason and on the further ground of defendant's wilful failure and neglect to provide plaintiff with the common necessaries of life while having the ability so to do; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1909.

Quaint Bits

The Pekin Gazette is the oldest journal in the world. It dates from the eighth century. . . . At the court ball in Berlin recently the Empress wore in her hair the famous jeweled hat buckle of Napoleon I., which fell into the hands of the Prussian cavalry after Waterloo. The stones in it, though not very large, are magnificent. It was originally made for the coronation ceremony in Notre-Dame in 1804. Possibly it has not been used since. . . . The biggest idol in the world is Dia-Buten, the Japanese god, which is over 60 feet high. The image is made of copper, tin, mercury and gold, and has been worshipped for more than twelve centuries. . . . There are 200,000 light-weight shillings in circulation. They were made in Germany. Look out for them, says an English newspaper—likewise for the genuine ones. . . . The largest and heaviest building stone ever quarried in England was taken from the Plankington bed, near Norwich, in February, 1889. It was in one piece, without crack or flaw, and weighed over thirty-five tons. . . . A correspondent of the Paris "Figaro" has been interviewing the big pawnshops of Paris. He has published a rather curious list of the various articles pledged during the year. The most popular among them were bed sheets, of which 91,194 pairs were pledged; there were 549 eider-down quilts, 254 fans, 392 boxes of mathematical instruments, 1,972 saucepans, 460 sewing-machines, 57 pianos, and 977 looking-glasses.

Eight Hour Day for Housewives

So exacting and constant is the labor required to keep a household going and to attend to all the requirements of a family in cooking, cleaning, sewing, nursing, and general organization that an "Eight Hours Bill" for domestic workers is impossible, applied to either the paid domestic worker or the unpaid one, the wife and mother. In a certain State there is a unique sort of Industrial School, or rather, a Reformatory Village, known as the "George Junior Republic." It was founded by Mr. William R. George to receive some rough and uncared for lads and girls and to train them, if possible, into useful, hard-working, and law-abiding citizens. Some are sent by their parents, some are committed by magistrates; the young "citizens" are none of them free to leave the village till formally discharged; but they are extraordinarily free within its limits, for it is conducted precisely as a "Junior Republic." The girls all vote as well as the boys, and they elect their own President, Secretary of the Treasury, Police Commissioner, and Board of Health; they make their own laws and administer them; they have jails, a public library, a State bank, and a law court with an elected judge, from whose decisions, however, there is an appeal to a Supreme Court of the Board of Trustees. All sorts of industries are carried on, and wages are earned and used as desired by the wage-earners. The laws are made in general assemblies. Well, some seasons ago, the citizens of the "Junior Republic" learned that New Zealand had adopted an eight-hour law, and this seemed to them good. So they copied the idea; no citizen of the Republic was free to work at his or her trade for over eight hours out of each twenty-four. They forgot that all domestic work in the Republic was duly paid labor! The girls engaged in this business, therefore, rose as usual at half-past five, prepared the breakfasts for half-past six, proceeded with their other work, got dinner ready for one o'clock, and brought their eight-hour day to a close in the early part of the afternoon. The labor reformers had to go supperless to bed! A special town meeting was immediately summoned, and the eight-hour law was promptly repealed. It was the most absolutely unsuccessful law ever made.

John Wesley's Mother

John and Charles Wesley's power as preachers is an interesting illustration of the importance of heredity when both parents are gifted in a particular way. Susannah Wesley, the mother of the Evangelists, was one of the first women to preach. Their father was a Church of England clergyman, and a good preacher, but during his prolonged absence from home on one occasion his curate's "barren ministrations" reduced the attendance at church to twenty or twenty-five; the the rector's wife set up simple evening services in her own kitchen, which was soon crowded out—"over two hundred were present, and yet many went away for want of room." The good lady herself felt some scruples: "Because of my sex, I doubt if it be proper for me to present the prayers of the people to God; but the people begged so earnestly that I durst not deny them." The curate complained to the absent rector, and all poor Mrs. Wesley's representations that "families who seldom went to church now go constantly," as the result of her persuasive preaching, and that the people "live in the greatest amity imaginable," and are "very much reformed in their behavior on the Lord's Day," did not avail to save her from her husband's "positive command" to cease her teachings. But her son John was, no doubt, influenced by that experience to give the support that he did to women's preaching; "Dinah Morris" was only a type of many Wesleyan women who preached with the sanction of the founder of the sect; and no doubt its progress was much aided thereby. All the modern religious developments that have succeeded in gaining great numbers of adherents have without exception admitted women to an active share in their propaganda and government; Wesleyanism, the Salvation Army, the Christian Science Church, and Theosophy, for example.

French Method of Developing the Bust

Mdme. DuBarrie Explains How the Bust May Be Developed 2 to 8 Inches in 30 Days

"I am explaining for the first time to the ladies of America," says Madame DuBarrie, "the French method of developing the bust. It is much more effective, the results appear much more quickly, the breasts become more firm, plump and symmetrical, the method is more simple, the effects more lasting, and altogether beyond comparison with the results produced here.

"You know the French people have the development of the bust and form down to a fine point.

"By this French method, the breasts may be developed from 2 to 8 inches in 30 days. This applies to women of almost any age, from young girls to elderly matrons, whether the bust is absolutely not developed at all, or has grown weak and flabby, and hangs, no matter from what cause.

"It is beauty of form that attracts much more than the features. You will always find it so with both sexes.

"I will be only too glad to tell any woman who is interested what this simple French method is, if she will enclose a 2 cent stamp to pay for the postage. I will send an illustrated booklet in a plain sealed wrapper that will explain it all."

We suggest to our lady readers that they write to Madame DuBarrie for particulars of this remarkable French method, enclose 2 cents in stamps for the illustrated booklet and address it to Mdme. DuBarrie, Suite 1608, Quinlan Building, Chicago, Ill.

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

H-O

Where's That Cook?

You are not dependent on the cook—you need not worry that breakfast will be late. if you have H-O oatmeal in the house. In fifteen minutes you can prepare a satisfying breakfast of steaming oatmeal porridge—a food that will appeal to the entire family and furnish the natural means of building up the tissues of the body, thereby imparting strength and vigor.

H-O oatmeal consists of all the good of the oats. The delightful aroma will please you; the complete absence of hulls, dirt and grit will convince you of its superiority; the tender, individual kernels will prove to you how easily H-O oatmeal is acted upon by the digestive fluids and its nourishing properties assimilated. You will look forward with eagerness to your breakfast, if H-O oatmeal is included on the menu. It gives zest to the meal.

Do not confuse H-O oatmeal with the ordinary raw oats sold under the name of "Rolled Oats" or "Crushed Oats." H-O oatmeal is never sold in bulk; it is free from dirt, germs and all impurities.

H-O oatmeal is manufactured from the highest grade of selected stock. After removing all foreign matter, the meat of the oat is subjected to a very high temperature, and by our own patented process is cooked for several hours under heavy steam pressure. This steam-cooking dextrinizes the starch and renders the oats easily digestible.

H-O oatmeal is ready for the breakfast table after from ten to fifteen minutes' boiling, and provides an inviting dish of sweet, clean, separate, tender kernels in place of the sticky, soggy, indigestible mass obtained in cooking the usual "Rolled Oats."

Possibly the "other" kind may be cheaper; but as soon as you have tested and appreciated the quality of H-O oatmeal, you will gladly pay the few cents difference.

The Charter Tinkering Project

Some of the more active of our public spirited citizens have come to the conclusion that something must be done toward correcting the imperfections of the organic law of this city. They have resolved that the Charter is in need of tinkering. They purpose infusing into it some of the ideal qualities of a perfect government, and to that end a convention of some kind is to be held at which amendments are to be formulated and recommended to the patient and always equanimous people. Now it is not to be disputed that our Charter is susceptible of improvement, but it may be doubted whether it be worth while to tinker with it. The principal objection to the Charter is that it serves the chief purpose of its maker. It is therefore essentially objectionable in principle. The Charter was designed by the Hon. James D. Phelan to enable the Mayor to build up a political machine. Mr. Phelan being Mayor at the time the Charter was framed and on the crest of the bounding wave of popularity, conceived the idea that if all political power were centered in his office he would be able to construct a political machine by means of which he might control the destinies of the State. There was nothing of the hallucinatory in this idea. Mr. Phelan could see his way clear to a most happy consummation; but on his way thereto the fumes of power went to his head, and he drove his machine into a ditch. The potentialities of his scheme, however, have not been neglected. Abe Ruef availed himself of them, and gave the city a protracted season of the Schmitz style of government. Schmitz and Ruef were the logical consequence of the Phelan idea. And a recrudescence of the Schmitz style of government will always be imminent while we have a Charter that holds out the temptations to a Mayor to make self-interest appear to be a duty and a virtue.

Mr. Roosevelt's Ambition

Now comes the news that the most prolific of living writers, the most versatile of men, as a result of his spectacular African sojourn has been fired with the ambition to write a popular history of Carthage. We are also told that he would rather be known to posterity as a historian and literary man than as a statesman. This preference bespeaks an incredible modesty in a man distinguished for a multitudinous array of talents. There is probably but one thing that Mr. Roosevelt cannot do and that is this: he cannot hide his light from posterity under a bushel. Bewildering are the number of figures that he is destined to cut in the pages of history. So numerous are the roles he has filled, so kaleidoscopic the transformations he has undergone, the probability is he will become as enigmatical a figure as our old friend Lucius Seneca, the religious millionaire of classical antiquity who was at once the benevolent minister of the ferocious Nero and the earnest interpreter of Roman stoicism; who, cited by the Council of Trent as though he were a father of the church, has been pictured on the one hand in the blackest of colors and on the other as a milk white Pagan saint who spoke like a disciple of St. Paul. Already among his contemporaries Mr. Roosevelt has taken on the complexion of a fabulous personage. To no two persons does he present the same aspect. Nay, his personality is even now so bewildering that to one person he has given the impression that he combines in himself two distinct individualities. In the San Jose Mercury, the organ of the Hayes brothers, he was described the other day as a man with many of the attributes of a god "who seemed to have a strange power over the savages of Africa who were eager to follow and to serve him." In one breath we are told by the Garden City prophet of insurgency that Mr. Roosevent is "open, frank, bold and aggressive" and "wanting in craft, smoothness and shrewdness"—in fact, that he lacks all the salient characteristics of the Hayes brothers—and in the next breath we are told that he is the "most consummate politician this country ever knew." This personal paradox is the Hayes ideal of incarnated civic patriotism. The Hayes conception bears out what we have observed with respect to the mystifying character of the universal genius who hopes to live in the affections of posterity as the author of a history of Carthage, an ambition, by the way, with which the Emperor Claudius was seized. With all due deference to the superior attainments of Mr. Roosevelt we respectfully remind him that the ambition of Claudius proved futile, though to make the perpetuity of his fame a cinch he built a lecture hall adjoining the museum at Alexandria and provided an endowment for having his work publicly read once a year.

The Flood Legend

Popular interest in the story of the Deluge has been revived by a tablet brought out of Nippur by archaeologists of the University of Pennsylvania. According to newspaper report the discovery of this tablet is a matter of prodigious interest inasmuch as it affords corroboration of the biblical narrative. We are told that upon this piece of hardened clay is inscribed a story of the Deluge more ancient by a thousand years than any hitherto found. The story was written in 2100 B. C. A pretty old tablet, this, and therefore a curiosity, one that will engage the serious attention of inquirers and students who delight in diciphering the mystic symbols that tell the story of human progress in the infant world. As a contribution to the store of human knowledge, however, it is not of so great importance as the daily press would have us believe. We are told that it verifies the bible story of the Deluge. This is hardly true. To corroborate is not to verify. And corroboration of the Old Testament with respect to the Deluge has not been wanting. There are many legends of a Deluge. There is the Chaldean flood-legend, for example, the date of which is anterior to 2000 years B. C. under the early Babylonian empire, and therefore quite as ancient as the tablet in the museum of the Pennsylvania University. Like the Creation Story of Genesis that of the Flood derives pretty complete corroboration from the Babylonian record inasmuch as it is carried back by independent testimony to a very great antiquity. Wise men and cynics have pooh-poohed the Scriptural story of the Deluge; but it is supported by a diversity of traditions among nations and races of the world. While Professor Huxley, speaking in the name of science, pronounced the legend as little worthy of serious notice other scientists not at all bound by any superstitious reverence for the mere text of the Book of Genesis have declared that there is much evidence pointing to a widespread calamity in the nature of a flood.

Our Woful Extravagance

That dismal prophet Mr. James J. Hill has issued another jeremiad on the evils and inevitable consequences of extravagance. Not long ago he warned us that if we did not put a stop to the migration from farm to city we should soon have to import flour and meat. Now he predicts that unless we abate extravagance in governmental affairs we shall drift into bankruptcy. "If the advocates of large bond issues for all manner of internal improvements should carry their point," says Mr. Hill,—"if that resource is not definitely restricted to the emergency of war—we shall be in the condition of Europe, where the motto of every Chancellor now seems to be, 'After us the deluge.'" Mr. Hill produces figures to prove that the proportion of expenditure to national wealth is constantly growing larger. He says that Billion Dollar Congresses have become the rule, and that the infection of large expenditures has spread into the States. Between 1880 and 1890 the total debt of the States increased $13,921,443 or 1.25 per cent, while in the succeeding twelve years the increase was $727,778,393 or 64 per cent. This sort of financiering Mr. Hill calls "profligacy," and he urges "the conservation of capital" as a matter quite as important as any other kind of conservation. To run our government on business principles we must cut down our appropriations and no longer discount the future. This is Mr. Hill's remedy; simple enough but hard to follow. It is hard to follow for reasons that were very well expressed in the House of Representatives last week by Mr. Gillett of Massachusetts. After declaring that public opinion in the United States took no interest in economy he said, "Our constituents want us to do something for them, and so long as we can get our hands into the Treasury they do not care. The man who gets a large appropriation for something in his own district achieves popularity, no matter what his conduct may be in relation to general legislation." This is the truth in a nutshell. Each district wants some of the money in the national treasury, and each congressman votes for every other congressman's appropriation in order to carry his own. The result is that Congress is spending money like a drunken sailor. And there is no demand for economy from public opinion. Public opinion is preoccupied with other things, chiefly with the scrap between the insurgents and the regulars over the pie-wagon which they have come to regard as of the most vital importance to themselves. Not until the people find it expedient to abate their own extravagance will they begin to appreciate the importance of cutting down the cost of government. We have acquired expensive habits; we have cultivated and we are indulging a taste for purple luxuries; we are going the pace that thrills; the practice of economy either in private or public life has become obnoxious, and it will require something more than the exercise of will power to get us back to the simple life and the humdrum, to sanity and security.

More War Talk

According to a cablegram from Manila a Japanese spy was recently caught making a plan of the fortifications at Cavite and Corregidor. Furthermore, according to one of the daily papers, "startling reports of Japanese activity in the islands have come to light," and it is stated on the authority of an army officer that the Japanese are colonizing one of the islands to which they have brought arms and great quantities of ammunition. This is news that ought to cause alarm in Washington, and yet the only perturbation in evidence there is that which is occasioned by the activities of the insurgents. Perhaps our statesmen have been so frequently infected with war scares of the Japanese brand that they have at length become immune. Perhaps, too, they have begun to reckon the probability of war with Japan from the standpoint of Japan's interests. Now it certainly does not appear that it would be advantageous to Japan to plunge into war with this country. As a Japanese writer recently expressed it, "Japan cannot afford to murder her best customer." Japan is marketing 432 million yens' worth of goods abroad every year. This country buys 131 million yens' worth of these exports. Obviously the United States is a customer worth having. Japan is not likely to feel that she can afford to lose her unless it should appear that the loss could be more than offset by the capture of the Philippines or the Hawaiian Islands. But even though the prospect of separating us from our Pacific possessions should appeal to Japan her national debt would certainly give her pause. This debt is expressed in these impressive figures—$1,120,000,000."

Lowell's Favorite Planet

Although the discovery of Mars long antedates written history, it has remained for Professor Percival Lowell, studying the planet's ruddy light from the observatory at Flagstaff, Arizona, to give us precise information about its composition and its inhabitants. Mars is a prime favorite with Professor Lowell; he has taken the little planet under his professional wing, so to speak, and has exhausted his scientific ingenuity upon it. There is no astronomer in the world who claims to know as much about Mars as Professor Lowell, and there is probably no scientist in the world who is so cocksure about the object of his favorite research as Lowell is about Mars. A short time ago Professor Lowell stepped ashore at Plymouth on his way to London and to signalize his arrival in the land of Newton and Herschel, he declared of the Martians: "They are not human beings. The comparative size and the conditions, every known factor in the planet, point to something very different. They are intelligent organisms, but not in the least like men." This is very interesting information. If we are to take it as authentic it places us in possession of news for which the world has been waiting for many years. We learn, in the first place, that there actually are Martians; and in the second place, that while they are not human beings, they enjoy organic and intellectual life. Statements of this sort Professor Lowell has made before, though never in such positive terms. Unfortunately, however, he has never supplied anything in the remotest degree resembling proof to back them up. This is too bad, for if Lowell has discovered what he asserts he has, he should produce his proofs and put to death once and for all the corroding specticism and the unhealthy derision with which his findings have been too often received. Like all great discoverers Professor Lowell has been a good deal flouted by his fellow-scientists. The incredulity with which Dr. Cook's assertions were received is strikingly similar to the scientific attitude which other astronomers, no doubt jealous of his achievements, have maintained toward Lowell. Some of his scientific opponents have declared that Professor Lowell is the dupe of optical illusions. It has been stated that he has the unique advantage of seeing things on Mars that nobody else can see; it has been intimated that he is predisposed to find the Martian phenomena for which he seeks. These insinuations have been directed principally to his study of the Martian canals; as to his findings in regard to life on the planet, they have been treated with open contempt. This contempt may or may not have been excited by passages like the following taken from Professor Lowell's book on "Mars and Its Canals": "That Mars is inhabited by beings of some sort or other we may consider as certain as it is uncertain what those beings may be. The theory of the existence of intelligent life on Mars may be likened to the atomic theory in chemistry, in that in both we are led to the belief in units which we are alike unable to define. Both theories explain the facts in their respective fields and are the only theories that do, while as to what an atom may resemble we know as little as what a Martian may be like. But the behavior of chemic compounds points to the existence of atoms too small for us to see, and in the same way the aspect and behavior of the Martian markings implies the action of agents too far away to be made out." When it is kept in mind that no other astronomer has seen some of the Martian markings on which Professor Lowell bases this curious argument, the necessity for discounting his conclusions will be manifest. Astronomers who have seen some other markings on Mars are not convinced that they have seen them aright. Striking experiments have been made to prove the ease with which the eye may be deceived in studying a planet through the telescope. But these considerations do not daunt Professor Lowell. The far-fetched analogy between the theory of life on Mars (which is not a scientific theory in the real sense of the term) and the atomic theory of chemistry is sufficient for him. He is convinced and he has the courage of his conviction. Boldly he has carried the war into the enemy's country, for England must be regarded as inimical to his views. English scientists do not make theories out of whole cloth. And they regard Mars coldly, with none of the warm love shown by Professor Lowell for his pet planet. In England the question as to the existence of life on Mars has not been answered, because there is no data to answer it with as yet. Yet there is every incentive for English astronomers to solve the problem. It was an Englishman, Sir John Herschel, who started the discussion by writing in 1783: "The analogy between Marts and the Earth is perhaps by far the greatest in the whole solar system."

At Parting

The time has come when o'er the placid stream
  Of things that were the portent of a change
  Is imminent. We try to rearrange
Our vision and gaze backward; thus we deem Ourselves enabled to retain our dream.
  Awhile we play our foolish game, and strange
  New pleasure take in old past joys that range
The lengthy gamut through. We try to seem Contented, sorrow waiting at the door!
    Inexorable Time demands his pay,
  Postponement is not reckoned in his lore;
    Our payment must be made. Each previous day
  We grudgingly expend—we have no more—
    Then bankrupt stand and face the parting way.

Perspective Impressions

There is nothing like satiety to ease one's conscience.

It is not wise to discuss your own virtue. Look proper at an improper moment, and it will be discussed by others.

It has been suggested that Mr. Roosevelt be empowered to serve abroad as the universal Apostle of Peace. The humor of the suggestion will become more excruciating as he moves along.

Mr. Hearst is an advocate of social democracy for his own country and benevolent despotism for Mexico. Mr. Hearst is adept in the art of adapting his principles to suit his property interests.

John Callan O'Loughlin, the journalist and politician who acted as a go-between in Rome in the Roosevelt-Vatican episode, appears to have all the qualities of a professional Catholic.

The Hon. Francis J. Heney is still giving testimony of the power of the San Francisco weekly press. In his Eastern interviews he credits the weeklies with having alienated public sentiment from the Graft Prosecution. So it is evident that Mr. Heney tells the truth once in a while.

"Mr. Taft has lost the confidence of the people," says a muckraking journal. Which means that the people believe all they read in the journals that thrive off the assassination of character.

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(This narrative has a two-fold interest inasmuch as it is both historical and romantic. A tale of wild adventure, it is also a simple history of the things that were done in the name of law and justice in San Francisco in the stirring days of '56 when the Vigilantes were in power. The author was one of the men upon whom the Vigilantes attempted to wreak vengeance. He published his narrative in the form of a pamphet in 1857, immediately after the disbanding of the Vigilantes, when all the events which he describes were fresh in the memory of men. The purpose of his work he explained in his preface: "I thought that perhaps I might turn to some account, in the way of a lesson to unthinking fanatics, the history of the sufferings to which fanaticism has subjected me. Conscious that I did not merit at the hands of my persecutors their cruel treatment, and equally conscious that I had nevertheless been the recipient of it, I for the first time in my life became painfully aware to what extent injustice may be carried even by men with tolerably good intentions. Here then was my opportunity to be of some use to the world by communicating my experience. In submitting the following pages to the reader I have been prompted less by a desire to gratify the morbid appetite for the wonderful—so characteristic of Californians—than by a heartfelt conviction that from this simple and true narrative a lesson may be derived whose teachings in future years will serve as warning beacons to any misguided men, who, mistaking the voice of passion for the call of duty, may be tempted to assume the fearful responsibility of setting the laws of the country, and even the Constitution itself, at defiance, enlisting in their unhappy cause a reckless mob whose responsibility they afterward vainly rely on for support, and whose fury they idly attempt to control." Our reason for reprinting this narrative is that it has long been out of print. Trace can be found today of not more than three volumes. It is therefore not accessible to lovers of history to whom it will appeal not more strongly than to lovers of wild adventure. This narrative is never dull; it never stands still, but moves with a freedom of adventure which is not surpassed in the realm of fiction.—Editor's Note)

Chapter I.

It will be remembered that, some time in the fall of 1855, James King of Wm., who for many years had been a banker in San Francisco, and in the latter part of his business career connected with the defunct firm of Adams & Co., having by the reverses of fortune been reduced to bankruptcy, commenced the editing of a newspaper called the Evening Bulletin. The tenor and style of his editorials are too well remembered by the people of California to be here descanted upon. Suffice it to say, that while they apparently aimed at the correction of abuses which undoubtedly existed in the San Francisco community, it was thought by hundreds of our best citizens, that the example of unbridled license set by this paper to the press, was far more dangerous in its tendency than even the evils it sought to eradicate; and it was well known that I, among others, entertained this opinion, having frequently and freely expressed it.

The boldness, arrogance, and not unfrequently reckless mendacity which characterized this sheet, as might have been expected, awakened in due season a feeling of disgust, not unmingled with resentment, in the breasts of many of our citizens. Day after day this self-created censor fulminated his abuse indiscriminately on the innocent and the guilty; making shuttlecocks of the reputations of some of the best and most enterprising men in the State, till emboldened by impunity, his apparent zeal in the cause of reformation ran into the wildest fanaticism, at whose insane bidding many a proud and honorable hope was forever blighted, and many a happy heart was broken never to be healed.

It was while the Bulletin was in the zenith of its career of slander and detraction, and when all men were in dread lest every day should bring the fearful ukase which was to herald them to the world as scoundrels, and place its indelible blight upon their reputations, that some person, doubtless considering that before the people should be expected blindly to believe and obey the teachings of this new monitor, it would be well for them fully to understand what claims it had to the public confidence, published a card in relation to the present editor of the Bulletin, Thomas S. King, a brother of James King of Wm., and to a certain extent engaged with him in the conduct of that sheet. The communication was signed Caliban—a nome de plume it was well known I had sometimes adopted, and hence, perhaps, the pretty general suspicion at the time, that I was its author. It so happened that the article in question was not written by me, as any one at all conversant with my style, may by a careful perusal easily perceive.

It was published in the San Francisco Sunday Times, a newspaper edited by James P. Casey. As the reader will perceive, it was not very personal, and certainly, under the circumstances, not severe enough to be looked on as requiring a bloody atonement. It appeared on the eleventh day of May, 1856, and was as follows:

(Communication)

The following communication finds place in our columns, because we believe some good may be effected by its publication. "There must be some fire where there is so much smoke."

Editor Sunday Times:—Although you do not make so much parade of your courage and independence as some others in your profession, yet I, for one, believe that you have as good a share of these qualities as generally falls to the lot of even editors. In my opinion, he who assumes the tripod and squats in the editorial chair, assumes a responsibility of such magnitude as entitles him to the strictest scrutiny of that public whose opinion he affects to direct. Acting on this assumption, I beg the use of your columns to state briefly my present object.

One of the chief traits in editorial management I take to be consistency, without which the editor loses prestige and becomes a mere object of ridicule; for the higher a man climbs the more noticeable he becomes. I propose, therefore, to test somewhat the consistency of the editor of the Bulletin. In his issue of today, Friday, the editor exhibits a most marked favoritism for Mr. Latham in his editorial remarks recently made by him. The Bulletin says:

"If in making his appointments, Mr. Latham, instead of selecting his own personal friends, has appointed indiscriminately from all factions, we doubt very much whether the use he has thus made of his official patronage to harmonize the difficulties in the Democratic party will injure him in the slightest particular with the authorities at Washington. According to our way of thinking, it is wrong for Mr. Latham or any other public man to appoint any other than good men to office, and we cannot approve of some of those charged on him by a 'Purifier' in another column today."

Contrast this language with the sweeping, persecuting tone of the same paper in reference to the appointment of Mr. Clarkson by the Governor, and Mr. McDuffie by the President, without taking notice of others of a more insignificant character. Day after day the Bulletin has inveighed in no complimentary terms against some of the persons named in the "Purifier's" communication; day after day has that paper held them up to public notice as the worst men in the country, and yet mark its tone now that Mr. Latham has enlisted their services to fight against the honest expression of public opinion through the ballot-box. Now, Mr. Editor, the question arises, whence this great monstrous sympathy for Mr. Latham? I will tell you. Mr. King, James King of Wm., has a brother who holds a lucrative position in the Custom House under Mr. Latham, and this brother is one of the proprietors of that consistent, courageous, independent and immaculate sheet, the Bullet; "hinc illae lachrimae." Another point to which I desire to call the attention of your readers, is this: the brother I allude to was an applicant for the office of U. S. Marshal for California at the same time with Mr. McDuffie. Is it not possible, aye, even probable, that the bitter, unrelenting and malicious persecution of that gentleman by the editor of the Bullet was instigated by motives of revenge for the defeat of his brother, who I say is a large share-holder in the Bulletin?

Yours truly,

—Caliban.

A personal acquaintance with the writer of the above communication, induced us to give it place in our paper; but until we read the article we knew not that Mr. King had a brother in this country. Our readers will judge and comment for themselves.—Ed. Sunday Times.

On reading the above, Thomas S. King called at Casey's room, which was at the house of John Burns, a deputy sheriff, and demanded of him the author. Casey

The Insurgent Leaders

A Few Remarks About the Personal Characteristics and Grudges of the Men Who Led the Movement to Deprive Speaker Cannon of His Autocratic Power

By Robert McTavish

Judge Norris who represents the Fifth District of Nebraska in the House of Representatives, is in thorough accord on one point with the late Senator Ingalls of Kansas. It will be remembered that Senator Ingalls wrote a sonnet on Opportunity. Being a Kansan, Senator Ingalls took a rather pessimistic view of his subject and enlarged on the importance of rushing out and greeting Opportunity the moment that visitor knocks at the front door. Senator Ingalls intimates that if you overlook that knock Opportunity will never return. It is possible that the Nebraska idea of Opportunity is not quite so pessimistic as the Kansan idea embodied in immortal verse by the late senator. But at any rate Judge Norris of Nebraska agrees with Senator Ingalls of Kansas that you shouldn't neglect Opportunity. Acting on this belief he opened his desk in the House of Representatives a short time ago, extracted an innocent looking little resolution and sent it to the clerk to be read. Judge Norris had seized an opportunity and when the smoke of battle cleared away and the congressmen staggered out of the House toward their beds, Judge Norris had the scalp of Speaker Cannon dangling at his belt.

It was a fortunate thing for Judge Norris that he knew his opportunity when it appeared. It is not every day that the House is in the humor to spike the gun of Speaker Cannon. Besides, if Judge Norris had not seized his opportunity, it would have been merely a question of time when another opportunity would have come to "Red" Hayes of California. We know this because Mr. Hayes has been at considerable pains to tell us so. It seems that he had a little innocent looking resolution in his desk too, and if he had not gone outside for a little solid refreshment for the inner man, he would have done what Judge Norris did. It is probable that "Red" Hayes entertains notions of Opportunity as pessimistic as those of the late senator and sonneteer. Certainly he has reason to, for that opportunity is gone, never to return. Speaker Cannon can only be deposed from the rules committee once in a lifetime. In the book of fate it was not written that "Red" Hayes should do the deposing.

Congressional warfare is conducted on the eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth principle. If you accept that principle, you will find it eminently fitting that the insurgents should have deposed Speaker Cannon, for Speaker Cannon has quite a long record as a deposer of insurgents. Deposing insurgents from committees was one of the easiest and, apparently, the pleasantest things Speaker Cannon did. Take the case of Judge Norris for instance. Mr. Norris used to be a member of the classy Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is a pleasure to belong to that committee. It gives a congressman standing. Standing is what Judge Norris was eager for, because he has his eye fixed on the senate and is going to try for Senator Burkett's toga next fall. But Judge Norris did not stay on the committee. He was penalized for his insurgency. Of course it is just as natural for Judge Norris to be an insurgent as it is for Speaker Cannon to be a stand-patter. Judge Norris used to be a country lawyer; then he became a country judge. He has never won any political preferment without a hard struggle. He was elected a judge with only three votes to spare; when he went to Congress he had a plurality of twenty-two. Is it any wonder that Judge Norris should have the insurging habit? And is it any wonder that Speaker Cannon should punish him? Not if you know Speaker Cannon. "Uncle Joe" took a sweet revenge on the Nebraskan by transferring him from the classy committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the dinky Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures. That committee might hold a meeting occasionally if its chairman, Representative McKinley of Illinois, were not also prominent in the Congressional Campaign Committee. Even if the committee did meet, it would be useless for Judge Norris to insurge in the committee room. Chairman McKinley has him bottled up.

Victor Murdock, another insurgent leader, comes from Kansas and like all other Kansans, he knows Senator Ingalls' sonnet by heart. He is on the important Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and while still a junior member of that committee, he heard the knock of Opportunity and responded by doing a little knocking on his own account. Mr. Murdock discovered that through an "error" in calculation the government was paying the railroads about $5,000,000 too much for carrying the mails. The senior members of the committee had no time to bother about this little discrepancy discovered by the junior member and they told him so in a very patronizing manner. So Mr. Murdock told President Roosevelt about it and the little "error" was corrected without the senior members of the committee getting any credit for the correction. Speaker Cannon did not depose Murdock from the committee; he merely demoted him. Although Murdock should by this time be within three seats of the chairmanship of the committee, he finds himself number eleven on the list. That is demotion and it came as a rebuke for Murdock's excessive zeal for economy. Demotion did not make Murdock an insurgent. Like Norris he is of an insurgent disposition; but since he was demoted, he has insurged more energetically than ever. Just why Murdock should be an insurgent is not hard to explain. He has curly red hair and he used to be a newspaperman. When Murdock was a police reporter in Chicago, he was noted for his red hair and his smile. When he took the red hair and the smile back to his native State, he became a managing editor and began to insurge and he has kept it up ever since. He is a living proof of the fact that a man can smile and smile and smile and still be redheaded insurgent.

Henry Allen Cooper of Wisconsin has been in Congress for twelve years and he is the bittest enemy that Cannon has in the House. It was a sweet moment when Cooper had a chance to help depose Cannon from the Committee on Rules and it would have been sweeter still if he could have seen Cannon deposed from the speakership. He was one of the nine irreconcilable republicans who voted with the democrats to throw Cannon out. There is a deposition story behind all this bitterness. Cooper was a great friend of President McKinley. When the Spanish War broke out the Committee on Insular Affairs was established in the House and Cooper was made its chairman. He did good work there. When he began to insurge, however, he was removed from the committee.

And so it goes. Congress is giving the best exhibition of the eye for an eye principle in modern life. The visits of Opportunity that are most appreciated in that body are those which enable one member to take a smash at another member. Figuratively speaking, there is a constant shower of brickbats flying through the air. Some of them come from the Speaker and some of them are aimed at the Speaker. The shower starts every morning as soon as the chaplain has finished making his prayer for peace and goodwill.

San Diego Flouts San Francisco

Relating How the Little City of the Sundown Sea is Laughing Behind the Scarlet Skirts of Her Big, Frail Sister, and Jeering the Pretense of Importance Assumed by the Land of Cocaigne, Otherwise Named "The Paris of America"

By Democritus

Somewhere in the Good Book there is something about somebody who stole the ewe lamb of somebody else. San Diego feels that San Francisco is trying to steal her ewe lamb—if the larceny has not already been accomplished. San Diego conceived the idea of celebrating the completion of the Panama Canal with an exposition, specifically local to Southern California and the Southwest, but also semi-international in that it included invitations to the countries of the Pacific and Oriental littoral to place their industries on exhibit. This San Diego project was organized last September and immediately capitalized for $1,000,000, the full amount of which has been subscribed. It was also decided to bond the city for another million and the preliminary steps in that direction have been taken.

Everything was sailing smoothly on the San Diego main when down swooped a long, low, rakish craft and laid the peaceful galleons aboard with pikes and cutlasses, after the most approved manner of the old buccaneer. The pirate was San Francisco, C. C. Moore commanding, and M. H. de Young on the poop handling the halliards of the Jolly Roger. Now it is cut and thrust between the contending crews with all the odds in favor of the pirate because he is bigger, and brawnier, and better fitted for the cruel work in hand. It is feared that in the bitter end San Diego will have to walk the plank.

In the meantime San Diego is putting up a gallant fight to save her precious cargo. She is demanding in no uncertain terms and tones that San Francisco shall first redeem her promise of $5,000,000 for a working basis of her "world's exposition." Down here in this land where it is always afternoon, where the fragrance of the lemon mingles with the warm breath of the desert and the sweet ozone of the offshore wind, where the mocking bird sings his multi-melodies in palm gardens of gul in their bloom—down here where men live and laugh for the very joy of living, a community of Allan Brecks are saying that it is a bonnie fight. Like Owen Wister's Virginian they are "saying it with a smile"; and they are demanding that San Francisco shall smile as she says it. Down here they insist that San Francisco is taking herself too seriously in this matter; that she has no sense of the intense humor of the situation in which she has placed herself. It is pointed out by these irrepressible jesters of the Southland that San Francisco never cracked a smile when all the world was laughing consumedly over Secretary Meyer's answer to San Francisco's demand for a warship in which to carry C. C. Moore and M. H. de Young and the other boosters around the world to solicit the patronage of all the crowned heads and petty potentates. They declare that San Francisco was as self sufficiently serious as the three tailors of Tooley street with their "State wide conference" at Santa Barbara, in which a cut-and-dried program was carried out with all the precision of a Santa Cruz convention. Roaring with laughter that almost drowns the tumult of thunder and surge on the brown ribbed sands of Coronado, the San Diegans look upon the perfidious alliance between the conspirators of the metropolis and "Rubicon" Otis of the Los Angeles Times to put San Diego off the map and back in the place she occupied when the water came up to the old mission. They say down here that San Francisco is only half as witty as Falstaff because while the fat knight was not only witty in himself but also the cause of wit in others, San Francisco is only the cause of wit in others.

If San Diego goes down in the strife she will go down laughing—at San Francisco. But San Diego is determined to fight it out. She has nailed her colors—yellow and blue—to the mast, and they will stay there until the scuppers are full of her blood or until the last armed foe expires. She will flaunt her "prior right" in the face of the insolent invader; she will continue to demand that San Francisco shall "put up or shut up" precedent to her own demands upon the State legislature and Congress. Why, ask these dwellers in the eternal sunshine, have the denizens of the fog belt called upon the wide wide world for sustenance before they have passed the hat around among their own citizenry of the misty mid-region of Wier? The world helps those who help themselves. The purse of the other man is only at the behest of the solvent debtor and the highway robber—and San Francisco may be a pirate but she is not a highwayman.

San Diego is going to have an exposition all right. It may not be a "world's fair" like the one that San Francisco is planning on a promise of $5,000,000 if somebody else will put up $45,000,000; but it will be a show worth the price of admission, and it will be open from January 1, 1915, to December 31 of that year. It doesn't matter what San Francisco attempts, San Diego knows what she will do. And it may be stated now, once and for all, that whether San Diego wins or loses in this hand-to-hand combat; whether she ever attains her vaulting ambition to become "the first port of call north of the canal"; whether she establishes herself as "the gateway of the Southwest" or not, she will not aspire to rival San Francisco as "the Paris of America." She will not even hope to be a Monaco in the meaning that all the world has placed upon Mayor McCarthy's designation of San Francisco, notwithstanding the Riviera climate of the San Diego coast section and the temptation of the Coronado Islands within two hours' sail of the City Hall, across the Mexican line, or the contiguity of the bull ring and the cockpit of Tia Juana. San Diego plumes herself on her excess of magnanimity in this regard. Think of the attraction of a vast and untrammeled casino on the islands; and picture to yourself the invincible attraction of Tia Juana at its worst! How easily could San Diego advertise her exposition as the concentrated essence of all that is wicked east of Suez. Yet she leaves that dubious distinction to San Francisco, knowing that she is thereby pouring the wealth of the world's night life into the lap of the lady of easy virtue who sits serene, indifferent to fate (and scandal) beside the Golden Gate, peering solicitously through her lattice like an odalisque of the harems of Tunis or smiling a welcome upon the passerby like a sultana of the Red Bazar of Cairo. It is not in the mind of San Diego to deprive San Francisco and Mayor McCarthy of the opportunity to monopolize for their "world's exposition" all of the pleasure, profit and doubtful prestige they may get from a Midway Plaisance replete with Yoshiwaras and bayadere cafes of Port Said and Singapore.

San Diego says to San Francisco: "Go to it, fair but frail sister; you need not put on the soft, soft pedal, nor cease to talk so loud. Swing wide your widest door to your wide open town, crying, 'I love my wife, but O you once-in-a-while!' Let your joy and your morals be unconfined. On with your dance of death, and when you are surfeited and satiated with these things come to us and we will make you whole again. Come to us and we will receive you like a prodigal of prodigals, and put you in shape to resume your wayward course recuperated, rejuvenated and remorseless."

The trouble with San Francisco, however, is that she is a supreme, superb and irredeemable egotist and has not the gift to see herself as others see her. It is just as well that it is so. Nothing is so disheartening, so akin to despair, so hopeless for the human heart, as disillusion.

The Spectator

Roosevelt on the Anxious Seat

The lives of great men remind us that fatal indiscretions are often born of trivial impulses and that they are like the thief that comes in the night. And now that Mr. Roosevelt has emerged scathless from the midst of the ravenous fauna of the African jungle and braved the less disquieting dangers of the Methodist Scylla and the Catholic Charybdis, perhaps it remains for his biographer to dwell upon the tremendous twist that was given to the fortunes of his hero by what seemed to be so insignificant an adventure. We are assured by many of Mr. Roosevelt's friends that the occurrence is of no importance, but this assurance is not strengthened by the obviously profound anxiety of the ex-President himself. If Mr. Roosevelt thought the occurrence was of no importance he would not have cabled a message of several hundred words to his dearly beloved American people for the purpose of affirming his confidence in the soundness of a judgment which he knew would approve his conduct.

His Eloquent Appeal

So keen was Mr. Roosevelt's anxiety that in his haste to avoid figuring as the motif of an ugly sectarian controversy he addressed a most solemn and somewhat ridiculous appeal to all classes to take a calm, dispassionate view of the whole matter. "The important consideration," he says, "is the avoidance of harsh and bitter comment such as may excite mistrust and anger between and among good men"; also, "The respect and regard of those of my fellow Americans who are Catholics are as dear to me as the respect and regard of those who are Protestants"; also, "Bitter comment and criticism, acrimonious attack and defense are not only profitless but harmful." And furthermore, by way of upholding his reputation for tolerance he tells us that in his journey through Africa he was so absolutely impartial that he didn't draw the line at Catholic missions but gave them the honor of his presence just as he did with respect to the Protestant missions. At the same time he confesses that it would cause him "a real pang to have anything said or done that would hurt or give pain to my friends whatever their religious belief." Beautiful sentiments, these, and kindly expressions of good feeling, but—well the tone is certainly not that of a politician insensible of the unpleasantness of being one of the central figures of a religious imbroglio.

Significance of His Conduct

This Roosevelt-Vatican contretemps could be considered of no importance in certain circumstances different from those that appear to exist. If it were reasonable to suppose that Mr. Roosevelt was out of politics then it would not matter much whether there was any likelihood of his conduct being misunderstood. But the indications are that Mr. Roosevelt has a vigilant eye on his political fences. Indeed the contretemps derives importance from the very circumstance of the significance imparted to it by Mr. Roosevelt's apparently intense anxiety. There is but one conclusion to be drawn from his manifestation of anxiety, and that is that he has formed designs which are in danger of frustration.

His Breach of the Proprieties

Mr. Roosevelt's friends must necessarily deplore the unfortunate mix-up, for they cannot have failed to perceive that he has involved himself in a disagreeable controversy. It would certainly have been much better for him had he excluded the imperial city of the seven hills from his unique itinerary. But having rushed in where Fairbanks had not feared to take his lanky form it would have been better for him had he refrained from exposing himself to the biting criticism of the Vatican. It appears that as is usually the case when the impulsive Mr. Roosevelt becomes a party to a contretemps, attention is diverted from something that is salient. This was the case when he fell out with "Dear Maria" as a result of his indiscretion in backing Archbishop Ireland for the College of Cardinals. The significant thing about that controversy was Mr. Roosevelt's Machiavellian method of putting a woman in a false light. This significant thing was never revealed until after the public lost interest in the controversy, when Mrs. Storer published all of her correspondence. In the current discussion of the Vatican episode Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to accept the prescribed conditions upon which he would be received is treated as though it were the whole point of the story, and several important points are hardly dwelt upon. For instance but casual mention is made of the fact that surprise was expressed at the Vatican when it was learned that Mr. Roosevelt had given out for publication the text of the messages exchanged with Monsignor Kennedy and that in addition to divulging private correspondence he suppressed one of the messages which he had received. Now to say the least Mr. Roosevelt is guilty of a serious breach of the ordinary amenites of polite society. His correspondence with the Vatican was of his own initiative, and it should not have been given to the press without the permission of the Vatican.

A Bigot Heard From

Mr. Roosevelt's wishes regarding this imbroglio are not to be realized. "The important consideration," as he says, "is the avoidance of harsh and bitter comment such as may excite mistrust and anger between and among men," but it is already quite evident that the passions of bigots have been aroused. As soon as the news was received Bishop H. Greer of the Episcopal diocese of New York rushed into print to give the keynote of anti-Catholic sentiment. The American people, he said, would regard Mr. Roosevelt's experience with the Vatican as a national affront "no matter how much Colonel Roosevelt or others attempt to deprecate the incident." Bishop Greer evidently is a fine specimen of the old-fashioned bigot, a hold-over from the days when it was deemed an act of piety to crop the ears of heretics, but he is not at all singular in his day and generation. There is the good Mr. Tipple, for example, who promptly took occasion to flourish a firebrand not only to the discomfiture of Mr. Roosevelt but to the disgust of self-respecting Methodists. There are others who will be glad to regard the action of the Pope as a national affront. Of course they will not be able to explain why, but they will be none the less vehement and vociferous. The Pope certainly has the right to prescribe conditions upon which he will receive visitors, and it certainly is not at all remarkable that he is averse to receiving anybody who affiliates or is likely to affiliate with the only one of the jarring sects that considers it good Christian policy to proselytize in Rome by means of lampoons designed to bring discredit on the head of the Catholic church. The Pope explains that his attitude is not inspired with religious intolerance. He draws the line at no Protestant church save the one that conducts an offensive propaganda against the Vatican. Of course it is the privilege of the Methodists to promote the interests of Christianity by this means, but at the same time it can hardly be denied that it is the Pope's privilege to exhibit his displeasure thereat in the way that he has seen fit. The Pope's attitude is precisely the attitude the Emperor of Germany would take if he believed there was a possibility of an expected visitor from America entering into friendly relations in Berlin with a body of socialists who were heaping upon him diverse brands of personal abuse.

As Roosevelt Sees It

Though it is not my purpose to encourage discussion of this unpleasant topic I feel that a few more words thereon may not be taken amiss. These words have reference to the probable sentiment of Catholics. I fear that many of them, like Bishop Greer, may feel that an affront has been given, but that, unlike Bishop Greer, they may construe it as an affront to their church. Of course no sensible Catholic will dispute Mr. Roosevelt's right to refuse to visit the Pope on the conditions prescribed. But there is a possibility of Catholics resenting Mr. Roosevelt's attitude as revealed by his address to the American people and in his authorized interviews. In his address he appeals for approval of his own conduct and asks that the matter be treated as merely personal. In an interview when asked why he had not replied to the last message which he received from the Vatican he said he wished to keep the door open "not for his own sake but for the sake of the Catholic church in America." Thus it is clear enough that Mr. Roosevelt implies that the Vatican was guilty of something so discreditable that the Catholics of America would be made to suffer some kind of penalty. From this it must be inferred that Mr. Roosevelt conceives that what occurred was something in the nature of lese-majesty, and that it would be bitterly resented by the people. Letting the people understand that such is his conception of the matter is not a shrewd way of averting ebullitions of religious bigotry.

From the Catholic Standpoint

So far representatives of the Catholic hierarchy in this country have treated the incident with becoming calmness; in a manner to indicate that they are disposed to view the matter as Mr. Roosevelt would have them view it. But in view of the imprudent efforts of Mr. Roosevelt's friends and sympathizers to glorify him at the expense of the Vatican there is likely to be a radical change of sentiment among Catholics generally. It would not be surprising were they to protest against the curious conception which Mr. Roosevelt himself and his newspaper touts have of the position occupied by communicants of the Catholic church in America. It is apparent that they conceive that American Catholics must be held responsible for the temporal policies of the Pope, and that anything which the Pope may do in anywise distasteful to a religious sect or a political party in this country will justify reprisals against Catholics. That this strange and un-American conception is prevalent is evident from the many expressions of sympathy for American Catholics uttered by Protestant clergymen and from the circumstance that they have wondered how far the Vatican will have to go before American Catholics revolt and split into a few more jarring sects. That Mr. Roosevelt holds this view of the position of Catholics in America is evident from his explanation of why he didn't answer the last communication from the Vatican. A radical change of sentiment among Catholics is also likely to follow as a result of the efforts of friendly newspaper correspondents to make it appear that the Vatican has been guilty of a tremendous blunder. They are not conciliating American Catholics by the old trick of quoting imaginary personages for the purpose of insinuating sentiments favorable to Hr. Roosevelt and discreditable to the Vatican. Thus: "An eminent ecclesiastic is reported to have said, 'It is not the church but the private act of the Spanish Secretary of the State against the Colonel of the Rough Riders in Cuba.'" This sort of bosh is rather poorly calculated to assuage religious partisanship. The words attributed to an eminent ecclesiastic are taken from an Associated Press despatch to the Chronicle of Wednesday. Now let us come to the inspiration of it. In the Examiner of Tuesday appeared the following: Giornale d'Italia (organ of ex-Premier Sonnino)—"The incident between the Spanish Papal Secretary of State and the ex-Colonel of the Rough Riders who became so popular in the war against Spain demonstrates that Cardinal Merry del Val's permanence in the Borgia appointment will not augment the cordialty between the Vatican and the United States." Here we have at a glance the psychology of the ugly fabrication. Is this damnable sort of fake journalism likely to do Mr. Roosevelt any good? Are the Catholics of America to be expected to tolerate this species of strategy in his interest?

PORTLAND SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES

The Battle of the Women

The placid sun-kissed town of Santa Barbara is to be the scene of a furious battle during the next few days, a battle of Amazonian cohorts which have been breathing defiance against one another for quite a long time. The line of battle will be formed when the ladies of the California Federation of Women's Clubs meet in the dreamy mission town to hold their annual elections. It will be a woman's battle, conducted with strictly feminine strategy, but it will be a horrid fray just the same. The dear ladies may smile and smile as they hurl their barbed shafts, they may preserve their looks of limpid innocence as they plot destruction for the enemy; but let nobody make the mistake of believing that there is not bitter feeling at the bottom of it all. Delusive is the smile of the clubwoman bent on battle; a thing of show merely, a superficial sign for the confusion of her opponents. No such mistake will be made by any of the ladies attending the meeting; they go prepared to give and receive blows. They go to fight for Mrs. James B. Hume of Oakland or to fight against her.

The Center of the Storm

Mrs. James B. Hume is one of the most distinguished members of the swagger Ebell of Oakland; also she is president of the California Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. James B. Hume will be the center of the storm which the weather bureau will report in the region of the Potter Hotel within a few days. By her opponents Mrs. Hume is charged with the awful crime of harboring a vaulting ambition; they whisper hoarsely that Mrs. Hume seeks to revolutionize the federation in her own behalf, that she would so amend the constitution that she may be able to accept the presidency for two years more. Mrs. Hume, they add, sees the possibility of national greatness gleaming on her horizon. She would like to be president of the National Federation in 1912. But there is more than this to Mrs. Hume's offending, in the opinion of her opponents. They have discovered a deep dark plot formed by Mrs. Hume to turn the federation over to the suffrage movement. For these reasons a goodly number of the delegates who will represent the 17.000 members of the federation at Santa Barbara are determined to thwart Mrs. Hume. They declare that Mrs. Waters of Los Angeles is the logical candidate for the presidency, as it is the south's turn to enjoy that honor; and they asseverate by all that is clubby that Mrs. Waters, not Mrs. Hume, shall be the next president of the federation.

Is Mrs. Hume a Suffragist?

To the charge that she would turn the federation over to the suffrage movement I understand that Mrs. Hume enters an emphatic denial. But those who make the charge are not convinced. Is not Mrs. Hume going to England soon? What can be her reason for going to England, unless to study the suffrage movement in the suffrage capital? So the dear ladies argue. And again, has not the federation, under Mrs. Hume's regime, devoted itself to the Roosevelt policies instead of to domestic problems? to the conservation of natural resources instead of to the conservation of servant girls? to waterways instead of to babies? What more natural than the step from these great problems to the problem of suffrage? The constitution of the federation forbids the discussion of religion or politics. Suffrage, say the opponents of Mrs. Hume, is a political question. So the battle cry is, Down with Mrs. Hume, the suffragist! It will be a tremendous struggle. The first skirmish occurred last Monday when a breakfast was given to Mrs. Hume at the St. Francis Hotel. Those who did not go saw, as in a glass darkly, the Machiavellian intent of that breakfast. They pitied those who did go. There was as much subtle poison in that breakfast, they whispered, as in an entree on the table of a Borgia. But there will be other breakfasts and luncheons too, at Santa Barbara.

Romance of the Oil Fields

Somewhat akin in substance to the extravagance of fiction with which the fantastic tales of the East fascinate and enthral are the stories that come from Coalinga, the heart of the oil belt, about the fortunes that are there gushing from the bowels of the earth into the pockets of men. The gold fields of Nevada and the Klondyke have been relegated to the background in the interest of fortune-hunters since golden oil began spouting at Coalinga. It has been found that digging for precious ore is less profitable than boring for petroleum. Men are growing rich over night in Coalinga, and those that have not yet struck oil are in a high state of excitement over the prospect. Fortunes have also been made in land since the discovery of oil. Land that was at one time believed to be scarcely worth the taxes that were paid on it has brought great wealth to the owners. Of course everybody that goes to the oil field doesn't strike oil. Fortunes have been sunk in wells. Experience in the oil field is very much the same as experience in the gold field. Some men there are that have bored until they lost patience, and others there are that came upon the scene when patience was exhausted to be rewarded by going to a little greater depth. When the history of the oil field is written it will be found to abound in the same species of romance that colors the tradition of the Bonanza group of mines in Nevada. There are wild-cat schemes in Coalinga as there were in Virginia City, and some of them are transformed in the course of development. The Mohawk well, one of the most profitable in the oil belt, was started as a wild-cat scheme by three promoters. They incorporated with 500,000 shares of stock, two hundred thousand of which they sold to twenty "suckers" at 10 cents a share. Among the "suckers" were Carleton Wall of the Techau Tavern, and Habenicht, the photographer. Each of the "suckers" paid $1,000 for his stock and each has drawn out $20,000. Not a bad profit for an easy-mark to make in a wild-cat scheme. The promoters of the Mohawk sold their three hundred thousand shares of stock that cost them nothing at prices varying from fifty cents to one dollar and a half to Fred. Meyerstein, John Spring and Gus Umbsen and those gentlemen have made immense profits on their investment.

Reformers Going to Europe

With the gubernatorial campaign on the eve of its first important activities, two prominent reformers of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League have announced their intention of departing for Europe. Colonel E. A. Forbes of Marysville, one of the league stalwarts in the Sacramento Valley, is about to start on an extended tour of the world. Former State Senator Charles M. Belshaw of Antioch is also packing his trunks and buying a set of Baedekers. That these two men should see fit to leave California for indefinite stays at this precise time is significant; in fact, as full of meaning as an egg is full of meat. But it is doubtful whether the Lincoln-Roosevelt leaders whom they will leave behind will experience much pleasure in deciphering the meaning of their departure. Belshaw, we all know, was the most active of all seekers after the gubernatorial indorsement of the league. He was almost as busy trying to land the league O. K. as Charlie Curry is in seeking the O. K. of the individual voters. Whenever you saw Belshaw those days he was button-holing this leader or on his way to interview that one. But Belshaw was turned down cold.

Dissatisfied Leaguers

Being no Ajax, Belshaw did not defy the lightning that hurtled about his devoted brow; he bowed to the will of the leaguers with as much apparent reverence as though their will was the will of God. If he talked about them afterwards in rather acerbitous terms, that was only natural. And now he is going away. Somebody else must carry Antioch for Hiram Johnson. While the fight is raging here Belshaw will be sitting on London Bridge gazing at St. Paul's in rapt contemplation or bathing his poetic soul in the glories of Sorrento. No matter how many Macedonian cries may be sent forth, he will heed them not. Marysville, too, will lack a league leader, for the genial colonel will be as remote from the battlefield as Belshaw. Colonel Forbes has no axe to grind, but it is no secret that the candidates selected for the league indorsement did not all suit his ideas of politics and reform. His enthusiasm has somewhat waned; he has lost his eagerness for the fray and longs to be off a-sightseeing. Needless to say, the league will miss both Forbes and Belshaw sorely. They are men of large influence in their sections, but they will not be here to swing votes to the ticket.

How Forbes Got Rich

A trip to Europe generally indicates that the traveler is in prosperous circumstances. Belshaw has always been reputed a very wealthy man; not so Forbes, and the manner in which he made his fortune is a good story. About six years ago Colonel Forbes was engaged by William P. Hammon to get a number of deeds into escrow in anticipation of a big dredging deal in the vicinity of Marysville. The two men were thrown together a good deal. One night at eleven o'clock they were standing on the main street of Marysville when the town's "owl car" rattled by. Marysville had a very primitive street car system at that time. It consisted of five cars and six mules to haul them and it ran from Marysville to Yuba City across the river. Its most valuable possession was a perpetual right of way across the only bridge connecting the two towns and its financial condition was not a flourishing one. In fact, when one of the mules wearied of life and committed suicide by jumping into the river, the street car company was almost bankrupted. The government was buying mules at the time and the price was high. Hammon knew all about the condition of the car company and he also knew that Marysville was on the eve of the boom which has since come to that placid community.

A Profitable Investment

So as he stood with Forbes and watched the mule hauling the owl car on its last trip from Yuba City, a sudden idea came into his head and he said: "Let's buy this road." What little money Colonel Forbes had was invested in newspaper properties and he told Hammon so. "Let's buy it anyway," persisted Hammon and asked Forbes to find out how much the owners would sell it for. The colonel ascertained that the road was for sale for $16,000—$4,000 down and the rest on any old terms. The owners were eager to get rid of it before another mule developed the suicidal mania. Hammon took Forbes in on the deal and advanced the $4.000. In eight months the road was completely rehabilitated. Four new mules were bought, fare registers were installed in the cars and a switch was put in at the bridge. There was only one loss during the year—a mule shied at an automobile and was juggernauted by his own car. At the end of that first year the road earned $2,250 net. Shortly thereafter Hammon and Forbes sold the road to the Northern Electric Company for $130,000. After Colonel Forbes had paid Hammon what he owed him on the purchase price he had the nucleus of a fortune which by judicious investment he has since run up to nearly $300,000. No wonder the genial colonel thinks that he can rest up for a while by taking a trip around the world.

The Originality of Mr. Kahn

California is represented in Washington by no statesman more skilled in the subtle art of the politician than the Hon. Julius Kahn of the Fourth District. Mr. Kahn is therefore one of the most successful of American statesmen. His shrewdness as a politician is as keenly appreciated at the fountain-head of our government as in the city from whence he hails, as the story which I am about to relate, and which comes to me from Washington duly authenticated, serves to illustrate. Years ago when Mr. Henderson was elected Speaker of the House, after a hot contest in which Congressmen Paine, Hopkins and Sherman were his opponents, a dinner was given in his honor by Senator Perkins. The Hon. Julius Kahn was on hand, as were all the members of the California delegation. Wine flowed and sensibilities were attuned to the occasion when Mr. Henderson assumed the role of toastmaster. One of his first stunts was the introduction of Mr. Kahn. "Gentlemen," he said, "I propose the health of Mr. Kahn of California, the original Henderson man, the—" Here Mr. Kahn interrupted, with a joyful flourish of his hand. "That's right, Mr. Speaker," he shouted. Mr. Henderson resumed: "He is not only the original Henderson man, but the original Paine man, the original Hopkins man and the original Sherman man."

Hewitt—I don't like to be interrupted when I'm thinking.
Jewett—No, it isn't pleasant to have anybody flag your train of thought.

Our Tyrannical Press

For chastening the proud and tyrannical spirit and refining the manners of a newspaper there is nothing to be more strongly recommended than a course of treatment under the eyes of twelve good men and true summoned into a box to administer justice in accordance with the law of libel. It will doubtless occur to many of my readers, as it has occurred to me, that there are coarse and brutal newspapers in this city very much in need of this kind of treatment. In no city in the country are there newspapers so indifferent to the law of libel, so contemptuous of the principle of individual liberty, as those of San Francisco. Nowhere else are newspapers so free from restraint, so reckless in their criticisms of men, so dictatorial or so domineering as those that daily rage and snort in our midst, scattering venom and disseminating slander, wantonly wounding feelings and destroying reputations. Apparently there is nothing that they dare not insinuate against individuals who ignore their behests, no species of personal abuse in which they are constrained from indulging when the mood seizes them. What we are very much in need of is an epidemic of libel suits. There is nothing that a newspaper dreads more than a libel suit. Our local dailies are so afraid of libel suits that they have entered into a compact to discourage them by never mentioning them in their columns, thus hoping to get the idea of invoking the law of libel out of the public mind. This is the only compact that the dailies have ever regarded as sacred, and yet there have been occasional lapses from fidelity thereto.

The Libel Industry

This subject of libel suits was brought to mind by a lawyer from New York who was struck with amazement at the reckless brutality of the San Francisco press. "What this city needs," he says, "is development of the libel suit industry after the manner in which it is carried on in New York." He went on to explain that in New York there are lawyers who make a specialty of libel business. They are not high-class lawyers, he said, being akin to what are known as ambulance chasers,—pettifoggers who solicit clients at hospitals among men who have been injured in railroad accidents. The libel lawyer reads all the newspapers, and visits people who have been written up in a way that brings upon them humiliation and disgrace. Whenever he finds that a newspaper has wandered from the truth he induces the injured person to sue for damages. No criminal prosecutions for him. It is prosecution in the civil courts that the newspaper dreads, for there the rules are more stringent than in the criminal courts. These libel lawyers, though their method of hustling for business is not to be commended, have rendered a valuable public service. They have chastened the spirit of rash editors.

Some pretty big judgments have been recovered from Mr. Hearst and other publishers who are becoming somewhat tame. In England the libel suit industry is at even higher stage of development than in New York. A Londoner recently donated to charity $500,000 which came to him in verdicts against the Harmsworth papers.

The Calumniation of a Judge

The Mr. Hearst who has became somewhat tame as the result of being mulcted in heavy damages in libel suits is not Mr. Hearst of San Francisco but Mr. Hearst of New York, two personalities as distinct as Jekyll and Hyde. Mr. Hearst of New York is also of Los Angeles where he received some rough handling in a libel suit recently, the consequence being that his Examiner of that city is now conducted with praiseworthy caution and prudence. The Examiner of San Francisco is an entirely different kind of paper. Its spirit has not been chastened for many years. Mr. Hearst of San Francisco has given his Examiner its head and it runs amuck every little while. A notable example of its reckless character was given last Sunday when it published a sensational story designed to destroy the reputation of Judge Ellison of Red Bluff. Judge Ellison was represented as having gone on an excursion with a representative of the United Railroads and the intimation was made that he had entered into an "unholy alliance" with one of the parties to a suit which is to be tried before him. The Examiner could have ascertained by inquiry at Judge Ellison's home in Red Bluff that there was no foundation for the story, but this method of inquiry would not have been in accordance with the policy of sensational journalism. It was preferable to send a reporter out into the night in an automobile in pursuit of a party of gentlemen who were bent upon a little innocent pleasure. By this method the newspaper would be able to impress its readers with its exceeding great enterprise and exploit the boldness, perseverance and masterly strategy of one of its young reporters. The injustice that might be done to Judge Ellison by the publication of a story that lacked atuhentic confirmation was a matter of no importance in the philosophy of Mr. Hearst's brilliant young disciples. So they freaked the story on the front page. The next day they discovered their error and promptly retracted. Did they freak the retraction on the front page? No, they buried it on the third page. Judge Ellison will probably be satisfied with this style of retraction. It is because the indignation of the victims of newspaper malevolence is so easily assuaged that our newspapers have ceased to bother about possible consequences when the opportunity presents itself to bludgeon any person whom they dislike.

She—Isn't it frightful, the number of people who die before they are thirty?

He—Yes. I should think women would own up in the face of certain death.

Spending C. P. Huntington's Money

It may surprise San Franciscans to learn how Archer M. Huntington, the son of Collis P. Huntington, is spending the millions which he inherited. It certainly is surprising New York where Huntington has attained a unique position by his patronage of art and scholarship. Mr. Huntington has founded an uptown civic center covering the large block bounded by One Hundred and Fifty-fifth, Broadway, Riverside Drive and One Hundred and Fifty-sixth streets. This center now has four museum buildings, either completed or in process of building, in addition to a Catholic church. All are there owing to the generosity of Mr. Huntington. The first to be built was the building of the Hispanic Society of America. From his boyhood Mr. Huntington has been a student of Spanish history and literature and he is now an authority on the influence of Spain on America. Mr. Huntington presented two lots, next to the Hispanic Society's building, to the American Numismatic Society and there the society erected its permanent home. For the purpose of holding a medallic exposition in the new center Mr. Huntington recently erected a temporary building at a cost of $30,000. A few weeks ago the American Geographical Society began the erection of a building. The Catholic church, now nearly completed, is an interesting structure of Spanish architecture in the style of the classic renaissance. This new civic center is beginning to attract the attention of artists and scholars in all parts of the world and Mr. Huntington has been accorded a great deal of publicity for which he seems to have little taste. He has a handsome estate at Throggs Neck with a library valued at $2,000,000. He has established a fire department on the place to protect his books.

Professor Armes Gives Battle

It is interesting to note that a professor of the University of California is engaged in a tremendous dispute with W. J. Rolfe of Cambridge, the well-known Shakespearian scholar. The professor in question is William Dallam Armes and the crux about which he is disputing is this: When Lowell used the term "Wordsworthshire," did he refer to the Lake country or to the Wordsworthian state of mind? Readers will at once appreciate the transcendent importance of this question beside which the current problem of the high cost of living dwindles into piffling insignificance. James Russell Lowell, it appears, laid the foundation for this struggle of mighty minds when he wrote of the poet: "He was the historian of Wordsworthshire." That looks like a simple statement, easily interpreted, and Rolfe has interpreted it to mean that Wordsworth made a certain part of England his own by his painstaking description of it in his poems. When he gave Lowell credit for having coined the word, Rolfe sent a copy of his book to the essayist with a page turned down to mark the passage and Lowell made no comment. But Professor Armes knows better. What Lowell meant, he says, was "the mental domain of William Wordsworth rather than any particular locality." From Lowell, says Professor Armes, the term was copied into a guide book from which Rolfe "conveyed" it into a book of his own on Wordsworth. If Rolfe had not resented the use of the word "conveyed," the tremendous dispute would never have arisen. Being a close student of Shakespeare he remembers that Ancient Pistol used the word "convey" as a polite substitute for "steal" and he has asked Professor Armes if he too uses it in that sense. Professor Armes is still to be heard from on this interesting point.

Indigestion is unknown to those who drink a glass of the Italian-Swiss Colony's TIPO (red or white) with their meals.

"Turn back," pleaded the maiden, "O, Time, in thy flight, and make me young again, just for tonight."

"Certainly," rejoined Time, affably. "About how far must I turn back?"

"None of your business."

Here's to the Colonel

Though he isn't proclaiming it from the housetops Colonel Andrews is still in the land of the living with as much sparkle in his eyes as was ever emitted from a precious gem in his "Diamond Palace." Colonel Andrews is probably our oldest inhabitant, but not merely as such is he worthy of special mention in this the week of his eighty-sixth birthday and the sixtieth anniversary of his arrival in the old town; rather is it because of his singularity in this,—that notwithstanding the long period of his career in this turbulent community during which he has taken an active part in public affairs, he has never been on better terms with himself than with his neighbor. It is perhaps because of this that age sits with decent grace upon his amiable visage, which, though it wears the markings of years well spent is still as serene and bright as a Lapland night. Age that has stolen vigor from his limb has taken no fire from his mind. Colonel Andrews fought for his country in the Mexican War, he ran with the old machine in the early days of San Francisco, he survived the shock of calamity and burgeoned again into business while hot were the ashes of his old store round which had clustered the traditions of almost half a century. Let us drink to the health of our gallant young hero.

A Flourishing Financial Institution

No better index to the state of financial affairs in a large city can be found than that which is supplied by the Clearance House. The reports of the San Francisco Clearance House during the past three years show a steady increase in the volume of business. Equally gratifying are the bank reports that are made from time to time. This week the regular report of the Anglo & London Paris National Bank was made, and it shows that that institution is in a most flourishing condition and entitled to rank among the most solid financial institutions in the country. Its resources aggregate $32,736,681.48 of which amount $10,311, 835.63 is in cash and sight exchange and nearly $5,000,000 in bonds. Its deposits are $23,028,250.20.

A Wild Scurry for Maids

A short time before Mrs. William Miller Graham departed for England where she has many friends in the most exclusive Mayfair set, she gave an elaborate house party at Santa Barbara. A number of the belles of this city were bidden. "I will have room for you and your maid for a couple of days and would like you to come" was about the way in which Mrs. Graham couched a number of her invitations. Of course all the belles who were fortunate enough to be asked were eager to go, but not all of them had maids. Equally of course, none of the belles was going to humiliate herself by going without a maid. What difference did it make if Miss Dash was in the habit of getting along at home without the luxury of a personal attendant? If Miss Blank and Miss Asterisk were going to Mrs. Graham's house party with their maids, certainly Miss Dash was not prepared to go unattended. So there was a wild scurry for maids. All sorts of domestics were pressed into service for the occasion and some of the belles even hired maids for the day or two which they spent at Santa Barbara. To such expedients are people forced when they are clinging to high social position with hooks of plated silver.

A Bell Hop for His Valet

Strangely enough the young men invited to Mrs. Graham's house party also received the intimation that there would be accommodations for their valets. Now valets are rare birds in San Francisco. Some of our most sought after chaps still pronounce the word in the French way, though John Drew made it an English noun several years ago. This is mentioned merely to indicate how benighted we still are in the matter of valets. Everybody who is anybody should have a valet, of course, and it never occurred to Mrs. Graham to suppose that some of her masculine guests were in the habit of "laying out" their own clothes and shaving themselves. Neither did it occur to any of Mrs. Graham's masculine guests to set her right by going to Santa Barbara without a valet. With admirable resolution they all determined, each invited guest in the privacy of his own thoughts, that they would go with valets or not at all. Our young chaps in society are just as proud about such things as the belles are. So valets were forthcoming from all sorts of unlikely places. There was Raymond Armsby, for instance. He took a bell hop of the University Club to Santa Barbara as his valet and nobody at Mrs. Graham's suspected that Armsby's man was a "buttons"; or if anybody did, he kept his counsel. Not so the wags of the University Club with whom Armsby is very popular. Armsby was having a great time in Santa Barbara until a telegram was brought to him. I am told he blushed when he read what his waggish friends had wired: "Send Pedro back at once. The pickling season has commenced. Yours truly, Kate Plunkett."

The Friskiness of Burlingame

What would Burlingame be without Eleanor Sears? Somewhat more otiose, a little more sedate, perhaps, but that is all. The dailies would have us believe that before the coming of the exotic Eleanor Burlingame languished in a sabbath calm that was broken at long intervals by the celebrated village cut-up Mr. Walter Hobart. This is far from the truth. Burlingame has all the color, spice and vivacity of the typical suburban retreat for the fashionable unemployed. There is always something doing at Burlingame, and of some of the things that are done there faint are the echoes that reach the bavardes of the daily press. The fact is that Burlingame has become decidedly Newportish in its manners, modes and moods. In other words it has begun to affect the ultra-conventional airs of smart society, as is evidenced by a frolicsome freedom from the restrictions which are regarded among the common herd as essential to a virtuous and consequently monotonous existence. This generation of B'lingumites has been educated out of the timidity of its forbears. It has adopted a social code that puts no penalty on diversions that are frowned upon by the commonalty merely because something of a hazard is involved. It goes in for emotions and sensations that keep the blood from stagnating; all of which makes it advisable for the dailies to keep as close in touch as possible with our little colony of idle rich, for something worth while from the news standpoint may develop there at any moment.

The Sex Metamorphosed

The popularity of Eleanor Sears at Burlingame is evidence of the progress that has been made by our smart set away from the old-fashioned and commonplace. There was a time when exhibitions such as Miss Sears has been giving at Burlingame would have scandalized high society or almost any other kind of society. That was when the ideal young woman was of the Amelia Sedley variety—a shy young person appropriately described as a shrinking violet. Nothing mannish about the young woman of those drab days. A mannish woman would have been regarded as a freak, as impossible in polite society as an effeminate man. Society has undergone a great change of attitude for the reason doubtless that the athletic craze has become universal. It is no longer odd for a woman to pride herself on those qualities that win distinction in out-door sports. If Miss Sears is to be regarded as at all unique it is because she has a little more of the athletic temperament and a little more of the physical qualities essential to athletic achievement than the average female athlete. She is a pace-maker for her sex. Perhaps she may become the mother of a race of athletes.

Society at the Lemolle

To Miss Sears the public is indebted for certain manifestations of the freedom from unconventionality, which, as I have said, has become characteristic of smart society at Burlingame. If Miss Sears had not tramped down the peninsula with a retinue of social celebrities at her heels we should never perhaps have known of the intimacy between Burlingame and the Lemolle House. Direct to this typical French restaurant and into the privacy of its upper chambers marched the fair pedestrian and the young matrons and young men by whom she was accompanied. Nothing wrong about this episode, to be sure, but how droll, how deliciously frank! It was a public event, of course, for Mrs. Carolan, the bosom friend of Mrs. Pat, and all of the young folk chaperoned by her were on parade with the newspaper reporters and photographers on hand to record pictorially and otherwise the details of the great stunt that was being pulled off to the greater glory of Burlingame. These people being above reproach, the Lemolle House was purified by their presence, but the incident is worth mentioning, illustrative as it is of the present-day independence of our smart-setters. In the Vendome San Jose has one of the finest hotels in the State, but the Lemolle House was in every way better adapted to the spirit of the frolic that Miss Sears motived with grace and gusto.

There is some fear that Dick Tobin may be permanently lamed as the result of the accident which he suffered when his polo pony fell on him. The friends of the family are sincerely hoping that this may not prove to be the case.

The Harvey-Baron Engagement

The engagement of Miss Genevieve Harvey to Ward Baron is one to which the trained critics of the social drama should extend unqualified approval. Miss Harvey is a very charming young lady. Unusual gifts of mind and person have made her a great favorite in the circle wherein she has moved since her debut and there are many very eligible bachelors who have been secretly suffering the pangs of disappointment since the pleasant announcement of her engagement. Mr. Baron is to be heartily felicitated on his good luck. His engagement may be taken as a sign positive that the gentle influence exerted by his fiancee has turned his thoughts from the reckless gayety of gilded bachelordom to the calm joys of domesticity. There is no doubt that in the past Mr. Baron has been a heady youth, eager to press the wine of life from the choice vintage of boon opportunity. That was but natural for one placed in his fortunate position; and it is natural too that he should begin to weary of frivolity and yearn for the substantial goods of existence. Mr. Baron is of a very wealthy family, so the wedding will signalize the conjunction of two fortunes. It is true that the Harvey fortune has been depleted by unfortunate investments, but it may be confidently anticipated that Mr. Baron will lend his assistance to its rehabilitation, now that he is to become one of the family.

Not Their First Romances

If the gossips of society are to be believed, both Miss Harvey and Mr. Baron have had affairs of the heart before. At one time it was thought that Miss Harvey would become the bride of Harry Stetson and Mr. Baron was very attentive for a season or so to Miss Genevieve Walker who, like his fiancee, is a relative of Mrs. Eleanor Martin. Once when Miss Walker was on her way to Philadelphia Mr. Baron accompanied the party to Sacramento and seemed inconsolable during the young lady's absence. The Harvey-Baron wedding will undoubtedly be an elaborate church affair as both are Catholics. Mrs. Downey Harvey, the mother of the bride-to-be, was Miss Sophie Cutter before her marriage and was a convert to the faith of her husband. The late Edward Baron, the father of Ward Baron, was married three times. His first wife was Miss Eva O'Leary of Tipperary. After her death he married Miss Annie Crooks who died at an early age. The third Mrs. Baron has been traveling abroad during the past year with Ward Baron's sisters, the Misses Margaret and Evelyn.

Shorb's Two Fiancees

The heart affairs of Norbert Shorb are complicated and interesting. Few young men could retain two fiancees for a period of several years. If the press reports be true Mr. Shorb has now lost both, and while this would seem an inevitable denouement, the finesse which enabled him to have two at one time should receive recognition. They were not acquired simultaneously. The first won Mr. Shorb's susceptible heart while skating. She was a member of Mrs. Shorb-White's famous skating club and weekly they rolled around the rink together. They became engaged. Later Mr. Shorb permitted sentiment to ooze out and determined to make a new deal. An unpublished statement is to the effect that the pretty fiancee's father declined to countenance an engagement and this fact spurred Mr. Shorb to further endeavor. However in time he became the accepted suitor of Miss Mildred Pierce, daughter of James H. Pierce of San Jose and niece of Mrs. Fred Beaver of this city, while continuing his attentions to the first fiancee. It was a difficult position to maintain. Both engagements were broken several times. The last break, described as final, is said to have taken place at a conclave of all concerned held at the St. Francis. But it leaves Mr. Shorb a record of romantic achievement.

When His Two Fiancees Met

The meeting at the St. Francis, I am given to understand, was arranged by the father of Miss Pierce. Both fiancees were present and each brought with her a large package of letters from the ardent scion of the house of Shorb. When Shorb appeared there was a tempest of hot words and a shower of tears and at the end of the disturbance both young ladies had renounced his friendship for ever and ever. The incident might have ended there had not young Shorb gone to the office of one of the daily papers in quest of vindication, carrying with him a detailed account of his heart affairs. One of his former fiancees got wind of his designs on publicity and also visited the newspaper office. She succeeded in having her name withheld from the story which was published on the following day. Of course everybody is wondering who she is. Let it suffice that she is a tall, pretty young woman with a pair of snappy bright eyes and a mind of her own; also that she is not unknown to journalism. I am told that when she met Shorb in the editorial sanctum the air was electric with her comments on his conduct and that his pleas for forgiveness were contemptuously repulsed. Miss Pierce too has become more obdurate than ever. It really looks as though Mr. Shorb's twofold romance has been shattered beyond repair.

"The Peninsula" Reopens

The vacation season of 1910 makes its formal bow on April 5 with the opening of "The Peninsula" at San Mateo on that date. "The Peninsula" has achieved a remarkable success and the outlook this year points to a most brilliant season. This success is fully deserved as "The Peninsula" is undoubtedly one of the finest resort hotels of the State. A large contingent of the society folk of the bay cities have reserved quarters for the entire summer.

In the Social Spotlight

Lavish and beautiful in all its appointments was the charming dinner given recently at the Potter by Mr. E. M. Greenway of San Francisco. The brilliant affair was given in the main dining room and the guests, among whom were many beautiful women in the most dazzling attractive creations, were seated at a large round table, exquisitely decorated with marvelously wrought silver candelabrum, shaded with pink, encircling a central candelabrum about the base of which were daintily arranged maidenhair ferns and pink sweet peas. These bloosoms were strewn over the board to an outer circle outlined with a gold band and interspersed at regular intervals with bouquets of sweet peas. Following the dinner the guests attended the regular Wednesday evening hop in the ballroom. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. M. H. De Young, their daughter and son-in-law, Mrs. Milo M. Potter, Miss Kathleen De Young, Miss Phyllis De Young of San Francisco, Miss Maguire of New York, Miss Peeks of New York, Miss Nina Jones, Miss Forbes of New York, Mr. Nixon, Mr. Sard and Mr. Chas. De Young of San Francisco.

J. W. Adams, a prominent railroad man of San Francisco, is at Del Monte for a few days.

The members of the Hermoso Cotillion Club will hold another of their enjoyable dances on Saturday evening, April 9, at the St. Francis Hotel. The Colonial Ball Room will be the scene of this affair, which will be one of the most brilliant of the series.

Horse back parties are much in vogue at the Potter. Nothing could be more delightful. With so many places of interest to visit, and so many mountain trails to explore, this method of passing the long spring days will receive a good deal of attention. Mrs. Hardenburg, who is staying at the Potter, was the hostess of a merry party who galloped through the city bound for La Cumbre on Thursday morning.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado included Mr. and Mrs. William G. Volkmann, Mrs. A. F. Holmes, James Irvin and family, M. A. Breen, Mrs. I. J. Talbott, Miss S. M. Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Greer, Genevieve A. Greer, Arthur Furber Greer, Mrs. R. H. McCord, Miss T. A. McKee, Robert McCord, Portia McCord, J. F. Reilly, Mrs. M. C. Gile, W. R. Patton, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Kittridge, Mrs. Henry P. Dimond and A. W. Dimond.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Warren of Troy, N. Y., are visiting the Vendome at San Jose for the month of April. Mr. Warren is a prominent banker of Troy, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Volkman of San Francisco are spending their honeymoon at the Vendome.

Mr. Leon Ottinger of New York City, who is visiting at the Vendome with his bride, is a prominent real estate operator of New York City.

Mrs. W. T. Jeter of Santa Cruz is visiting Mrs. James McNeil for the week end at the Vendome.

The gayest of spring hats, festive soft hued gowns, decorations of boughs of dainty apple blossoms, an elaborate menu and clever and amusing speeches were some of the leading features of the luncheon given Monday at the St. Francis in honor of Mr. J. B. Hume, retiring president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, by the Federated Clubs of San Francisco. About two hundred of the most prominent club women of the northern part of the State were present and enjoyed a delightful informal afternoon.

John Harris Ingersoll, president of the Ingersoll Watch Company of New York who is making a tour of the west, has been a guest of the Fairmont during the past week. Other arrivals from New York are John T. Kelly and George M. Jones who are touring California.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Bonhy who have been abroad for several months have returned to the city and have taken apartments at the Fairmont.

Among the recent additions to the "Service Set" at the Fairmont are General and Mrs. I. H. Patterson, U. S. A. and Captain and Mrs. E. B. Underwood of Mare Island Navy Yard, and Mrs. Shelden Evans, wife of Lieutenant Evans, U. S. N.

John Carstensen, vice-president of the New York Central Lines who is making an extended tour of California with Mrs. Carstensen, has been the guest of the Fairmont for the past week. The New York Central people are appreciating California as a place for winter travel, a half dozen of their officials having been out here this winter, including President C. F. Daly.

George T. Dexter, president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, has been a guest of the Fairmont for the week. Mr. Dexter is combining business with pleasure during his visit to the coast. Recently he was guest of honor at a beautiful dinner given by W. L. Hathaway in the red room of the hotel.

Clarence M. Howard of St. Louis, Mo., president of the Commonwealth Steel Company, one of the best known men in the steel business, was a recent guest at the Palace. Mr. Howard was a member of the Stillman party who have been making an investigation of railroad properties in Mexico and returned home via San Francisco.

Another important group of railroad men who met in conference at the Palace during the past week included United States Senator William A. Clark, president of the San Pedro, Salt Lake and Los Angeles Railroad, J. Ross Clark, his brother, who is vice-president of the road, and Thomas Kearns, former United States senator from Utah who is a heavy owner in that property. Senator Clark was met at the Palace by his son W. A. Clark Jr. and grandson W. A. Clark, Third, who have been staying at the hotel some time awaiting him. W. A. Clark, Third, to whom the devoted grandfather gave a million dollars at his birth and who has been called the "Million Dollar Baby" on that account is a joyous little lad and attracted much attention as he played about the court and corridors of the hotel.

Piedmont, April 1, 1910.

Dearest Bess:—

After all the rain of last week I am still in love with my hills, proof positive that I have found the one and only place in which to make a home—the Crocker Tract. It didn't seem possible that anything was needed to make this place more beautiful but the rain certainly fulfilled all the forecasts of those who were praying for it, and left everything sparkling like a jewel—in fact a whole bushel of them.

We are starting on our house as I wrote you we should and so awfully busy have I been that you lost a letter last week. I simply could not tear myself away from plans for both garden and house. And when I am not fussing about the place itself I am bhaunting seed shops—my latest purchase in that line being Wistaria plants, big ones, so that next season they will cover a pergola which has already been finished and is awaiting the selection of vines to go over it.

Tom is like a child with a new toy, leaves business an hour earlier to rush out and see if any new seeds have sprouted over night—or the foundation risen miraculously from nothing in the same space of time. Never have I seen him so enthusiastic over anything—even plain every-day vegetables are a source of delight now, and our kitchen-garden, if it lives up to his ideas, will out-vegetable anything of its kind that ever happened. You will be invited to the first salad, I promise, and woe unto your standing with Tom if you don't rave.

Yours as usual,

—Claire.

Maud Allan's Dancing

A Confession of Disappointment with a Few Discursive Impressions Received from the First Local Exhibition of a New Art Form (So-Called)

By Edward F. O'Day

Until we see Miss Isadora Duncan and are enabled to make comparisons it will be impossible to say whether Miss Maud Allan is a great exponent of the new theories of so-called classic dancing. Miss Allan is the first dancer of the kind who has exhibited her powers in this city and we have nothing to measure her against. So all that we can do at the present time is to record the impression which her dancing makes on our unaccustomed minds. To me it all seemed rather absurd. I do not think that I am burdened with an overzealous sense of humor, yet I could not help smiling at the spectacle which Miss Allan presented. Certainly I have never found a marble or a painted nude ridiculous; I have felt no disposition to grin in the presence of the Venus de Medici or the Venus of Velasquez. But to see a young lady capering about the stage in a scanty garment which revealed her breast, her arms and her legs somehow or other excited my risibility. When Miss Allan appears in public in undress she exposes herself to criticism of a rather intimate kind. Let me say frankly that I think her feet too large to be beautiful—and too flat. In the mind's eye a nymph at play in Arcady is a beautiful object, but in the flesh 'tis another matter. We are far off from Arcady nowadays, it must be regretfully admitted, and we are rather critical of our nymphs. Perhaps too we expect too much pulchritude of them, having made their acquaintance chiefly in the works of the masters. Miss Allan is a pretty-faced nymph with a sweet smile, but she is not bountifully dowered with beauty of form. A woman is apt to look ridiculous when she bares her legs; that of course, and not any consideration of modesty, is why she wears stockings at the seaside. In Miss Allan this aptitude is heightened by the cavortings—the word will out—in which she indulges. If her dances were a series of stately movements executed on tiptoe, the effect would be less unfortunate; but to see her gyrating wildly with uplifted leg or prancing downstage in bewildering and quite unnecessary haste, is to lose the illusion of graceful dancing. The wherefore of it all is rather hard to find. At moments there are suggestions of poetical interpretation, but the moments pass and the sense of the ridiculous remains. I found myself listening to the beautiful music of Mr. Steindorff's symphony orchestra and vaguely resenting the distraction of Miss Allan's capers. She gave at best a superficial interpretation, an illumination of the obvious motives; her dartings and twistings never reached the soul of the divine harmonies of Chopin, Grieg and Strauss. In the Spring Song and the Rubinstein Valse Miss Allan was closer to the meaning of the music, no doubt because the meaning is not too far beneath the surface. But in the rest of her offerings it was difficult to trace the connection between dance and music. She reminded me of a very immature nymph jumping and running in considerable excitement because she heard music and liked it. A very kittenish immature nymph she was, whether she danced to the music of Anitra or the voluptuous strains of the Danube Waltz. Tolerable familiarity with Ibsen and Grieg convinces me that Anitra would not have been carried away by Peer if she had danced the way Miss Allan danced. He would have sent her to her mama. Miss Allan's interpretation of Asa's Death is gratuitous; it has nothing to do with Grieg or Ibsen, so far as I could make out; and as for the Dance of the Gnomes, it seemed to me a senseless, graceless series of contortions, particularly laughable. I must confess that if Miss Allan is a fair representative of the school I am disappointed in the classic dancing. It is not inspiring, it is not interpretative; it tells nothing which a rudimentary musical sense could not extract from the music and it leaves all the best of the music's meaning where it must ever remain, in the soul of the listener. If Miss Allan helped to attune the listener's soul to the soul of the composer and of the player, she would be accomplishing a great deal, but I fail to see that she does anything of the kind. To the seeker for amusement she is a novelty, of course; but to the music-lover she is a distraction. As for the much-discussed morality or immorality of her dances, 'tis a subject which would hardly occur to the primmest puritan spinster watching her. The suggestion conveyed by her undraped figure to the ordinary observer, I repeat, is the suggestion of kittenish immaturity unnecessarily exposed to the cold.

Mr. Skinner and Miss Jewel

Considered in Connection with "Your Humble Servant," with a Remark or Two About Critics

By Edward F. O'Day

Being but a humble hanger-on of the theatre, a sort of annotator appending my faltering foot-notes to the text of dramatic criticism, I am a careful reader of the appraisements of plays published in the daily papers under the signatures of our trained dramatic editors. For their opinions I have the utmost respect, for their characteristic modes of presenting their opinions, nothing but unstinted admiration. Uttering my feeble cry but once a week, I feel my inferiority to the strong voices that ring out day after day in commendation or condemnation of the current theatrical attractions. Theirs is a giant strength of authority and it is but natural that the should use it like a giant, sweetly but firmly tyrannizing public opinion. Yet does it become my duty now and then to oppose to this sweet tyranny an amiable resistance, an apologetic opposition founded on careful consideration but not urged to the extreme of revolution. May I within these limitations dare to differ with the critics on the subject of "Your Humble Servant," the play in which Otis Skinner is appearing at the Columbia? 'Tis a presumptuous undertaking without a doubt and one that will gain me no credit, yet I shall chance it. Mayhap my very insignificance will be my shield against danger; a giant would scorn to crush an insubordinate leprichaun. It is against the radiant targes of Mr. Renaud of the Chronicle and Mr. Anthony of the Call that I feel constrained to dart my minnikin spear and I do it in the character of unappointed champion to Mr. Booth Tarkington and Mr. Harry Leon Wilson, the authors of "Your Humble Servant." Mr. Renaud and Mr. Anthony have conceived but a poor opinion of "Your Humble Servant" and they have not hesitated to say so. To Mr. Renaud it is "at its best, a thing of pretty sentiment, and, at its worst, a work of labored artificiality." Mr. Renaud finds that "it tells nothing but a story, and creates nothing but an atmosphere." This, I take it, is a little stronger than damnation by faint praise; also, it seems to me, in somewise contradictory. A play which tells nothing but a story may not be an Ibsen play or a Shaw interlude, but it seems to me that it may be a very good play just the same. A play which creates nothing but an atmosphere may not be a Shakespearian drama or a Greek tragedy, but it is hardly to be despised on that account. I suppose that a play which tells something besides a story is a play like "Ghosts" which delivers a clinical lecture and that a play which creates something besides an atmosphere is a play like "Hamlet" which created a new school of psychology. But if a play tells a story and creates an atmosphere; if in addition it is at its best a thing of pretty sentiment, it strikes me that it may at its worst show signs of labored artificiality and still be a mighty good play. The story which "Your Humble Servant" tells is an absorbing story and the atmosphere which it creates is a fragrant atmosphere which may be breathed without hurt. Mr. Anthony condemns in more turbid phrases. He finds that "fundamentally" the play is "a poor play," but in the same breath he tells us that "artificially it is saved" by "the art of Otis Skinner." May one humbly ask how, if a play is fundamentally poor, it can be saved artificially by art? This seems a complicated process. Is the artificial assistance extended to this poor play by the art of Mr. Skinner cousin-german to the labored artificiality to which Mr. Renaud refers? And can art save anything artificially in the present state of the dictionary? I am compelled also to disagree with Mr. Renaud and Mr. Anthony in regard to Miss Izetta Jewel. Mr. Anthony calls Miss Jewel a star. I fear that Mr. Anthony's gallantry has galloped away with his usual precision. Miss Jewel is not a star and if she is destined for a theatrical experience similar to that of Mr. Skinner, she will be considerably older before she attains stellar honors. Mr. Skinner has only been a star for a few years, but for very many years he was a much better leading man than Miss Jewel is a leading woman. There is no offense meant to Miss Jewel. She is still quite youthful and has gained considerably in efficiency since the days, not so remote, when she was the leading woman at the Colonial and Davis theatres in this city. Mr. Renaud says that she is "capable of supporting one of the few great actors in America," meaning Mr. Skinner. She is supporting him, certainly, but I question whether hers is capable support. Capable support for "one of the few great actors in America" could only be given by one of the great actresses in America and Miss Jewel is hardly that. Miss Ethel Barrymore would be capable in that sense and the part of Margaret Druce would not be unworthy of her. After all this disagreement with Mr. Renaud and Mr. Anthony, it is a pleasure to express my hearty accord with them in one particular and that concerns Mr. Skinner. What I would say in praise of Mr. Skinner they have already said much more eloquently. Mr. Skinner is a great honor to the American stage; he would be an honor to any stage. I can think of no sort of acting to which Mr. Skinner would be unequal. He was trained in a wondrous school where the training was catholic, neglecting no element of the acting art. His voice is a splendid instrument perfectly subdued to his usage; he can obtain any vocal effect which he desires. His face is plastic, modeling itself to thirty varied expressions in as many minutes. His carriage, his gestures show exquisite poise. One of the greatest of our actors, he plays the part of an indifferent mummer to the life. That is genius. An indifferent mummer Miss Jewel plays the part of a great actress without carrying conviction. That of course is the inevitable result of insufficient training.

The Wonderful Dr. Pauline

Dr. Pauline, the French hypnotist who is exhibiting his powers at the Savoy, must be seen to be appreciated. To hear his feats described is to remain incredulous. To see him perform them is to acknowledge that he possesses wonderful and unusual control of his fellowman. Just what that control is only the scientist can definitely state. Just where actual control ceases and trickery begins nobody can say without making a special study of his performances. Whether there is any trickery at all in his exhibition is open to doubt. To induce a cataleptic trance is within the power of many; to hypnotise is not uncommon; but to exact obedience from subjects of catalepsy and hypnotism to the extent that Dr. Pauline does, argues either extraordinary control or finished trickery. By what power does a man drive the blood from the human arm, leaving it as pale as the arm of a corpse, and then summon it back with a rush? Dr. Pauline does this or appears to do it, and he claims that there is nobody else in the world who can duplicate the feat. This particular feat Dr. Pauline performs upon a subject who travels with him. There are four subjects who travel with him and he uses them in the performance of his most amazing feats. He explains that he does so because they are easier subjects and it is a plausible explanation; but it does not preclude another not so creditable to Dr. Pauline. To give him credit, Dr. Pauline claims only to give an amusing entertainment. He says there are many names for his exhibition and that some people persist in calling it fakery. He does not attempt to disprove the charge by argument, relying on ocular demonstration. If there is fakery, only a scientist can say where it begins and ends. From experience with other hypnotists we know that they sometimes resort to tricks. Not content with the legitimate exercise of their truly wonderful powers, they work out elaborate surprises which are hoaxes pure and simple. Dr. Pauline may or may not belong to this class. He has a personality that wins respect and it would be difficult to charge him with trickery while under the spell of that personality. But in the calm after thought doubts will rise. Every spectator must resolve them in his own way. Certainly it is worth while seeing Dr. Pauline. Not to see him is to remain in ignorance of a surprising development of a branch of science which is as ancient as the fakirs of India.

play a return engagement at the Columbia Theatre commencing Sunday night, April 17. The engagement is to be limited to two weeks with matinees on Wednesday and Saturdays. During their stay the singers will be heard in no less than twelve operas and "La Tosca" with Ester Adaberto in the title role will be the opening bill. The cast of this production will be a starry one. Other works to be heard are "Rigoletto," "Norma," "Iris," "Mignon," "Madame Butterfly," "Carmen," "La Boheme," "Faust," "Il Trovatore" and the double bill of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci." Guerri and his great orchestra, so well received during the former engagement, will again be heard. Special attention will be paid during the coming engagement to the staging of the various operas in the repertoire. The scale of prices for the Lambardi season will range from 50 cents to $2.00. The advance sale of seats commences Thursday morning.

The Burton Holmes Travelogues

The Burton Holmes Travelogues, delivered by that splendid speaker and fellow-traveler of Mr. Holmes, Mr. Wright Kramer, will commence their season at the Garrick Theatre Monday night. On this occasion "Our Own Hawaii" will be the subject. "Our Own Hawaii" will also be given on Tuesday night and Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 p. m. The school teachers of San Francisco will be the guests of Manager Greenbaum at this Travelogue. On Thursday and Friday nights and Saturday afternoon the subject will be "New Japan Today," a truthful, striking and realistic "scene-transference" of the actual Japan of the present time. In Oakland, at Ye Liberty Playhouse, "Hawaii" will be given Tuesday afternoon and "Japan Today," Friday afternoon at half past three. "Old Japan" and "Java" will be given the following week.

May Robson at the Van Ness

The attraction that will reopen the Van Ness next Monday night will be Miss May Robson in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary." The popular comedienne will remain in this city for two weeks with matinees on Saturdays only. The story of the play concerns a maiden aunt who lives in the country and hates the city. Her nephew is attending college and between times manages to get into all sorts of scrapes. His aunt disinherits him, but all is explained and everything ends happily after Aunt Mary's trip to the city during which the "rejuvenation" takes place. The comedy is a ludicrous one and the talented Miss Robson keeps the audience laughing from the rise to the fall of the curtain. An innovation in the scale of prices of the Van Ness is to be given a trial and Gottlob, Marx & Co. announce that there will be three hundred choice orchestra seats to be sold at $1.00.

The Third "Pop" Concert

The third of Will Greenbaum's Sunday "Pop" concerts will be given this Sunday afternoon, April 10 at Kohler and Chase Hall at 2:30 p. m. Mr. Allan Bier, a young San Franciscan pianist of exceptional talent, will make his debut, assisting the members of the Lyric Quartette in a rendition of Schumann's "Quartette" for piano and strings, Op. 47. Miss Mary Pasmore, first violinist of the quartette, will play the newly discovered violin concerto by Hayden with Miss Harriet Pasmore at the piano, and the string quartette of the afternoon will be Franz Schubert's Opus Posthumous.

"The Chaperon" at the Alcazar

"The Chaperon" which is to be given its first western presentation next Monday evening in the Alcazar, was written by Marian Fairfax for Maxine Elliott, and so favorably was the famous actress impressed by it that she utilized it to open her own New York theatre, where it had a long run. Indeed the metropolitan critics unanimously pronounced it the best medium in which Miss Elliott had ever appeared. But while its leading character, a wealthy young American countess, is most conspicuously in evidence and runs the gamut of the emotions, from girlish drollery to almost-tragic seriousness, "The Chaperon" is not by any means a one-part play. It is comedy that puts everyone in the cast on his or her mettle throughout the three acts, for they appear as real people in situations and settings that might occur in everyday life. Its locale is in the Adirondacks, among an exclusive summer colony of New Yorkers. Everyone can heartily and without reserve relish the bubbling fun of "The Chaperon" because it is clean fun. The well-mannered and well-tailored characters will convey to Alcazar patrons a refreshing change from the uncouthness and squalor of "Salvation Nell." Evelyn Vaughan will have the part created by Miss Elliott, John Ince will play the hero, Howard Hickman the count, and all the other favorites will be equally well bestowed. Each of the three acts calls for an elaborate and picturesque setting which the Alcazar artists and mechanics can be depended upon to construct with the best possible view to scenic effectiveness.

The Flonzaley Quartet

The Flonzaley Quartet, the famous string organization that E. J. de Coppet, the Swiss millionaire, founded in 1903 and for eight years maintained at his "Villa Flonzaley," the members giving up all public work and teaching to devote their entire time to the difficult art of ensemble playing, will be Manager Greenbaum's star offering for April. After seven years' constant practice, playing only for Mr. de Coppet and his friends, the organization has arranged to tour in this country and Europe, de Coppet simply reserving certain weeks when they play at his home. The result of these years of constant ensemble work has made the quartet as near perfect as four great artists, all working with one object in view, can possibly be. Signor A. Betti is the first violin; Mons. Penchon, second violin; Signor Ugo Ara, viola; and Mons. Archambault, violincellist. The first concert will be given Sunday afternoon, April 17, at the Garrick. Quartets by Mozart and Schumann and a rare old "Trio" for two violins and violincello by L'Eclaire will be the offering. The second concert will be given at the Novelty on Friday night, April 22, with a Beethoven and a Hayden quartet and movements from works by Max Reger and Smetana as the offerings. The farewell concert will be given at the Garrick on Sunday afternoon, April 24, and a novelty in the way of a quartet by Dohnanyi, another old "Trio" for strings by Smartini and a Mozart work will comprise the program.

Woodruff Coming to Savoy

Dr. Pauline, the hypnotist, with Daphne Pollard and a clever vaudeville company, will appear at the Savoy Theatre for the last times this Saturday afternoon and evening. Next week the McAllister street playhouse will be dark, but it will be reopened Sunday afternoon, April 17, when "The Prince of Tonight," with Henry Woodruff in the title role, will be presented for the first time in this city. Mr. Woodruff is well known here and this, his first appearance in musical comedy, will be watched with particular interest. Seats will be ready Thursday.

Ferullo Band at Idora, Oakland

The programs offered by Fortune Gallo, manager of the Ferullo Band, now at Idora Park, Oakland, are neither so heavy as to be incomprehensible nor so light as to be unattractive to connoisseurs. Everyone therefore who attends the entertainments of this remarkable company of fifty Italian artists comes away with a feeling of satisfaction and a desire to return again and again. Ferullo is no faddist in music. The heaviest classic and the lightest ragtime receive each its due meed of attention from him and all are given interpretations that make them glow and throb with vivid life, a fact which ensures equal delight and satisfaction to all who attend these superb concerts.

"The Squaw Man" at Ye Liberty

Next week the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, present that ever welcome play of Edwin Milton Royle's, "The Squaw Man," the piece in which both William Faversham and Dustin Farnum starred at different times with marked success. In "The Squaw Man" Mr. Royle has written a play in which there is much stirring incident and has mingled the tragic and lighter shades of life in the right proportions. The drama tells a story that is full of throbbing interest and often becomes intense. Its glimpse of English life in the upper circles is followed by a picture of ranch life in our own West that is breezy and natural. Its action is spirited without being overdrawn, the lines are cleverly written and nowhere does it become "talky" or tame. Much of the incident in "The Squaw Man" is entirely new to the stage, and in theme and treatment it is far above most of the recent successes, so far as morality is concerned—all of which has made it an unusually popular play—a play that one can see and enjoy time and time again. It will be produced at Ye Liberty next week with the usual care and detail so noticeable in all of Ye Liberty productions, and should maintain its record for popularity. "Salvation Nell" is to be presented after "The Squaw Man."

A Mystery at the Orpheum

The Orpheum bill next week will be headed by Nellie Nichols, the songstress and comedienne who will introduce her medley reviews. She is the only Greek comedienne on the vaudeville stage and at one time was Greek interpreter in the New York law courts. She is gifted with a magnetic personality and has a uniqe way of getting her songs over the footlights. Under the odd title of Al. White's Dancing Bugs a quartette of skillful dancers will present a terpsichorean feature which, judging from reports, is appropriately named. Walsh, Lynch and Company will appear in a one-act melodramatic comedy called "Huckin's Run." It is pronounced a cleverly written piece, combing fun with a touch of pathos and an interesting story. The slang is amusingly contrasts with the rural dialect. The Picquays, Maurice and Ethel, who have but recently arrived from Europe, will offer something new the details of which they prefer not to announce, in order that their act may come as a complete surprise to the Orpheum audiences. Next week will be the last of Edwin Holt in "The Mayor and the Manicure." It will also conclude the engagements of Charles F. Semon, Barnes and Crawford, and Marguerite Haney in the musical playlet "The Leading Lady."

Grace George and her company appearing in "A Woman's Way" have left for the Pacific Coast after a triumphant tour of the principal eastern cities. Those who found enjoyment in Miss George's portrayal of the leading role in "Divorcons" will be pleased to learn that the charming little actress has eclipsed that interpretation with her efforts in the Buchannan play.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—Operations in the recent week have reflected the unsettled state of sentiment in the Wall street security market incidental to the expected decision of the American Tobacco case. Timid holders of securities have been cleaning house for an adverse report which has caused a generally heavy tone in stocks. What would appear to be substantial buying has occurred in the leading securities in the course of this liquidation with the result that in the closing session a fairly firm tone was exhibited. While the English bank rate was not raised above the four per cent mark, foreign exchange warranted a profit to be shown in gold exports and $2,000,000 of the yellow metal was taken for export and the chances favor further shipments in the coming two weeks. It was a notable fact, however, that stocks did not decline on this incident. The best opinion had it that there would be no decision on the tobacco case Monday. We are believers in higher prices for securities eventually.

Wheat—Last week was a most discouraging one for the believers in higher prices for wheat. Constant additions to the already liberal investments by larger interests were necessary at times to prevent the market from running into more or less demoralization. Non-professional speculators and investors have not been tempted to follow the big leaders and they have been compelled to make their campaign pretty much alone. That there is an apparently inexhaustible supply of new crop wheat still to come on sale has been clearly demonstrated on all the strong spots that the wheat market has developed in the last week. The present big owners have apparently pinned their faith to the theory that there have been enormous crop losses by winter killing this year. The Missouri report shows an April 1 condition of 67.5 as against 70 in April last year. Kentucky shows a condition of 50 as against 84 a year ago. Neither State, however, gives any figures on abandoned acreage. The Oklahoma report makes a condition in April of 92 as against 78 a year ago and says that only one-half of one per cent of the acreage had been abandoned as against eleven per cent a year ago. Official statements by the government on the condition of winter wheat on April 1 were made at noon, eastern time, on Friday. It would require a deterioration of 13.6 points from the December condition to bring the April 1 condition down to where it was one year ago, 82.2. No statement of the acreage abandoned will be made before the government report in May.

Corn—May liquidation was on in corn during the last week with the result that delivery declined a little more than other months. Meanwhile spreaders between the corn and oats markets sold distant deliveries of corn and bought oats.

Cotton—There has been a decided change of sentiment in cotton this past week, due, as we have predicted, to a change in the weather conditions, especially in Texas. As, during the past few weeks, the elements were the controlling factors of the market; so, now for the future will the increased acreage and any good news in regard to the same dominate the trend of prices to the exclusion of anything else. We herewith submit the report of the Bureau of the Census on supply and distribution of cotton in the United States which was issued a few days ago, and think the comparisons are instructive:

Supply	This Season	Last Season
Stocks in U. S. Sept. 1—In Warehouses, at Mills, in Hands of Producers, etc.	1,483,585	1,236,058
Ginned from Sept. 1 to February 28, inclusive	9,974,998	13,029,902
Foreign cotton imported	93,778	98,000
Supply for six months	11,552,361	14,363,960
Distribution	This Season	Last Season
Exports to February 28	4,599,682	6,556,571
Consumption—North, 1,298,197; South, 1,228,786	2,526,983	2,534,040
Mill Stocks February 28	1,674,331	1,850,033
Stocks in Warehouses, 1,932,521; elsewhere in U. S., 818,844	2,751,365	3,443,316
Total distribution for six months	11,552,361	14,363,960

The report discloses the fact that while takings by American mills to date have been 531,000 bales less than for the same period one year ago, 3,336,000 compared with 3,867,000, actual consumption was about the same during the first six months of the season as last year, only 7,057 less, and while mill stocks on February 28 last were 1,674,331 bales against 1,820,033 on the corresponding date in 1909. Bulls point to the small stocks at the ports, interior towns, etc., bears to the full stocks at the mills, to the accumulation of goods as a result of the big consumption and poor demand in America and to the easiness prevailing in the cotton goods market. The features referred to, however, will be lost sight of in the interest that will be taken in the new crop preparations and reports in regard to the same only strengthen our conviction that, under ordinary conditions, this new crop will be 14,500,000 or more bales. We therefore see no reason to change our opinion that the present price is too high.

Copper—The position of copper metal is consolidating for an advance in the international markets. For a fortnight current production has been absorbed by the markets—almost 4,000,000 pounds per working day. After the Easter holidays the copper and brass working industries of Europe will employ about 87,000 more hands than were at work at the beginning of the month. The Oriental markets are beginning to move briskly in manufactured brass and copper. In domestic markets all the large consumers of copper have gained 25 per cent in the degree of occupation over the business done a year ago. As trade is trending, the General Electric, Westinghouse, Western Electric and the other very large consumers of copper will be at full capacity in July. The American Brass Co., by far the largest copper-consuming interest in the world, is now running full time with three shifts of hands, and in some lines is making more goods than at the height of the last boom.

The best informed opinion is that by May 1 copper will be a cent a pound higher, which on the present basis of production means an addition of $18,000,000 to North American copper producers for a year's outturn at only one cent a pound above current rates. But when copper begins to climb it will go rapidly upward until 16 or 17 cents a pound in the coming autumn would be a fair price.

Local Securities—The chief interest in the local market for stocks and bonds seems to have been turned lately toward the power stock group where a number of new high records have been made. On rumors of increasing earnings which give promise of larger dividends, City Electric, Northern California Power and Pacific Lighting common have all been taken in hand and advanced by leaps and bounds. Of the balance, Spring Valley Water has quieted down and is selling lower by a couple of points. Associated Oil has been more or less active without fluctuating much one way or the other. Hawaiian Sugar stocks continue to be in favor, Hawaiian Commercial, Hutchinson, Makaweli and Paauhau having the firmest tone. California Wine has lately suffered a decline and Pacific Telephone and Pacific Gas & Electric stocks have remained practically dead. Bond trading during the week has been of rather small proportions and has not displayed any important changes outside of declines in Peoples Water 5s and Market Street Cable Railway 5s.

In view of the approach of the Halley comet and the speculation, even among scientists, as to what may possibly happen should its tail brush the earth, one of Edgar Allan Poe's short stories is of more than common interest just now. It is called "The Conversation of Eiros and Charmion" and describes in awful detail the result of a collision between the earth and a comet. The tail of the approaching comet is supposed to contain a certain amount of cyanogen gas, a deadly poison, and curiously enough the end of the earth as described by Poe seems to have been due to its envelopment in a gas of some sort, though the author does not name it. All those who delight in working themselves into a fever of fear over the visitation of a comet should read this tale of Poe's. It is a fearsome thing.

The County Council of Lancashire has found it necessary to appeal to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries to grant powers to prohibit the taking of mussels for human consumption from beds known to be dangerously contaminated. When the Council approached the owners of the foreshore they were met by the objection, which had been upheld, that mussels were wild animals, and there was no property in them until they were captured. One hundred million mussels are annually consumed in Lancashire.

Seven cities contend for the honor of being the birthplace of Homer, and several towns in Italy claim the right from his association with them of commemorating Guido Monico, or Guido d'Arezzo, as he is more commonly known. The little town of Talla, near Carentino, has set up a monument to mark his birthplace, but it is doubtful if the claim can be substantiated against the claim of Arezzo. It is generally conceded that Guido was a Benedictine monk, and that he was a great writer on music of the eleventh century. The claim is set up that he was born near Paris, and migrated to Arezzo. He wrote the "Micrologus," but Grove discards many of the pretensions which have been formulated concerning Guido's achievements. It appears, says Grove, that Guido invented the principle upon which the construction of the stave is based and the F and C clefs, but that he did not invent the complete four lined stanza itself.

An invention in connection with projectiles to be fired at balloons and airships has just been made by Herr Wagner, landlord of the Railway Hotel at Ensdetten, near Munster, in Westphalia. The projectile is so constructed that when it leaves the cannon four knives in the casing open, thus giving the missile greater destructive power.

replied that the person in question was an old man with a large family, and he would prefer withholding his name, or words to that effect, and King, though apparently not satisfied with the answer, left him.

The next day he again called upon Casey at his office in company with John Walton, a deputy Collector of the Port, and repeated his demand, though with no better success than he had met with the day before.

Casey then consulted me, and I told him I thought the matter would end there. I knew by the antecedents of Thos. S. King, that he must be a poltroon, and told Casey that I did not think he ever meant to bring the matter to an issue of arms. Casey, however, differed with me in opinion, and said that he had made up his mind to pretend to be shy of King, to encourage him, if he would, to take further notice of the card. I advised him to let King take his own course in the matter, and to trouble himself no more about it unless again called upon.

In the mean time King consulted with a gentleman, and acting, I presume, under his advice, addressed two or three notes to Casey on the subject. He also published a card in the San Francisco Herald, asking for a suspension of public opinion on the communication of Caliban.

Having received, as I understood, no satisfaction from his correspondence with Casey, Thos. S. King, notoriously connected with a sheet whose every issue teemed with the vilest and most indiscriminate personal abuse, one morning repaired to the pistol gallery kept by Natchez, on Clay street, and had his Derringer pistols cleaned and loaded. He then went in search of Casey, saying to several persons that he was following him, would make him give up the author, etc. He finally met Casey at the corner of Merchant and Montgomery street, next door to the Bulletin office. I happened to be standing near the spot, in a little segar store. King approached Casey and told him that he would give him until ten o'clock the next day to give up the real name of Caliban. Casey replied that he did not desire another minute; that he was himself the author and responsible. Upon this, King said that "he thought the author was a gentleman," and walked away. Better, far better had it been for the community, the country, and the lovers of free institutions all over the world, if, on that morning, King, Casey and myself had all fallen in a street melee, and the seeds of internal discord, afterwards sown so broadcast in the land, had been buried in our obscure graves. But it was not to be so. James King of Wm., provoked to retaliate on the cause of his brother's discomfiture and disgrace, published the next day in the Bulletin a very severe article, in which he alluded in terms of the bitterest opprobrium to Casey's antecedents in New York, and stated facts in connection with his life there, which, being published without any explanation, of which they were to a certain extent susceptible, had a tendency to degrade Casey in the estimation of all good men. The following is an extract from the article:

"The fact that Casey has been an inmate of Sing-Sing prison in New York, is no offence against the laws of this State; nor is the fact of his having stuffed himself through the ballot-box as elected to the Board of Supervisors from a district where it is said that he was not even a candidate, any justification for Mr. Bagley to shoot Casey, however richly the latter may deserve to have his neck stretched for such fraud on the people These are acts against the public good, not against Mr. Bagley in particular, and however much we may detest Casey's former character, or be convinced of the shallowness of his promised reformation, we cannot justify the assumption by Mr. Bagley to take upon himself the redressing of these wrongs."

Casey, upon reading the above, repaired to the editorial room of the Bulletin, and told James King of Wm. that he desired he would not rake up the events of his past life in New York. He said that he was perfectly willing his conduct in California should be scrutinized, and that if anything could be proven against his character here, he was willing it should be published; but with reference to past matters he was exceedingly sensitive; that he was young and inexperienced when the offence, for which he had been imprisoned was committed, and, as the evidence and the record showed, it was at worst but a case of constructive larceny. King replied that he would publish whatever he saw fit, and that, on the next day, he would be still more severe. Casey then told him he must be prepared to defend himself on the street, as he intended to attack him on sight, upon which King ordered him out of his office and threatened to kick him out if he did not go. Casey left the office and immediately arranged his private affairs preparatory to attacking Mr. King.

While all this was going on I was attending to a cause before Justice Ryan of the First Township, for Captain Dodge, of the schooner "Matthew Vassar." About twenty minutes past four o'clock of the day on which Mr. King was shot, seeing that another cause which was being tried was likely to occupy the rest of the afternoon, I asked to have that of Captain Dodge postponed until the following day. This was granted, and after my client and I had stepped out of Court, I saw the Evening Bulletin containing the above remarks with reference to Casey. I had not up to this time even heard that Casey had had an interview with King. I went from the Courtroom down on to Montgomery street, and stopped in the neighborhood of the Bulletin office. I saw many persons gathered in knots about the streets, and everything indicated to me that a fight was expected. It was now about twenty minutes of five o'clock. While I was standidng on the street a friend informed me that Casey wanted to see me at a bar-room kept in the rear of the City Hall by James Godfrey, Esq. I at once went there and among a great many other persons I saw Casey. He and I immediately stepped into the alley on which the house is situated, and I there learned for the first time what had occurred between him and Mr. King. He was very cool but apparently very angry. He told me that his determination was to attack Mr. King, and that he had finished the adjustment of his affairs, so that in the event of his fall there would be no difficulty about them. He said that he expected the meeting would result in a desperate fight, as Mr. King was greatly his superior physically, and moreover from the daily tone of the Bulletin, as well as from the notice he had given him, he took it for granted that he would be fully armed. He begged me not to be in the street at the time the fight took place, lest, in the event of Mr. King's death, I should be suspected of complicity, on account of my supposed connection with the Caliban matter. He then embraced me and I left him. I was secretly determined notwithstanding his injunctions to see the encounter. Like almost all old Californians, I was accustomed to such sights, and, naturally enough, when I knew that a fight was about to take place, curiosity prompted me to witness it. Accordingly I returned to Montgomery street, and after standing there some minutes, I concluded, as I saw nothing of Casey, that perhaps he had changed his mind about making the attack. I sauntered up Montgomery street, and entered the Bank Exchange on the corner of Washington. Here I met an old Philadelphia acquaintance named Peter Whiteman, and invited him to drink with me. While we were standing at the bar, the boy Butts (whose name appears in the subsequent examination of the case before the Grand Jury) entered the room and said something to Whiteman which I did not hear, and Whiteman immediately left the room. I suspected that King and Casey were about meeting and saw many persons standing about the sidewalks, but seeing nothing of Casey, concluded once more to leave the scene, and started up Washington street, on my way to my rooms on Dupont. As I traveled up Washington street, I was met by Henry B. Truett and Hamilton Bowie—the latter since dead, peace to his ashes! They were riding in Mr. Truett's buggy. Being intimate with both of them, I informed them of what was going on, when Truett remarked, "If such a fight is coming off, it is no place for me." I told them if it did come off I did not intend to witness it, and they drove away in an opposite direction. I continued up Washington street, and on reaching Kearny, I met James T. Green of the police (now Justice Green of El Dorado County) together with John Nugent and Samuel Stevenson, also of the police. We all went into a place called the Boomerang on Kearny street to drink. While we were conversing about my applying to Mayor Van Ness to have Nugent, who had been suspended, reinstated on the police, a man rushed by on his way, as he said to see Mrs. King, informing us that her husband had been shot by Casey. Presently I saw the crowd rushing up Washington street, following Casey, who was in charge of the officers, to the City Hall. From thence he was shortly taken to the jail. I went up to the jail and there found Thomas S. King haranguing the mob in a very excited manner.

I remained there sometime, and then went with a friend to my usual place of dining. After dinner, H. H. Byrne, the District Attorney, entered the room, laughing and apparently exulting over the occurrence of the day. He had, I think, been drinking a little. Presently with a very knowing air, and running his fingers through his locks he exclaimed: "Judge, this is your pistol," at the same time exhibiting a Derringer which he said his brother Lafayette Byrne, a deputy sheriff had taken from Casey. After Casey had shot King, Byrne was the first officer who approached him, and it is said that Casey, believing him to be his friend, slipped this pistol into his hand before entering the City Hall, not wishing to compromise the party from whom he had borrowed it.

I replied to District Attorney Byrne, "If it is mine, give it to me." It was not mine; mine were in my pockets where I habitually carried them. They were gold mounted and are well known to hundreds of men in San Francisco. I wished however to get possession of the pistol, for I thought I recognized it, and considered it no harm to shield, if possible, the party to whom it belonged from suspicion; the more especially as it will be remembered that Mr. King was not shot by a "Derringer," but by a revolver.

Byrne refused to give me the pistol and I said no more about it, taking care to leave him still under the impression that it was mine, knowing that, if called upon, I could easily clear myself of the suspicion. A few days afterward Mr. King died, and Lafayette Byrne swore at the inquest that his brother, the District Attorney, took the pistol saying: "Don't say anything about this, but try to find out the owner. I think some one else is engaged in this, and I want to ferret it out." Since my return from Southern California, he declares to my friends that he did not in that remark mean me. If he did not mean me, believing as he said he did, that the pistol was mine, who did he mean? If he did mean me, why does he, now that I have, contrary to his expectations, returned, so solemnly asseverate that he did not?

It was necessary for him however to keep up a fair appearance of devotion to his duty in this matter. His own safety demanded it. Once convinced of that fact, no feeling of honor could prevent him from turning the full tide of unjust suspicion against one who had ever been his unselfish friend.

The excitement caused by the attack on Mr. King, it will be remembered, induced the sheriff to summon a posse of the citizens to protect the jail against any attempt to take Casey therefrom. I among others was notified to serve, and did so.

On the evening of the sixteenth of May, however, an event occurred never to be forgotten or sufficiently deplored. On that fatal evening, while there was yet hope that the majesty of the law would be respected, and a popular outbreak prevented by an exhibition of firmness on the part of the sheriff and his posse, the Governor of the State, doubtless actuated by the best motives, suffered himself to be influenced by weak counsel, and relying on the bad faith of seditious and designing men, encouraged the sheriff by his countenance if not advice, to admit within the walls of the jail a party of men connected with the band of conspirators then organizing under the name of the Vigilance Committee. From that hour I knew that the fate of Casey was sealed, and believed that nothing could avert the storm that seemed about to burst upon the city. Several of us threw down our arms in disgust and left the jail. I went down Montgomery street and into Barry & Patten's saloon.

Auto Notes

That the demand for motor cars in this country is far from being supplied is evidenced by the fact that some of the leading manufacturers are unable to accept business opportunities presented to them from the countries of the old world. Only recently the Oakland Motor Car Co. of Pontiac had a chance to make agency connections in Egypt, Turkey, Asia Minor and Peru. They were compelled to decline the offer for the reason that their 1910 output had already been alloted to their American representatives.

R. D. Burris, manager of the Santa Rosa Garage, is in town to take delivery of a Hudson touring car from the Pioneer Automobile Co.

The popularity of Monogram Oil among those who most closely follow automobile affairs was decisively indicated by its use at Wednesday's hill-climb. Of the seventeen competing cars fifteen were using this brand of lubricant. Harris Hanshue who made the fastest time of the day, setting a new record for the annual hill-climb with the Apperson Jackrabbit did so while using Monogram. Hanshue won both the third and fourth events. Of the four remaining drivers who won first places three, Cousins in the Mitchell, Oakes in the Knox and Murray in the Buick "30" were using Monogram. Among the other drivers who placed while using the oil are A. Ruddle in a Ford, McDonald in a Winton, Charles Allen in a Thomas "70," Charles Soules in a Stearns, Hanson in a Stearns, C. O. King in a Maxwell, Walter Morris in an Autocar, Longwell in an Auburn and Shadburn in a Crawford.

"It would be interesting to know just how long the air pumped in a tire by any auto manufacturer will last," said Mr. Mathewson, Pacific Coast manager of The Diamond Rubber Co. "We are just in receipt of a letter from Mr. S. D. LeClair citing an exceptional case. Whether this is a record, however, or not, would be pretty hard to determine. Mr. LeClair writes: "It may be to your interest to know that I have a Model 'K' Winton touring car equipped with Diamond Tires. One of the tires still has the original air in it that came from the factory in the early part of 1906, right after the fire, when there were practically no streets in San Francisco."

An announcement that has been received with much enthusiasm by the local auto fans is the one just made by the San Francisco Motor Club to the effect that the next big event to grace the automobile bill-board will be a two days meet at Tanforan track. The dates set are May 29 and 30. Beside the auto races, which will cover every class of car, there will also be several novel features in conjunction that should make the meet the biggest thing of its kind ever held in this vicinity. Prominent among the latter will be a number of airship contests and demonstrations. The meet is a good-roads project, the proceeds to be entirely devoted to fixing the road from the end of the boulevard into San Mateo. Plans for a good road movement for San Mateo County have for some time been under discussion, the parties most interested being the San Francisco Motor Club, the Automobile Club of California, the San Francisco Automobile Dealers' Association and the San Mateo County Supervisors. The coming Tanforan meet under the auspices of the San Francisco Motor Club is a very definite result of these considerations. In speaking of the prospects Tony Nichols, Chairman of the Contest Committee, said: "We certainly expect this project to be tendered a hearty reception by everybody at all interested in automobiles. In the first place we are going to arrange for the best contests attainable and the sport will be fine. Secondly, the purpose of the meet should vitally interest every progressive citizen of either San Francisco or San Mateo counties. We have already engaged George Detrick as secretary of the committee for the meet and preparations are well under way."

The Mays Oil Company of Midway, Kern County, took delivery of a White Gasolene Car last week. After giving it a thorough test on the Kern County roads the driver wrote Frank Davis a letter, reading: "I would have written you a letter sooner but I have been pretty busy riding around the roughest road that I ever encountered. Had a fine trip down from San Francisco. We are about sixty-eight miles from Bakersfield and I have made the trip there and back three times without a bit of trouble. This car is certainly the best that we could have got and it goes up hill just as fast as down. In consideration of the roads we could not possibly expect better service.' When I go to town a crowd, ready with every kind of question, surrounds the car. It certainly has made a hit here."

Mr. A. McAndrew of Nordhoff, Cal., has recently completed a tour of New England, England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales and has written The Diamond Rubber Co. that two Diamond Tires on his Pope-Hartford car have covered some 9000 miles without any repair of any kind whatever.

Jack London's "Lost Face"

Jack London's first practical answer to the assertion of the Rev. Charles R. Brown, that "Martin Eden" was his last word comes in the shape of a new volume of Alaskan stories the title of which, "Lost Face" is derived from the first of the seven tales which make up its contents. These are not new stories put together after the recipe of Bret Harte, the tramping over and over of one bit of well tried road, but some of the good things which have been reserved for a first appearance now in book form. Mr. London's friends will be only too well pleased to have them at last in permanent form while the class of critics who can enjoy nothing because it is not something else or at the very least, written by some other author, will have the time of their lives picking flaws and discovering that the idea of a man outwitting a savage or freezing to death in intense cold or being the victim of a practical joke is not an original conception of Mr. London's mind. The stories are vigorous, virile, brutal, if you will, but nature herself is not refined and takes little account of delicate sensibilities. "Lost Face" details the scheme by which a Polish renegade, an escape from Siberian exile, determinedly working his way back to civilization, with the lure of the lights of European capitals forever in his eyes, who becomes, with his company of fur thieves, a prisoner of a tribe of savage Indians. The others had been slowly tortured to death. The last of them, Big Ivan, powerful in frame and of such low nervous organization as scarcely to feel a wound which would have disabled an ordinary man, is now reduced to a whimpering mass of suffering, and Subienkow, forced to look on while awaiting his own turn, finds himself shrinking not from death itself. "That would be nice. To pass out bravely and cleanly, with a smile and a jest—ah! that would have been the way. But to lose control, to have his soul upset by the pangs of the flesh, to screech and gibber like an ape, to become the veriest beast—ah, that was what was so terrible." In the few brief moments left to him this man, who had come so far and lived so much since his early youth when he dreamed dreams of the freedom of Poland, concocted a scheme by which the credulous old savage who was in charge of the entertainment for his tribe was led to believe that the prisoner held a great and wonderful secret which he would sell for a price. In any case the weapons of the savages would be powerless against this great "medicine," and it would be well for the chief to secure it for himself at the expense of a goodly portion of his material wealth. The terms of the bargain having been accepted. Subienkow annointed his neck with the brew which he had prepared and then, laying his head on a log invited the Nulato to test its efficacy, thus bringing about a speedy and comparatively painless death while the savage chief, having allowed himself to be victimized, was deprived of the name he had held all his life and became known thereafter as Lost Face, in indication of the status he had thus acquired amongst his own people. "Trust" is in a different vein. Fred Churchill was remaining at Dawson while his friend, Louis Blondell, was returning to Seattle. As the steamer left the dock Blondell recalled a message concerning a small satchel which he had left behind, and in the confusion of the departure the bit of property acquired a fictitious value. Later on Churchill took it into his possession and after incredible hardships in course of which he more than once risked his life, he discharged his trust, delivered the heavy bag to its owner, only to discover that its contents, instead of being virgin gold or something approximating its value, were only a rusty revolver and some ammunition. "To Build a Fire" recites with graphic force and particularity the fate of an inexperienced prospector who lacked the gift of imagination and despised the dear-bought wisdom of the old-timers as an old-wife's tale. He set out alone, in the intense cold, with the mercury at minus seventy-five, and the details of his freezing to death, after having failed to build a fire, are given with convincing minuteness. "That Spot" is a dog story and a good one, too. Thanks be! Spots are not too numerous but no one who has owned as many as half a dozen canines in the course of a lifetime is apt to have escaped him altogether. There is a grim and ghastly humor in "Flush of Gold," which puts it in a class with the ballad of "Alonzo the Brave and the Fair Imogene" and "The Passing of Marcus O'Brien" is another bit of fooling that passed out of the hands of its projectors. It is a story of Alaska in the days before the Klondike rush, when every community made and executed its own laws and there was none to enjoin. Red Cow banished its murderers, a supply of food varying with the degree of the offence from nothing at all to a fair ration being made to correspond with the civilized plan of a longer or less sentence of imprisonment. Marcus O'Brien was the judge of the community and had often visited the punishment on others. Having imbibed too deeply, with some of his comrades, it occurred to them to set the judge adrift down the Yukon without provisions in the boat. They expected him to return the next day, sobered but "mad as a hatter." When O'Brien awoke into sobriety and found himself alone on the wide expanse of the river, with nothing but an open boat and a pair of oars he immediately recognized in himself a victim of the law's execution. He must have killed some one, perhaps more than one, and without justification. He could dimly remember some of the incidents of his carouse but not enough to assert or deny anything. All he could conclude was that he had merited the full rigor of the law. Fortunately for him the season was in his favor and he escaped wreck and eventually made his way to San Francisco to live under another name, while his fate remained forever a mystery to Red Cow. "The Wit of Porportuk" is another Indian tale. "Lost Face" is the twenty-first volume put forth by Jack London during the few years since his first story, "To the Man on the Trail," was published in the Overland. This, like the majority of its predecessors, is from the press of the Macmillan Company.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Number 20,439, Department No. 4.

HELEN M. BONNET, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of HELEN M. BONNET, Plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Sixth Avenue, distant thereon Three Hundred and Seventy-five (375) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Lake Street, and running thence Northerly along said Westerly line of Sixth Avenue Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one Hundred and Twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Southerly Twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet to the point of commencement. Being part of Outside Land Block "B."

You are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 3rd day of March, A. D. 1910.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

A DAINTY TOILET ARTICLE

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the Theatre, attending Receptions, when shopping, while traveling and on all occasions should carry in her purse a booklet of Gouraud's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes.

It removes dirt, soot and grease from the face, imparting a cool delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of Five Cents in stamps or coin. F. T. Hopkins, 37 Great Jones Street, New York

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3110, New Series, Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of RICHARD ARMSTRONG, Deceased.

LENDRUM ARMSTRONG, Administrator of the Estate of RICHARD ARMSTRONG, deceased, having presented his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of the said deceased, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial, and it appearing therefrom that such sale is necessary, for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth;

And said petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 19th day of April, 1910, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court in the Grant Building, Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator authorizing and directing him to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation printed and published in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated at San Francisco, this 15th day of March, 1910.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 20,053.

MARY E. NORMAN, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY E. NORMAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

FIRST PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street, distant thereon seventy-five (75) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Sanchez Street, thence running Easterly and along said Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Southerly ninety (90) feet; thence at a right angle Westerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

SECOND PARCEL.—Commencing at the point of the intersection of the lines of the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, thence running along the South side of Twenty-fourth Street in an Easterly direction fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles in a Southerly direction parallel with Vicksburg Street ninety (90) feet; thence at right angles in a Westerly direction running parallel with Twenty-fourth Street fifty (50) feet; thence along Vicksburg Street Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement.

THIRD PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street, distant thereon ninety (90) feet Southerly from the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, and running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Vicksburg Street Twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Vicksburg Street twenty-four (24) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet to the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that the title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 17th day of March, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

Feminine Work for Men

Cookery is one of the few occupations at which both men and women have worked from time immemorial. The cooks of ancient Greece and Rome appear to have been male slaves, and down to the present day many boys, especially of French nationality, choose this as their life's wage-earning work, and deliberately prepare for it by apprenticeship to a man cook of established skill—that training being all-too-seldom enjoyed by their feminine competitors. But while we all know cookery to be man's work as well as woman's, it is a surprise to learn that lace-making also was at one time a common employment for men. So we are informed in Mr. Alan Cole's introduction to Mrs.. Hungerford Pollen's new book on lace. In the rules laid down by St. Benedict for his monastic order (the well-known liqueur, by the way, is a sort of domestic product closely associated with the same order) the monks were instructed that they must be "expert both with the pen and the needle—as they were for centuries." Mr. Cole says that there were lace-schools attended by boys in Devonshire in the seventeenth century, and that it was long "the custom for English laboring men to make lace in their spare time."

It is a point in the case that in those centuries, of course, men wore laces, even more than did the women of their day. Curious indeed it seems now to see in portraits stern warriors such as "the fighting Veres" of Jacobean days, and brave men like the Cavaliers who fought for Charles, wearing lace collars on their coats, and lace frills on the turned-over tops of their soft leather knee-high boots, and lace drawn up as rosettes on their indoor shoes. It is curious to note the evolution of ideas under which by degrees men came to leave all such smart decoration to women; it is not so in the lower animals, where the male is invariably the more showy. Perhaps one day the wheel will turn again, and men will once more become wearers of lace and fine brocades.

Talking again of cookery as a business for women, I wonder what is absolutely the highest wage that any woman cook is earning? Probably not over five hundred a year, even when she combines the duties of housekeeper with the cooking. King Edward's cook, M. Messager, has $5000 a year, and the King of Spain has just taken into his service, at the same wages, the chef from a leading Paris club. Is there any other occupation in which the wages of men and women differ so greatly, and why is this so? Probably because the men cooks who obtain large salaries are trained from boyhood very thoroughly, going up from the lowest class of kitchen-work onwards in a regular apprenticeship; while girls do not realize that they ought to be steadily taught and trained, and if they go to learn at all, imagine that a dozen lessons at a cookery-school are all sufficient. Chefs are dreadfully extravagant, too. This is another reason why they are in a better position—they simply insist upon being allowed to spend enough to obtain their results. Nobody who wants to be cooked-for economically dreams of employing a chef, and often it is ill-timed parsimony that spoils the cuisine, and gives the unfortunate artist of the pots and pans a bad name.

—The Gossip.

A Statue for Mme. de Stael

An English committee has been formed, with Lady Grove as president, to cooperate with a French movement for erecting a statue in Paris to Mme. de Stael. Certainly that great thinker and ardent politician deserves recognition, the more so as she was the subject of much insult and suffered exile and loss in her own day because of her patriotism and commanding mental ability. The insults were chiefly directed to her appearance. She seems not to have been at all beautiful; but, then, highly intellectual persons rarely are so—Nature is no cruel stepmother who concentrates all gifts on one favored child—the beauty is rarely of brilliant intellect, and vice versa. Even on the stage, where beauty is so important an aid in acquiring fame, it will be perceived on reflection that the most successful and powerful actresses are those who are highly intellectual, but by no means perfect models of regular beauty. The men of Mme. de Stael's day, all the same, found it the easiest stone to throw at her, when opposed to her opinions, that she was not lovely to look upon. When she made her chief friend of the most beautiful woman of her time, Mme. Recamier, the greatness of soul and superiority to petty jealousy thus indicated was not admitted, but it was declared merely to be an illustration of her vanity. Yet it is to the credit of the men of her own day that there were not wanting a considerable number ready to admit the superior attractiveness of such a great and active intellect over mere prettiness of face. She married a second time, too, when she was nearly forty-five, a very handsome young man of twenty-three, and, in the recently published Memoirs of her friend, the Comtesse de Boigne, we are assured that, "strange as it may appear, all the love was on his side; Mme. de Stael felt only gratitude at the affection offered to her"; and when she died, after six years of marriage, he was inconsolable. Her luminous and thoughtful writings have placed her in so high a position in French literature that it is a wonder that she has not earlier been "memorialized" in some way.

Talmud Wisdom

Blessed is he who gives from his substance to the poor; twice blessed he who accompanies his gift with kindness.

Do not worry thyself with the trouble of tomorrow; perhaps thou wilt have no tomorrow, and why shouldst thou trouble thyself about a world that is not thine?

There are three who are especially beloved by God: he who is forbearing, he who is temperate, and he who is courteous.

Life is a passing shadow, says the Scripture. Is it a shadow of a tower or a tree? A shadow that prevails for a while? No; it is the shadow of a bird in his fight—away flies the bird and there is neither bird nor shadow.

"If your God hates idolatry, why does He not destroy it?" Rufus, the Roman, asked Rabbi Akiba. "Would you have Him destroy this beautiful world for the sake of the foolish people who worship the sun, the moon, or the stars, that are but the servants of God?" Akiba replied.

The Slim Woman Is Winning

The day of the slim woman's triumph has arrived. "The thinner one is the more stylish," say the dressmakers.

This would have been sad news for the fat woman a year ago. She would have had to try dieting or exercise. Nowadays, however, the woman who is too fat for the styles goes to a druggist and gets a case of Marmola Prescription Tablets, one of which she takes after each meal and at bedtime and so reduces her superfluous flesh quickly.

These tablets, being made in accordance with the famous prescription, are perfectly harmless, and they are, also, the most economical preparation a person can buy, for they cost only 75 cents a large case, one of which is frequently enough to start a person to losing fat at the rate of 12 or 14 ounces a day. Pretty nearly every druggist keeps this tablet in stock, but should yours be sold out, you can easily obtain a case by sending to the makers, the Marmola Company, 1220 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

$3.50 Recipe Cures Weak Kidneys, FREE

Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining, Swelling, etc. Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K 601 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

GRAND AVENUE HEIGHTS

OAKLAND'S MOST BEAUTIFUL RESIDENTIAL DISTRICT OVERLOOKING LAKE MERRITT

You know, if you've investigated at all, that the district at the head of Lake Merritt is the choicest residential section in Oakland.

You know what Adams Point is developing into, and you know that Piedmont is growing toward the lake.

You know that Oakland's finest families are now assembling in this section and that within the next five years desirable lots at the head of the lake will be held at practically prohibitive prices.

Any one who has studied the situation will agree to these facts.

Grand Avenue Heights, as you will see if you will investigate, lies right in the heart of this district. It is sheltered from the winds, commands a magnificent view of Lake Merritt and of the Hills of Piedmont. is within the city limits of Oakland and within eight minutes by the Grand Avenue cars of Fourteenth and Broadway.

It is a mile and a half nearer Oakland than Piedmont and right at the edge of Oakland's magnificent million-dollar parks.

In fact, Grand Avenue Heights is one of the most ideal residential propositions in the State of California.

Lots from $35 to $40 per front foot.

Building restrictions, $3500. All street work complete.

Amendments That Please Mr. Hearst

The Examiner warns the Charter Revision Convention not to attempt too much. "The hour has not come for a complete new charter," says the Examiner"; It may be that the city needs one, but there is not time to perfect such an instrument before the next election." In the Examiner's judgment it will be sufficient for the present to tinker with the charter with a view to the simplification of the initiative, referendum and recall, the elimination of partisanship from politics and the prevention of franchise grabbing. In other words the Examiner deems nothing so important as the propagation of fads and fantasies to the end that the influence of the press be strengthened. The Examiner is an ardent advocate of all the crazy schemes of government by which the affairs of a community can be perplexed and the servants of the people rendered servilely subservient to a truculent press. The amendments which the Examiner considers of vital importance do not even remotely touch upon the defects and imperfections of our charter. All but one of them concern nothing but the machinery of politics. They are urged by men who delude themselves with the notion that you can approximate perfection in public office by making the caprice of the multitude supreme. The Examiner heartily approves them because the caprice of the multitude is Mr. Hearst's principal stock in trade. He almost has a monopoly of it. By increasing the importance of public caprice Mr. Hearst increases the importance of himself. Subject our municipal government absolutely to the fickleness of the multitude then will the times be incessantly out of joint and the people holding elections once a month to set them right in accordance with the prescription of a fastidious and querulous press. Heretofore the Examiner has not proved itself a safe guide in matters pertaining to the welfare of this community, but doubtless the enlightened people will continue to give heed to the Monarch's roars. It will not of course be remembered that the Examiner was more dogmatic than any other journal in its affirmations with reference to the charter which is now considered sorely in need of tinkering. When that charter was before the people for consideration the Examiner told us it was the most perfect instrument of the kind ever invented. Furthermore everybody who complained that the charter gave too much power to the Mayor was denounced as a rogue by the Hearst organ.

Return of the Native

How proud we ought to be in contemplation of our Greatest One! Is it not a sight for gods and men—this kowtowing of the crowned heads in the Mighty Presence? this royal genuflection as the Simple Democrat passes by? And did you observe how the Only One flouted the Pope? Did you see the flashing scorn of those glistening teeth unlipped to fling defiance at the Holy Office? Talk of Martin Luther shaking his fist at the Diet of Worms, or nailing his immortal pronounciamento upon the door of Wittenberg! Rather let us think of the Crested Jayhawk of the Mountain before the coming of the truculent Bald Headed Snipe of the Valley. Oh, but it was terrific, this fearless fronting of the terrors of excommunication, this Ajaxian defiance of the thunders, nay, of the fiercest lightnings of the vatican. Let Savanorola live in the pallid halo of his martyrdom. Let Huss and Bruno and the rest of them that perished for their principles and suffered for their conscience's sake enjoy their placid, passive immortality niched in some out-of-the-way alcove of the Temple of Fame. Nothing of this tame, unresponsive, subjective heroism for our colossus bestriding the world, upon whose broad, commanding brow flames the fierce spot light that beats upon thrones and their occupants as it illumes the stars of the stage world. With what ease our Fellow Citizen hobnobs with the greatest of earth, dwarfing them by his towering personality and crushing them beneath the ponderous contempt of his implacable democracy; What are kings and potentates and petty princelings to one who was born great, achieved greatness and finally had greatness thrust upon him? Even as the hookworm that walketh in humility and is the lowly beggar's boon companion. They say that he is coming back from Elba. Back from Elba! Not on your life. Elba would imply exile, whereas this Man of Destiny has found a welcome and empires for the taking wherever he has gone on his long hike through the jungles of barbaric lands and the sweet-scented salons of the effete civilizations. Would you say "Back from St. Helena!" thereby implying that our Conquering Hero had met his Waterloo? Back from Gaul if you will; back from Persia or Asia Minor if you are looking for petty historical comparisons with puny historical personages; but not back from something that spells defeat and presages disaster. Oh, no; back from Africa as Scipio came; back from Rome as Attila came; back from Paris as Alaric came; back from Berlin as Germanicus came; back from Egypt like another Moses; back from victory and conquest like great Caesar and mighty Charlemagne. But what will he do to us when he is back? For behold, we are in the hollow of his hand, and his will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. Amen!

What is Going to Happen?

The Great American is coming home. Do you realize what that means to him and to us? Coming home! Our times are out of joint and it is far from cursed spite that he should set them right. In truth it is all in strict accordance with the trend of the inevitable. It has long been taken for granted that Providence moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, and while it cannot be said that the movements of this special American Providence are mysterious, the exception cannot but prove the divine rule. The American people are only children, after all. They are subject to all the ills that childhood flesh is heir to including childishness and colics and fits. They require the strong fatherly hand and frequent sessions in the woodshed. They are often in condition requiring motherly application of the maternal slipper or grandma's remedial doses of soothing syrup. The only doubt in the minds of those who know how to think is concerning the manner of the Home Coming. That it will be portentous is beyond all question. Already the start is like a Roman triumph; the progress is royal to beat any mediaeval band; and the finish will surely be all the gods can bestow. That the welkin will ring is a foregone conclusion. That the plaudits of the multitude will outroar the shouting of the captains, is a safe guess based on our knowledge of the amount of noise that may vociferate from the throats of a multitude comprising a noisy democracy incited by noisier demagogues. But in what guise will the Great American appear in the presence of his howling admirers? What attitude will he assume? Will he condescend or patronize or merely radiate approving affability? Or will he come like a Thing of Wrath—an up-to-date Scourge of God? Is he pleased with his helotry or is he boiling with indignation at the way we have conducted ourselves during his long absence? Will he commend us for the manner in which we have invested or failed to invest the talents he left with us when he went hunting in Africa? Or will he roar his maledictions upon us like a Nairobian lion for our malfeasance, our unthrift, our incivism, our utter disregard of the Roosevelt precept and the Roosevelt example? Will he spare the big stick or will he spoil the child as he has spoiled the Egyptians? These are vital matters. They should give us long and anxious pause. What will the Master say when he returns to the plantation? How will he treat his peons?

Where the Fires of Bigotry Burn

The Ministerial Union of Los Angeles by a vote of three to one has rejected a proposal to invite the Religious Education Association to hold its next annual convention in the metropolis of the sun-kissed South. This action must not be taken as an indication of the prevalence of an irreligious spirit in Los Angeles. There is no city in California possessing more religious zeal than Los Angeles. It is a city of prosperous churches, it is steeped in all vintages of Christianity, it is never without a moral movement, its clergymen are never apathetic but always engaged in crusading against evil and promoting plans for restricting temptation and making virtue compulsory. The action of the Ministerial Union is therefore not to be justly ascribed to anything in the nature of local prejudice against the spirit of religion. The fact is that the Religious Education Association is not wanted in Los Angeles because, as one member of the Ministerial Union expressed it, the Association would be likely to "unload a lot of liberal theology on California." To be more specific this worthy defender of the faith added, "It will bring a lot of men here who will lower the Christian standard." Another gentleman, a Presbyterian minister, attempted to throw further light on the subject by solemnly affirming, "Thou shalt not yoke the ox and the ass together." But this observation must be regarded as somewhat vague since the gentleman failed to inform his associates as to which animal they were supposed to symbolize. The aim of the Religious Education Association, it is said, "is to spread the gospel of Christ by methods of teaching that shall attract the young and make the church work more helpful, more far reaching." These methods though approved by ministers of the Congregational, Methodist and other churches are repugnant to the Ministerial Union of Los Angeles because the members of that body being in touch with the secret dispensations of Providence and muffled up in the infallibility of their faith are not to be prevailed upon to give countenance to anything that savors of liberal theology. So we see that prejudice against modernism is not peculiar to the Catholic church. We also see that manifestations of intolerance are possible in the holy, enlightened city of Los Angeles as well as in the priest-ridden benighted city of Rome. The Protestant clergy of Los Angeles appear to be even less liberal than Cardinal Merry del Val, who was quoted the other day to the effect that he believes all honest men of every denomination are on good terms with God, and who draws the line at only one of the jarring sects, the one whose liberality is carried to the extreme of supporting an anti-Catholic paper in Rome of such complexion that it is tabu in polite society. The Methodists of Rome as well as the clergymen of the Los Angeles Ministerial Union would doubtless be offended were they told that they confounded bigoted narrowness with holy zeal, but that is precisely what they are guilty of. The Methodists of Rome are conducting a crusade against the Pope, yet the Pope is the head of a Christian church, the principles of which are the essentials of all Christian doctrine. Catholics believe in the existence of a deity; they believe that he made the world and governs it; that the most acceptable service to God is doing good to man; that our souls are immortal, and that crimes will be punished and virtue rewarded. These are the primary truths of all religion. Now the duties of any religion sincerely and regularly performed will always be sufficient to exalt the meanest and curb the most profligate. How absurd then for the ministers of one religion to make war on the ministers of another! How ridiculous is the figure that the Ministerial Union of Los Angeles cuts in its attitude of hostility to the Religious Education Association! The decalogue that these men stand for is the one that is written in the blood of the victims of bigotry, a decalogue rooted in the fantastic puerilities of theology, in the aberrations of fanaticism. Preaching the religion of reconciliation, they practice the religion of hatred. All that differ with them they would send to that gehenna where the worm dies not, the fire is not quenched. We are right, say they, and you are wrong; we have grace and you have none. These enthusiastic pietists though they believe that heretics are to be burnt through all eternity in the next world, would also burn them by a slow fire in this.

The Canadian Lure

Though the United States and Canada have been contiguous many years our discovery of our northern neighbor is an event of yesterday. It was the high cost of living that brought Canada to our attention. There are points where Canada and the United States are divided by a narrow river, and the price of the necessaries of life on the Canadian side is one-half the price charged on the soil that is under the beneficent dominion of Uncle Sam. Chiefly on this account, but for other reasons too, American citizens by the thousands have been lured over the border. Large sections of Canada are being colonized by self-expatriated children of the glorious land of liberty. Which reminds us that it was the consuming passion for our Republican institutions which was at one time supposed to impel people to the United States. To that passion was attributed the preference for this country that was shown even by Britishers who set out for the New World in quest of opportunities. Now it appears that the passion for republican institutions is not sufficiently strong to hold within our borders people who have observed that there are superior advantages to be had under the rule of the British Crown. More people are now rushing into Canada from the United States than from any other part of the world. This is a phenomenon of somewhat disquieting significance not to be ascribed exclusively to the high cost of living. Canada has many attractive features. It is not as was once a popular conception a vast unexplored region covered with forests of gloomy pine and wrapped for more than half the year in a mantle of frozen snow. The field which it affords for profitable farming is unequaled. Whole districts of many square miles in extent are composed of alluvial deposits from thirty to eighty feet deep, of soil in some places so rich as to bear good crops of wheat for several successive years without fertilization. In Canada are to be seen all the indications of a country rapidly emerging from a state of nature into one fitted for the abode of a great people. Deep forests are traversed by the electric wire; dismal cedar-swamps are crossed by huge railway bridges; and blackened stumps and gaily-painted cottages stand in close juxtaposition in spots which but a few years ago were known only to the wandering Indian. The potentialities of material development in Canada are incalculable, but its attractive features are not merely those with which it has been endowed by nature. The Canadians have a form of government the merits of which cannot be depreciated even by the most passionate and fanatical lovers of republican institutions. In no country has the municipal system of self-government been brought to a state so closely bordering on perfection as in Canada. Framed in imitation of similar institutions in this country and in England, it combines the special excellences of both. There is no muckraking, no graft in Canada; nor is the pernicious demagogue troublesome there. There are free schools in Canada, and though the people cannot possibly be so enlightened as we are according to our own irrefutable testimony, yet they are neither addicted to hysteria nor susceptible to the influences which on this side of the border keep the multitude in a state of agitation. Denied though they have been the benefits of divinely constituted republican institutions, the Canadians suffer none of the pangs that are gendered in the clash of classes. Furthermore, notwithstanding the allegiance which the Canadians owe to the British Crown there is greater individual liberty in their country than in ours. The individual in Canada is not held in restraint and terror by a tyrannical press, nor is he enervated by any of the communistic hobbies of a paternal government. Despite the comparative unenlightenment of the people they have not suffered themselves to be agitated by Puritans who would puritanize the world or tormented by the aggressively righteous who would regulate taste and appetite according to the maxims of their ascetic philosophy. Broad in their religious views, they have not deemed it proper to retain among the institutions of their country an official Church Establishment. They have ignored the example of their mother country, and will not submit to dictation in the matter of ecclesiastical polity. So on the whole Canada is a pretty attractive country. It has been frequently predicted by chauvinists of this glorious land of freedom that some day Canada would apply to Uncle Sam for annexation, but at present the fulfillment of this prophecy appears to be as remote as the millennium.

Out of Sight

"Do you think of me in my absence, sweet?"
He asked, as he sprawled at her dainty feet,
And the maiden gave him the soulful gaze
Which interiors masculine ofttime craze.

But she spoilt the gaze by her thoughtless say,
Which ran in a feminine, heedless way:
"I think of you in your absence, yes,
But more in your presents, dear, I guess!"

Perspective Impressions

My wife made me.—Andrew Carnegie. A true son of Adam is the Laird of Skibo.

It is but one step from moral enthusiasm to moral fanaticism.

If wives didn't ask embarrassing questions there would be fewer liars in the world.

The higher-ups in Pittsburg are going to jail because they haven't had sense enough to have themselves prosecuted by a revengeful millionaire and a personally conducted cabal. Yet the San Francisco object lesson is free for all.

The Bulletin has a special correspondent in Pittsburg. From which it is to be inferred that Crothers and Older are still on the leg.

The despatches tell us that the Hon. James D. Phelan has called upon Mr. Roosevelt. Doubtless to felicitate him on snubbing the Pope.

The Hon. Francis J. Heney has been telling reporters in the East that the elements in this community that elected Schmitz to office are responsible for the present administration. But he has not been frank enough to add that after the Schmitz administration came the Spreckels-Phelan oligarchy and then the reaction that always follows a storm of popular disgust.

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(The first chapter of this sensational serial history of the days of the Vigilance Committee of '56, written by the man whom the Vigilantes hounded through the State was printed in last week's Town Talk.. In that chapter was given the details of the bitter personal controversy that culminated in the killing of the Bulletin's editor together with the circumstances that led to the organization of incivism for the purpose of wreaking bloody vengeance under the banner of law and order.)

Chapter II.

As my narrative has now brought me to the organization of the Vigilance Committee, before proceeding further it may not be amiss perhaps, in connection with the current events of which I write, to state one little fact. Not with a view of injuring the gentleman on whom it in some sort reflects, (for I believe had be been gifted with more natural firmness his own heart would have made him more consistent) but from the illustration it affords of the hollowness and instability of the foundation on which the so-called "reform movement" was based. The evening before the rencounter of King and Casey, I was in Barry & Patten's drinking saloon on Montgomery street in company with J. C. Cremony Esq. of the San Francisco Sun, and Mr. Casey. While we were drinking at the bar we were joined by Frank Soule Esq. of the Chronicle, and another gentleman also, I think, connected with that press. The subject of conversation when they joined us was the braggadocio and threats of the King family, and the "white feather" shown by Tom in the Caliban matter that morning. Mr. Soule stated that he had been persecuted by James King of Wm. and had even gone so far as to procure a double barrelled shot gun for the purpose of killing him, and that nothing but the entreaties of his partner had prevented him from doing so.

The evening of the shooting of King, Mr. Soule called upon Casey in the County Jail, and taking him by both hands shook them heartily, saying that the people would thank him for what he had done. The day after the shooting of Mr. King, the fifteenth day of May, it will be remembered that the Chronicle advocated "Law and Order," but by some mysterious influence best known to the Chronicle and its patrons, "a change came over the spirit of its dream" before the setting of the sun, and on the following morning it was among the most rabid of the Vigilance press.

I have not thus digressed for the purpose of gratifying any petty spite entertained toward Mr. Soule or others; but merely because I think it due to those who have suffered by the acts of that damnable league of hypocrites styling themselves the Vigilance Committee, that the world should know exactly how much of sincerity and how much of self interest there was in the professions of purity made by that great engine the press, by whose powerful aid the unhealthy fever was so long kept up and by far the greater part of the treason perpetrated.

But to return to the thread of my narrative. As before stated I left the jail and went down town, and into Barry & Patten's drinking saloon. While there some one told me that the Committee were organizing, and that they intended to send me a notice to leave. I replied that "whoever brought it had better provide himself with a coat of mail," or something to that effect, intending to give the bearer of such a document, whoever he was, good cause to repent his mission. In the course of the evening I returned to the jail and remained there till nearly daylight. While I was down town I had ascertained that one J. L. Durkee, a member of the police (and afterwards so notorious as Captain Durkee of the Vigilance Committee police who was tried for piracy in seizing the arms of the State) was a spy upon the sheriff in the jail under pretence of being there on duty. I got an opportunity to notify James Herbert and another person whom I recognized on the top of the jail of this fact. Going around the jail I discovered a guard stationed in the rear of the building and saw Charles Doane, afterward Marshal of the Vigilance Committee, apparently in command. I remained in the vicinity of the jail till near morning and then retired to my bed.

I had by this time begun to regard it as prudent to keep out of the way. I had received many intimations from various sources that I was suspected of complicity in the shooting of King, and well knew what I had to expect at the hands of an excited mob, in the event of Mr. King's death, whether I was guilty or not. Madame Show, the lady at whose house I had rooms, received that morning a note in a disguised handwriting, stating that my life was in danger. It was supposed to have been written by a German who had joined the Committee. On Sunday, the eighteenth day of May, I rose late and went cautiously and well armed to a different barber's shop from the one where I had been in the habit of getting shaved. On coming out I observed the housetops in the vicinity of the jail crowded with people, and ascertained that a demonstration was about to be made by the mob. I secured a position, where unobserved I could witness all that occurred. The events of that black day will never be obliterated from the memories of those who witnessed them. After I had seen them lead poor Casey from the jail and place him in the carriage which was to convey him to his death, I left my place of observation and returned to my rooms. Here I was shortly visited by a few friends, one of whom was the bearer of a message to me from Casey, who desired me to leave town, as he knew the Committee intended to take me. I remained within doors the whole of that day and the next, and had my meals brought to me by Mr. Thos. Finlay, formerly one of the police, while my friends were on the qui vive and in constant communication with me. On Monday night I removed to the opposite side of the street. Here I received secret messages from persons who had friends connected with the Committee, begging me to be on the alert and trust to no one. My whereabouts was known to a German named Schmidt, and a Frenchman whose name I have forgotten—both members of the Committee, also to a Jew cigar vender, one of their corporals, named Wasserman. I also received many offers from persons who knew where I was, to take me into the country. I listened to all but accepted none, and kept my own counsel.

On Tuesday, the twentieth of May, the tolling of bells throughout the city announced the death of James King of Wm. I knew that they pealed the death knell of Casey, and with the unjust suspicions then aroused against me, perhaps of myself. I changed my room in the house I was in, and sent to a friend by a sure hand, a note I had received from one of the Vigilance Committee advising me to get out of the way. My friend supplied me with money and I prepared to leave the city.

Arrangements had been made that on the evening of the day on which I was supplied with money some of my friends were to call and go with me to a spot where a pair of horses and buggy were in waiting in which one of them was to accompany me into the country. There was a woman named Mrs. Eliza Greenwood who had some little things of mine, and before my departure I wished to call and get them, and also to bid her good bye. She was a friend of John M. Freeman, Esq., of Freeman's Express, a leading member of the Vigilance Committee, and afterwards a captain in what they called their Light Brigade. Freeman was absent on duty, and about five o'clock in the evening I called at her rooms which were in the same building with mine. While I was conversing with her, I heard footsteps on the stairs. A friend who had called with me, immediately escaped from the room by a window opening upon a balcony, and she begged me to do the same. I asked her to see first who it was, and she replied, "It is John." While I was reflecting that it was too late to escape, and he was but one man at any rate, the door opened and he stood before me.

On seeing me he appeared very much surprised, and even startled. He presently recovered himself, however, and said to me, "McGowan, I don't think you are a very bad man." I replied that "I hoped I was not as bad as my enemies would have it appear." He then said, "You are in my house, and hospitality forbids that I should betray you." He told me that I was hunted, and if others knew what he then did with regard to my whereabouts, my life would be of little value, and offered to give me an asylum at his rooms on Montgomery street. I declined the offer, and apologized for my presence there, telling him that I had only called to say good-bye, preparatory to my leaving town. The remains of a bottle of champagne which we had been drinking were on the table, and Freeman sent for another, pressing me to remain and drink it with him. All this time the lady of the apartment was signaling me to go out. I heard the sound of footsteps! Freeman told me not to be uneasy; that he would protect me while there. I thanked him, at the same time thinking that a knife, revolver, and pair of Derringers with which I was armed, were a better protection. I took a parting-glass of wine, and got out on the balcony which overhung the court-yard of the building, and so along it to my own room. My arrangements to leave were all made, and I lay down on the bed awaiting the arrival of my friends. Presently they came, four in number. I immediately put on a covered California hat, and accompanied them into the street, and high time it was that I did so. The bloodhounds had struck the scent, and were on my track. As I afterward learned, fifteen minutes after I left the neighborhood was surrounded, and some ten or fifteen braves entered and searched the premises. They were armed with sabres and pistols, and ransacked every hole, nook and corner, making a terrible to-do and clatter among pots, pans and kettles, but the bird had flown. They were very curious, and the lady before referred to was very furious, and spoke her mind in no measured terms, while Mr. John Freeman sat a mute spectator of the scene. My friends and I pursued our way through the streets which seemed to be alive with people toward the spot where the horses waited; but before we reached there, the heart of the friend who was to drive me out failed him. He dare not risk incurring the displeasure of the Star Chamber, and we bent our steps toward Commercial street. The rooms of an old friend, Mr. James P. Rynders, were on that street, opposite the "Polka," and forthwith I appropriated them. Mr. R. was himself absent in Sacramento, and knew nothing of the unceremonious manner in which I had taken possession of his lodgings.

The next day the Coroner's inquest was held on the body of James King of Wm., and a few hours afterward I was indicted by the Grand Jury for being accessory before the fact. The news of my indictment spread like fire—several members of the Grand Jury were sympathizers with the Committee, and afterwards members of it—and simultaneously with the finding of the bill against me, the Committee were made acquainted with the fact; ten or fifteen minutes afterward I was myself notified of it. Then came the "tug of war." The exertions of the Committee to get me, and those of myself and friends to keep out of their bloody fingers.

Thomas Finlay was arrested and imprisoned in the Vigilance rooms, where I learned they used entreaties, threats and bribes to induce him to disclose to them my place of retreat, but in vain. Finding him at length utterly impracticable, they discharged him after two days' imprisonment. William Mulligan, whom they had also arrested, was offered his liberty, I learned, if he would assist them to capture me, but he indignantly spurned the offer, and suffered banishment rather than tell them where he had last seen me. He had called on me only two days before his arrest. I remained ten days in my hiding-place in Commercial street. As may be supposed, the hunt for me had waxed sufficiently hot, as I had been unable to execute any manoeuvre by which to delude my pursuers into the belief that I had left town. After the first few days my friends began to be afraid to come near me, and I actually consulted with one of them as to the propriety of giving myself up to the authorities

Being a Brief Chronicle of Significant Events the Wide World Over

Oklahoma and the Negroes

A resolution of the Oklahoma legislature, providing for an "initiative" petition calling for a constitutional amendment that will prevent the negroes of the State from voting on future constitutional amendments has been signed by Governor Haskell. This is Oklahoma's second attempt to disfranchise the negroes. When the State constitution was framed a provision for this purpose was strongly favored but was left out for fear that the President would take adverse action on the admission of the new State. There is no excuse for denying negroes the rights of citizenship in Oklahoma. The whites outnumber the blacks overwhelmingly and the blacks have an opportunity for advancement greater than in nearly all other States. There should be no negro problem in the State, but the politicians of the State are principally from neighboring Southern States and they have brought their Jim Crow prejudices with them.

The Mullah Beats Great Britain

Contrary to military precedents established centuries since the British government has decided to haul down the flag in Somaliland and leave the country to the irrepressible Mad Mullah. Only two or three small garrisons on the Gulf of Aden coast will be maintained. The British troops will evacuate the rest of the Mad Mullah's domain and the punitive expedition which was projected when the Mad Mulah made his recent outbreak has been countermanded. The London press is not pleased with this action of the Government. It is feared that it will weaken British prestige in northeastern Africa and it is regarded as a hard blow to British pride in the military prowess of her sons. But the government is tired of trying to hold Somaliland. Millions of money and many lives have been sacrificed to keep the flag flying over this undesirable country, but now it will come down and the Mad Mullah will have undisputed sovereignty over the ferocious Somalis and will probably wreak his vengeance on the Italian colonists, the Abyssinians and the tribes that were friendly to the British. Thinking it cheaper to buy the Mullah than to fight him, the British some time ago offered him $10,000 to keep the peace, but the wily old fighter refused all overtures and the subsequent actions of the British government indicate that he realized the strength of his position. Henceforth Somaliland will be as sore a subject to the English as Abyssinia is to the Italians.

Apropos the Roman Methodists

Under the heading "A Roman Sunday, a Glimpse at Conditions Not Irrelevant to the Recent Event," the New York Sun quotes at length from the Saturday Review of London a description of an anti-papal demonstration which occurred recently in the Eternal City. The Saturday Review is a Protestant paper devoted to the Established Church of England, hence it cannot be accused of Catholic partiality. The demonstration was participated in by many who, it has been charged, are in sympathy with the attacks upon the Pope made by the Methodists of Rome, Asino, the obscene paper of which mention is made, has commended Methodist attacks upon the Vatican. We quote from the article: "On the afternoon of this day (Sunday, February 20) a rowdy procession was formed of between 10,000 and 20,000 persons, among them, according to the Temps, an unusual gathering of Italian functionaries, of members of Parliament, of notorious rather than celebrated journalists and lawyers, and of almost every noted Freemason in Rome bearing his masonic emblems. These people were one and all anarchists and revolutionaries, anti-clerical and anti-everything. They carried banners which bore blasphemous and seditious inscriptions and the number of revolutionary flags was so great that we are assured 'they looked like a river of blood and fire pouring down the streets through the modern city to the city of the past.' . . . . Here revolutionary speeches of a most violent description were delivered, notably by Podreca, the editor of the unspeakable Asino, and by Barzilai, a wealthy Jew Socialist member of Parliament. These violent attacks on the Pope, the Church and the monarchy were endorsed by Mayor Nathan, who expressed on behalf of the municipal bloc his hearty sympathy with the demonstration. . . . . Then came the usual cries of 'Down with the Pope!' 'Death to Religion!' 'Down with Austria!' 'Death to Christ!' 'Neither God nor Master!' 'Death to the King!' 'Death to the Queen!' . . . . In order that his holiness should hear their opprobrious cries several scoundrels used horns and megaphones, and in the course of the evening a searchlight was thrown into the windows of the Pope's private apartments the better to attract his attention to the outrageous illuminated inscriptions that appeared above their meeting house. The Italian police never interfered and the beastly crew were allowed to insult and annoy the Pontiff for over an hour in a manner which would not have been tolerated had he been a private individual, however criminal and obnoxious."

High Prices Due to the Tariff

Specific instances in proof of the assertion that the Payne tariff law has helped to increase the cost of living were given to the congressional committee investigating food prices a few days ago. The instances were supplied by Wallace Pierce, a wholesaler of Boston. Mr. Pierce cited among the articles of common use on which prices had been advanced, due to the Aldrich-Payne bill, olive oil, imported cheese, sardines, teas, coffees, macaroni, wines and liquors and cigars. On macaroni and olive oil, Mr. Pierce testified, the increased cost was traceable to jokers that had found their way into the tariff bill. In the case of macaroni one-half a cent a pound was added to the cost under the guise of a tax on the paper in which it was shipped, and in the case of olive oil an advance of one-half per cent more per can was made necessary by the added tax upon the can. Mr. Pierce stated that during the last fifteen years imported goods had advanced in prices about one-fourth, part of which was due to the tariff.

First Night Rider Conviction

The first conviction in the notorious night riding cases of Kentucky has just been obtained, the convicted man being one who was arrested and indicted with one hundred others for a raid on the town of Dycusburg two years ago. These cases have proved very hard to try, but now that a conviction has been obtained at last, others are expected to follow and it may be that the raiding and whipping outrages in eastern Kentucky will be brought to an end.

The Chartreuse Fraud

By the decision of the British House of Lords the right of the Carthusian monks of Tarragona to the trade marks under which they market their celebrated liqueur known as Chartreuse has been finally vindicated. When the home of the Carthusian monks at La Grande Chartreuse was dissolved in 1903 the monks established themselves at Tarragona and continued the manufacture of the celebrated liqueur by the secret process which is known only to a few members of the order. A Frenchman named Leconturier was appointed liquidator of their confiscated property and he sold the trade of the monastery to a company which proceeded to put a counterfeit Chartreuse on the market. Happily the monks had registered trade marks for the protection of their liqueur in England in 1876. When the fraudulent Chartreuse was advertised and sold in England these trade marks were used, having been obtained by trickery. The monks brought suit and although they were unsuccessful in the lower court, the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords declared that the use of the word "Chartreuse" and the trade marks belonged only to them. The decision is regarded as a very significant one because it expresses the judgment of the highest judicial tribunal in Great Britain that the French Associations law is a police regulation of a revolutionary character which seeks to confiscate property to which normally the French State has no title. The Lord Chief Justice pronounced the trade fraud "As audacious a falsehood as could well be conceived." Commenting on the triumph of the Carthusian monks the Saturday Review of London has this to say of the effects of the Law of Associations: "The transparent sophistries by which this sacrilegious brigandage has been justified have been exposed in the courts of every country in which the question has been examined, and today it is universally admitted that the rights of French religious orders to their property were neither greater nor less than those of the middle-class Englishman to his Consols or his freehold. The Agnostic and Puritan bigotry which in its hatred of French Catholicism has recklessly sown the wind of confiscation runs a chance of reaping as the reward of its labors the whirlwind of socialism. To those misguided Protestants who have swallowed the fable that the enemies of French Catholicism are actuated by ideals of a higher morality than the Christian, or at least the Catholic, world has previously known, the Chartreuse fraud and the Duez swindle should come as startling revelations."

Mr. Johnson Meets the Yrekans

The Hon. Hiram Johnson is meeting with much encouragement on his spellbinding tour of the State. The residents of one-night stands, hungry for any kind of diversion, keenly relish the opportunity of inspecting the distinguished young reformer for revenue chiefly who professes to be sacrificing his dearest interests on the altar of patriotism. They listen with all their ears to his exhortations, and when he solemnly asseverates his determination to disinfect the Augean stables and make the Octopus look like thirty cents, there is none so irreverent as to abate his enthusiasm with a yawn. He is received everywhere as though the people were never before promised redemption; as though they had never before seen a lawyer transformed into an angel over night. But the people dearly love impassioned oratory, and Johnson can orate with burning vehemence on any and all occasions with or without a retainer. As to whether he can persuade people by giving them in length what he lacks in depth is a moot question, the negative side of which was somewhat strengthened the other night in Yreka where Mr. Spreckels' candidate gave verisimilitude to some pretty passions in the presence of a thousand people. At the close of his performance the chairman addressed the audience saying, "Our next Governor will be pleased to met you all and to shake you by the hand, and I know that you will all be delighted to meet him. Now if you will all walk right up one by one on this side and down on the other Mr. Johnson will extend to each a personal greeting. But don't be in a hurry; there is plenty of time for all." The chairman was evidently in fear of a crush. But nothing in the nature of a stampede occurred; not at least in the direction of the stage. By actual count Mr. Johnson shook hands with seven women and five men.

Dr. Perrin and "White Hat" McCarthy

Dr. E. B. Perrin is not only a vindictive enemy, as United States Attorney "Bob" Devlin has discovered, but also one of the shrewdest bargain-drivers in this State. Those who have had the good luck to get the better of the old doctor in a bargain are few and far between. One of these is "White Hat" Dan McCarthy, the well known horseman. Some years ago Dr. Perrin got McCarthy interested in Fresno lands and after a great deal of haggling induced him to buy a considerable acreage, the payment to be made, not in cash but in horses. If I remember correctly, "White Hat" was to give the doctor one hundred horses for about three hundred acres. After making the bargain McCarthy went down to Fresno to look over his property and he was not at all pleased with the deal he had made. Now McCarthy is a good sport, willing to lose to superior bargaining capacity, and while he felt that he had been "stung" by Dr. Perrin he saw no reason why he should not even up the score as much as possible. So he quietly went around from one horsedealer to another and bought up all the broken-down animals he could find. When Dr. Perrin received delivery of his one hundred horses, instead of a stable of thoroughbreds, as he expected, he found himself in possession of a collection of the worst "skates" imaginable. So the doctor brought suit. When the case was tried McCarthy went on the stand and made a defense which was classic in its simplicity. "He gave me hog-wallow land," said White Hat; "so I gave him hog-wallow horses. He sold me swayback land, so I sold him swayback horses." The doctor lost his case.

Our Oil Magnates

Almost every day one hears of somebody who has made a fortune in oil. We are told that a brand new crop of millionaires has come out of the oil belt. This is a bit of exaggeration. A vast sum of money has come out of the oil belt, but it has been distributed among a great number of men, many of whom count that a fortune which others would regard as a bagatelle. Barbers and bartenders have become rich over night in Coalinga, but this does not mean necessarily that they have become millionaires. Any sum from ten to twenty thousand dollars is a fortune to a man who never expected to be worth more than the pittance he could save out of his wages. Some men there are, however, who have greatly augmented their fortunes in the oil district. They are gentlemen to whom the way of wealth is as plain as the way to market. The men who are qualified for recognition as genuine oil magnates are not many. Among them are Charles G. Wilcox, William Graham, C. A. Canfield, Joseph Chanslor, John M. Keith, Robert Hayes Smith, Alfred L. Meyerstein, William Matson, J. L. Briner, Robert Fleischacker and John Baker. Several prominent citizens have rehabilitated their fortunes in the oil district, among them being ex-Attorney General William H. H. Hart, who won celebrity as the champion of Florence Blythe in the memorable contest over the Blythe estate.

Seattle's Brazen Testimonials

To the question, When is a gold medal not a gold medal? the proper answer seems to be, When it comes from Seattle. That at least is the opinion held by several persons in San Francisco who were honored by the recent Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. Among the number is William Keith, the distinguished painter who exhibited several canvases at Seattle and was awarded a gold medal. Now a gold medal more or less is not a great deal to Keith, for he has won more substantial honors in the realm of art. But judge his surprise when the medal came and proved to be a bronze medal. It was a very pretty numismatic specimen, but it did not teach a lesson in veracity, for on its brazen obverse it bore the legend, "gold medal." Another of these "gold medals" done in bronze was awarded to the St. Francis Hotel. I do not know what other exhibitors have been honored in this doubtful way with bits of bronze, but I have been told of one of our feminine artists who won a silver medal and received in lieu thereof a very imposing certificate. This is a queer way to reward merit, it seems to me, and will hardly redound to the credit of Seattle. Bronze and paper masquerading as gold and silver will only excite laughter at the expense of the economical town up north, and back of the laughter there is bound to be a good deal of contempt.

President Ripley, Music Lover

It may seem strange that a big bluff man like President Ripley of the Santa Fe should be a great lover of music, but that is the fact. Although his work-a-day thoughts are concerned with traffic agreements, steel rails, tariffs and engineering projects, the great railroad man is able at a moment's notice to divert his thoughts with music. To put it more correctly, music has the power to distract his mind from more important things. The strains of a violin transport him to a paradise where no railroad may enter and he has been known to stand for an hour on a crowded street, listening to an organ grinding out ragtime. A few days ago there was hurried search for Ripley at the Palace Hotel. There were a number of railroad men waiting to interview him on important matters and besides he had an engagement to take Mrs. Ripley on a tour of the city. He was not in his rooms and the paging of numerous bellboys failed to bring him to light. Very much amazed Mrs. Ripley went in search of her husband and finally found him standing in a retired part of the great court of the hotel, entranced by the music of the orchestra.

The Man of the Hour

Judge Robert S. Lovett, chief of the Harriman railroad system, has been the object of much interest during the week. He has been seen a good deal in the company of his lieutenants—Stubbs, Kruttschnitt and McCormick—and his appearance in public places has invariably occasioned a display of rubbernecking. The fierce light that beats upon prima donnas and other celebrities, Judge Lovett has been bathing in all week. Wherever he goes you hear somebody say, "There's Lovett, the man from Texas who succeeded Harriman," and at once your attention is directed to a man whose appearance is precisely that which has been defined to be what the appearance of a perfect gentleman should be—so devoid of peculiarities as to be absolutely commonplace. The casual observer would take no notice of Judge Lovett in a crowd. He is a man of medium height, of well-knit frame, with a clean-shaven face upon which have been traced the lines that denote intrepidity and firmness of character. His dress is that of a gentleman whose tastes are simple and who doesn't give his tailor much bother. Though a lawyer by profession Judge Lovett is in a sense a practical railroad man; for as a railroad lawyer he made it a practice to prepare himself for trial by familiarizing himself with the physical elements of a case as well as with the law bearing thereon. He went into railroad shops and he mingled with railroad employees, acquainting himself with the details of equipment, as well as with the duties of men, the relations between transportation companies and shippers and all the technical features of the business. Thus he acquired a comprehensive knowledge which served him to such good purpose that when he made his first appearance in a New York court at once the leading lights of the metropolitan bar sat up and took notice of "the man from Texas." There are many points of resemblance between Judge Lovett and Mr. William F. Herrin. Each is a good listener, and neither is ever disposed to dominate the conversation; both are students of human nature and their judgment of men is seldom inaccurate.

To Make Judges Behave

A bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature making it a misdemeanor for a judge in open court "to make any adverse criticism of a jury or its members on account of the verdict in any action." From which I infer that Judge Frank Dunne and Judge William P. Lawlor have counterparts on the bench beyond the borders of California. The two blinding lights of the local bench are intolerant of juries that do not see the facts of a case as they see them. They seem to be laboring under the delusion that it is their function to judge the evidence as well as the law; yet if their apprehension of the facts of a case is no better than their conception of the law it is the reverse of being an aid to justice for them to trespass on the domain of the jury. Indeed occasionally the conceit that prompts them to censure juries not only defeats the ends of justice but increases the cost of our judicial system. The other day Judge Dunne frowned upon a jury for not agreeing on a verdict in the case of a man charged with murder, and uttered himself in a manner to indicate that he was very much incensed. Now as in presiding over the trial he had taken no pains to conceal from the jury his sentiments toward the defendant it is more than likely that when the jury did come to an agreement it was because of a disposition on the part of certain jurors to comply with what they believed to be the wishes of the stern functionary on the bench. The jury found the defendant guilty, but the probability is that he will be granted a new trial by reason of the judge's improper conduct. Perhaps the jury would have agreed even though the judge had not contributed the weight of his influence to the prosecution, but it is the duty of the appellate court to determine whether he was tried in accordance with law, and if it be found that the judge did not act impartially the defendant will be given a new trial. Does it not seem from all that occurs in our courts that it would be wise to restrain our impetuous and intemperate judges by making it a misdemeanor to violate the fundamentals of the jury system?

The Versatile Miss Jewel

It was very interesting, and no doubt very soothing to local pride, to read in Sunday's Call the enthusiastic expression of her love for San Francisco conveyed by Miss Izetta Jewel to Mr. Walter Anthony. Miss Jewel who returns to this city as the leading woman of Mr. Skinner's company, complained to Mr. Anthony that no notice had been taken of the fact that she was the first leading woman in the burnt district after the fire. Her evident pride in this fact misled Mr. Anthony into thinking that Miss Jewel was a San Francisco girl and it was with considerable difficulty that he extracted from her the confession that she was not a native daughter. "Are you a San Francisco girl?" he asked. "No," Miss Jewel answered after a while. "Maybe from Portland," pursued the inquisitor. "No," said Miss Jewel. "Oakland?" "What do you want to know for?" countered Izetta. I have Mr. Anthony's authority that Miss Jewel regarded his questioning with suspicion, but nevertheless he extracted the admission that she is a product of New Jersey. Ruefully she asked him if he would print the confession and implacably he informed her that it would have to be done. Finally the young lady told him that she was going to organize a new society to be called the "Adopted Daughters of the Golden West." All this is amusing. It becomes, however, somewhat bewildering when compared with Miss Jewel's attitude toward Portland. Miss Jewel loves Portland too. In fact she loves it so much that when en route to the coast she sent a letter from Salt Lake to the Spectator of Portland, enlarging on the delight she experienced in nearing that city. She refers to Portland as "Our City" and gossips of the Portlanders whom she has met on her travels as one to the manor born. She expresses the fear that she will be homesick for Portland and glows with the thought that she will soon be shaking hands with her old friends. Miss Jewel, it appears to me, is a very largehearted young lady. I wonder whether she will also organize a society to be called the "Adopted Daughters of the Webfoot State."

A Nuisance and Its Defenders

Not for the present are we to look forward with any degree of assurance to the abatement of the nuisance by which transportation in the Sutter street electric cars is interrupted at Sansome street. This nuisance having been resolved into a question of political expediency the interests of the dear people must be subordinated to those of private individuals. But as the deplorable situation calls for nothing more than the exercise of patience on the part of the public that tough old beast of a thousand burdens may be depended on to maintain its philosophic calm and composure. From one point of view the situation is not without redeeming features. To the cynical and the wise who can extract amusement from everything that exemplifies the stupidity of the sovereign people it has positive and irresistible charms. For example the appeal to the cynical temperament made by those tireless champions of the people, the Hon. Paul Bancroft and the Hon. Oscar Hocks, by vir-

These illustrious patriots by the enthusiasm with which they affect a virtuous determination to protect the interests of the people while harassing an unpardonable public service corporation and maintaining a public nuisance are as funny to persons of acute sensibilities as a pair of trick elephants in a circus.

Are They Making Good?

The supposition is that our parochial press has so effectually befogged the controversy between the corporation and the demagogues that Mr. Bancroft and Mr. Hocks are accepted by the unsophisticated general at the appraised value which they would have placed on themselves; in other words that as politicians they are "making good." But if this supposition be well founded then the purblindness of the people is an affliction that has come on them since last November. It will be remembered that the Supervisors who based their claims to recognition as champions of the people chiefly on their cantankerousness in this very matter of the street car nuisance were repudiated at the polls. It is true that Mr. Hocks and Mr. Bancroft were re-elected, but those gentlemen were formerly much less aggressive in the corporation-baiting role than they have been under the present dispensation. They had many friends in business circles who vouched for their sincerity and who were certain they would give all corporations a square deal. Even Mr. Bancroft, it was said, would be in sympathy with property owners and merchants on Sutter street, and he was not opposed by them though there were some that had not forgotten that he was started on his political career by the Phelan-Spreckels machine shortly after serving on the Schmitz jury.

The Franchise Controversy

This squabble between the Supervisors and the United Railroads is not the result of complications so confusing as the corporation baiters would have us believe. It is certainly clear enough that the right of the railroad to operate cars under the Sutter street franchise from Central avenue to the Ferry is not disputed. Even Mr. Bancroft does not dispute it. On the contrary, he would give it official recognition by resolution, the only dispute between Mr. Bancroft and the corporation being with respect to the rails upon which the Sutter street cars should be operated between Sansome street and the Ferry. The company insists upon using the outer rails which were laid in accordance with a franchise that has not expired. Mr. Bancroft insists upon having the cars operated on certain inner rails, not because the outer rails are a nuisance but because the space occupied by them may some day be wanted by the city for a municipal railroad. In other words Mr. Bancroft conceives, or at least pretends to conceive, that as a franchise once granted by the city may some day operate to the city's disadvantage the municipal authorities have the right to amend or abrogate it at their pleasure without paying the slightest deference to the vested rights of the owner of the franchise. Mr. Bancroft affects the belief that there is nothing more required to justify one in taking away the property of another than to desire it oneself.

The Taciturn Long

Of course Mr. Bancroft argues that the railroad doesn't need the outer rails, but his judgment in this matter is hardly conclusive. The judgment of the average Supervisor is not any better than his morals. But admitting that the corporation is holding the outer rails to defeat competition by the city, how does that circumstance tend to invalidate the franchise? This is a question that none but Bancroft's fellow champion Percy Long can answer, and Percy would rather look wise than expound problems in law. Concurring with Mr. Bancroft in the theory that devotion to the dear people is best evidenced at present by circumventing and harassing public service corporations Mr. Long has objected to the issuance of a temporary permit for the operation of electric cars on the outer rails, saying that it might embarrass him in certain litigation. Asked how embarrassment could possibly ensue, and whether on the contrary it might not be hazardous for the railroad company to accept a temporary permit which might be construed as an acknowledgment of the futility of its franchise, Mr. Long promptly swallowed his tongue and gave a sign of distress by wagging his ears. In justice to Mr. Long it should be explained that he is different from the average corporation baiter being defective rather in his head than in his heart.

Arthur Scribner Down and Out

How many people in San Francisco remember Arthur Scribner? And of those who recall him, how many have ever stopped to wonder what may have become of him after he left this city? It may excite a moment's sensation of regret in some of his old friends here to learn that Arthur Scribner is fallen on evil days. When he was at the head of one of our leading banks, the confidential representative of London capitalists, Arthur Scribner was one of the greatest favorites in clubdom. A big handsome man, ever dressed immaculately to the moment, he was a prime favorite at the Pacific Union, the Cosmos—the "exclusive Cosmos," it was called then—and at other clubs. His entertainments were tasteful and delightful; it was considered an honor of no mean kind to be invited to his select parties. Fortune smiled on Arthur Scribner in this city and he shared her bounties with his friends. But there came a turn in the tide; he lost his banking position and reluctantly left this city for London. Since then he has descended to narrow straits and only at intervals have a few of his old companions met him in the English metropolis, for he does not frequent the good society in which wealthy San Franciscans staying in London are sometimes privileged to mingle. But despite a hard fight with poverty Scribner always maintained his membership in the Pacific-Union Club. Regularly there arrived his check for dues, the money saved, no doubt, with difficulty and privation. Now that tie is severed. An assessment of $100 was recently levied on all the members of the club, the money being devoted to the building fund. Scribner was unable to meet the assessment and sent his resignation. When some of his old friends learned of this they regretted that they could not have forestalled that action by paying his assessment for him. Their regret is the last tenuous thread that connects Arthur Scribner with the life of the old San Francisco of which he was once so distinguished a participant.

Stanton's Vaulting Ambition

Phil Stanton has begun his campaign for the Republican gubernatorial nomination. He is industriously gumshoeing the Los Angeles end of the State on behalf of his ambition. Phil is a very able politician and there are people in the South who insist that only lack of fair opportunity has thus far nipped in the bud his ability to be a statesman. These people want to give him the opportunity by making him Governor of California. Personally I am willing to concede the Stantonian ability, because the concession at its limit does not exceed the average statesmanship of modern America. And in passing I will say that the present affords the best opportunity in the history of this country for any ability capable of exercising real statesmanship untinctured by self interest and rank demagogy. Stanton may be a statesman in the modern American definition of the term; but I object to him for Governor because he is inclined to hold himself aloof from the people; because he lacks confidence in their discretion; because he is subservient to the rule of men not entirely great; and because he is the custodian of a State secret that has long since outlived its usefulness to an autocrat who has since developed into a colossus bestriding the world. I am not sure that these objections are sufficient to debar Mr. Stanton from serving the commonwealth as its Governor, but I am sure that I would not like to be compelled to vote for him while laboring under them.

A Statesman's Dead Secret

We have not forgotten the awful cataclysm threatened by Stanton while he was Speaker of the last legislature. He told us at the time that unless we ceased our effort to conduct our school affairs in our own way Japan would come over and wipe us off the map. We asked Speaker Stanton what his authority was for this conditional debacle. We also asked him why we would be unable to defend ourselves against the destroying Jap. He refused to answer either question. It was a State secret entrusted to him by One Who Knows It All, and he would not betray the confidence for all the wealth of all the mines of California. At that time he would have sacrificed his ambition to be Governor of California before he would have revealed the reason why we should do the belly act in conjunction with the ordinary kowtow to the Master of the Orient and the Master of the Occident. At the same time, and for the purpose of fooling some of the people some of the time, Speaker Stanton promised to clean his breast of this State secret some day. He has thus far refrained from redemption of this promise. I now call upon him to tell us what he had in mind on the occasion of his grand stand bluff before the people of California when we "stood on the precipice" as he called it, and were rushing headlong to the demnition bow wows. I call upon him now to tell us all about it as a condition precedent to his further candidacy. He can do as he pleases, of course, and I have not the slightest doubt that he will try to operate his candidacy upon strictly Stantonian principles; but I warn him that unless he proceeds at once to unburden himself of that State secret, he will hear from me again in this relation vociferously and in no uncertain terms. I do not propose to have a candidate going up and down the land bearing a secret so portentous. Stanton must unload or take his finger off the trigger.

Trouble About the Boy Mayor

There was trouble in the Board of Education last week over the silly boy mayor project which has been sponsored by the Columbia Park Club. President Thomas Bannerman characterized the scheme as "part and parcel of this state of municipal hysteria," which was not a half-bad way of putting the matter. What particularly excited Bannerman's ire was the fact that a number of school principals had proceeded with the elections while the question of sanctioning the project was still before the board for settlement. This amounted to the principals taking the matter into their own hands; it was a flouting of the authority of the Board of Education and the president of that body intimated that he did not like it a little bit. But School Director Payot poured oil on the troubled waters, suggesting that the board had best let well enough alone. Herein was Mr. Payot the soul of discretion. When the project of electing a boy mayor was broached by the various committees which have been co-operating with the Columbia Park Club, it was suggested immediately that the permission of the Board of Education would have to be obtained. That sounded reasonable to everybody, but there was a strange reluctance on the part of the various men and women to carry the matter to the board. One after another declined, until finally it was decided that the proper person to handle the negotiations would be Mrs. Henry Payot, chairman of the publicity committee. Mrs. Payot is the wife of School Director Payot and no doubt it was thought that she would wield more influence with the board than a mere outsider. But Mrs. Payot did not appear before the board to request permission to hold the elections. Nobody appeared; hence the wrath of the president of the board. Just why Mrs. Payot did not go through the formality entrusted to her is a mystery, but it is easy to understand why Mr. Payot acted as a pacifier when Mr. Bannerman seemed inclined to investigate the snub to his authority.

A New Orleans Man on His City

A citizen of New Orleans who signs himself "Sazerac" has been unburdening his mind in the New York Sun on the subject of the campaign which his home city is making for the Panama Exposition of 1915. Sazerac is not in sympathy with the desire of New Orleans to get the world's fair and he swings his pen trenchantly in explanation of his state of mind. The letter which was published in the Sun on April 2 is a column and a half long, too long to be quoted in full, but it is an excellent campaign document for San Francisco. Sazerac complains that New Orleans is suffering from "exposition fever" which he regards as a most deadly and vitiating malady. He says sarcastically that when the Panama Canal has been completed, New Orleans is destined to become the metropolis of the world and that London, Hamburg, New York, San Francisco, Liverpool and Galveston will be mere flag stations for vessels on their way to New Orleans. "Whenever a citizen of Creoleville," writes Sazerac, "refuses to indulge in these wild and fantastic dreams he is unceremoniously termed a 'knocker' and in many instances his mental health is questioned."

The Reason for the Fever

Sazerac finds the wherefore of his city's exposition fever in the desire of real estate dealers to get rid of a lot of unsalable land. It seems that a lot of marsh land on the outskirts of the city has been drained and put on the market and that the crop of suckers who responded to the cry "Own your home" was not large enough. So the real estate men want the city to take this land off their hands for an exposition site. Sazerac opines that this is "the slickest land booming that ever happened" and speaks of the "maddening fury" with which the attempts to secure the exposition are being made. Of an association for the development of New Orleans known as the Progressive Union, Sazerac has little that is complimentary to say and he makes fun of the Union's delegation which went to Washington and claimed to have secured Taft's approval of the New Orleans claims. So little respect has Sazerac for this association that he calls it the "Mutual Admiration Society."

Facts About New Orleans

Sazerac then proceeds to the meat of his argument by detailing conditions in his home city. He says that "though it is one of the most highly taxed cities in the United States, the people of New Orleans enjoy fewer municipal improvements and advantages than any other people in the Union." Of the New Orleans streets he paints a depressing picture. It seems that many of them become "veritable quagmires" in the rainy season and that the whole city then takes on a "Venetian aspect." "After a heavy downpour," he writes, "the residents of the rear of the Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth wards are forced to remain at a downtown hotel" or "to wade through water knee deep and sometimes waist high." The electric cars, we learn, are put out of commission by reason of the water flooding the motor boxes and the Fire Department frequently pleads its inability to cope with fires on account of the impassable condition of the streets. The astounding statement is made that many residents of the city are denied free mail distribution "because of an order from the Post Office Department that mail carriers shall not deliver mail unless there are banquettes or sidewalks safe for them to walk upon; and this right in the city limits too." Again, "Sewerage and drainage yet remain to be installed in a great many parts of the city. Gas either as fuel or as an illuminant is denied many sections of the community because the mains are laid only in certain streets."

Fun at the Expense of Business

Sazerac thinks that New Orleans has cultivated the fun-loving proclivities of its inhabitants at the expense of its commercial prosperity. He tells how its supremacy as a cotton market has been wrested from it by Galveston and how buildings in Canal and other of the principal streets are tenanted by cheap kinetoscope shows and exhibitors of nude pictures. "Just prior to President Taft's last visit," he tells us, "some one suggested that all the 'for rent' signs should be taken down during the stay of the nation's Chief Executive. This wise individual explained that Mr. Taft might form the opinion that the town was not prosperous if he saw so many 'for rent' signs." Only when a Mardi Gras is in preparation or progress, it seems, does the city by the delta shake off its lethargy. And even then, says Sazerac, the city cannot boast of its climate which he thinks the worst in the world, with the possible exception of Liverpool. This is the sarcastic manner in which Sazerac brings his remarkable letter to a close: "The dirty and impassable muddy streets, the stagnant gutters, the declining cotton trade, the vacant commercial properties, the small and ill paid police force, the inadequate fire fighting facilities, the lack of sewerage and drainage, the increased rate of taxation, the railroad rate discrimination, the dock labor troubles, the decrease of factories have nothing to do with the question of exposition. Hurrah for New Orleans in 1915! Welcome to the Winter Capital of America!"

Senator Clark's Financial Methods

The fact that Senator Clark was in town recently reminds me of a story illustrating his financial methods. The Montana multi-millionaire is an investor and never buys anything for speculative purposes. In consequence he has complete confidence in the soundness of all his big concerns. When the Salt Lake road of which he is president was practically wiped out of existence by the recent storms in the south and southeast, Clark was in New York. On the morning that the news reached him of the stroke of misfortune which meant the loss of millions, he was in his office bright and early. The bonds of the road, I believe, are not listed on the exchange, being held principally by banks and other big financial institutions and they were quoted at 92¼. All that day Senator Clark spent at the telephone, conversing with uneasy bondholders who feared that they faced ruin and wanted an early tip from Clark to save their fortunes. To every investor Clark said the same thing. Yes, he had heard the news of the washouts and he did not think that it was exaggerated. If they would send their bonds to his office he would buy them at 92¼. Very few investors sold and although the damage is not yet all repaired the bonds still stand at 92¼.

A Unique Voting Trust

The Salt Lake road, I think, is the only railroad in the country which has a voting trust. This trust was formed in 1903 to insure Clark the presidency of the line for ten years. The voting power is divided between the Harriman and Clark interests. The Harriman stockholders have six votes and the Clark stockholders have an equal number. The thirteenth vote is cast every year by a New York trust company which holds Clark's proxy and for seven years now he has been elected president by that casting vote. The unique arrangement will last until 1913. By the way, I am told that Senator Clark is going to Biarritz to meet his beautiful young wife who has been spending some time at that fashionable resort on the west coast of France. When they return they will open the Clark palace in New York and there will be a new record made in entertainment.

A Palace Tradition Gone

One of the papers noted a few days ago that the waiters who used to balance dinner trays on their heads had been banished from the new Palace. That is too bad. Oldtimers would like to see those skilled equilibrists gliding along the corridors, carrying steaming meals on their heads without ever once touching the perfectly poised trays with their hands. It was a picturesque sight and there would have been no harm in perpetuating it. And now I find that another tradition of the old hotel has gone. The Market street entrance to the Palace is kept open nowadays until a quarter past one in the morning. In the old days it was closed promptly at a quarter after midnight. According to the rule of the hotel it should have been closed at midnight, but it was kept open for years for the additional fifteen minutes for the convenience of Dr. John Gallwey. Dr. Gallwey was one of the best liked guests of the old hostelry and every night, with the regularity of clockwork, he passed through the Market street portal at a quarter past twelve. After he passed through, the door was closed. The main entrance to the Palace, now as in the old days, is on New Montgomery. William C. Ralston planned the hotel that way for two reasons. Knowing that Market street was destined to be the busiest thoroughfare in the city, he thought that if the coach entrance to the grand court was on that side there would be danger of collisions between cabs and street cars. He was afraid too that the west wind would blow the dust and dirt of the streets into the court and destroy the white walls. So the Market street door was made a side entrance and is so today. By the way, how many people knew that alongside that Market street entrance was an ordinary old-fashioned bell pull which rang a bell in the upper court? Kirkpatrick learned of its presence there a couple of years after he became manager of the hotel, but never could ascertain why it was installed. Of course it was never used.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Number 20,439, Department No. 4.

HELEN M. BONNET, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of HELEN M. BONNET, Plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Sixth Avenue, distant thereon Three Hundred and Seventy-five (375) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Lake Street, and running thence Northerly along said Westerly line of Sixth Avenue Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one Hundred and Twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Southerly Twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet to the point of commencement. Being part of Outside Land Block "B."

You are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 3rd day of March, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

The first publication of this summons was made in "Town Talk" newspaper on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1910.

The Czar's Plans for Next Season

It is officially announced, by no less an authority than Mr. Greenway himself, that a Junior Assembly is to be organized under his colors, which are True Blue. This series will be in addition to the other Assemblies which will henceforth be known as the Senior Assemblies. That is to say, there will be two dancing sets at the Fairmont next winter under Greenway's management. The czar announces that he will no longer assume a tolerant indulgence toward other aspiring social leaders. "They all try it, and after a spasmodic winter or two, give it up. So what is the use? I'm going to have everything my own way hereafter and end all friction," he stated the other day, in discussing his plans for next winter. He made public another project. He is determined to lead the fashionables back to the simplicity and early hours of our grandparents. "Dances should be pure fun and gayety. Instead, we've been making hard work of them, beginning our dances at midnight when they should be well over. No more dances at dawn under my management." There will be thirty-seven debutantes next winter, with Miss Ethel Crocker leading them. Many, I might say the majority, plan to make their debut at the Greenway dances. In anticipation of this Mr. Greenway will spend the summer abroad gathering ideas on the latest frills and furbelows with which to brighten the Assemblies. The Junior Assemblies are to be made very pretty affairs, and for these favors and decorations will be purchased, as the cotillon, once so popular, is to be revived.

Mrs. Carolan May Be the Leader

Apropos of the next season, it is whispered that Mrs. Carolan is planning to assume leadership. As this lady has the time, the means, the zeal and the knack of such a position, everyone is hoping that the rumor has some basis in fact. Mrs. Carolan who is not particularly interested in dances, plans to interest society in the salon idea, and for this purpose intends to initiate a series of afternoons at which distinguished artists will be seen and heard. The ordinary afternoon tea, as every grown-up of average intelligence will admit, is an insufferable bore, to which it is almost impossible to get men to come. With nothing but trivial talk allowable under the rules of the game men and women of live mentality must necessarily feel as woodeny as they look. Now Mrs. Carolan has original ideas about afternoon entertainments and has the independence of mind to carry them out. The leisure class in local society is a large one. Two generations of travel gives versatility to a mind naturally acute and alive. This class, which usually spends its summers abroad is awakening to the fact that California, like Europe, has many charms. Travel abroad ceases to have a fascination after the sixth or seventh trip. But what to do at home is the question. Mrs. Carolan thinks she can solve the problem. So do her friends. They are willing to try and everyone hopes the resolution will burgeon into reality.

The Chauffeur and the Chauffeuse

Along with the coming of the automobile as a new factor in modern life came the chauffeur as a new object of interest to women of a certain temperament. The affections of some women are influenced more by the occupation of a man than by the man himself. It is by reason of this peculiarity that chauffeurs have figured in romantic elopements and in domestic scandals. But heretofore nothing much has been heard of the wives of chauffeurs. Until the recent activity in newspaper circles of a chauffeur's wife I never heard of a chauffeur that had a wife. I supposed they were all philanderers; that none of them were husbands. That the lady to whom I refer has not been brought to public notice is not because of indisposition to celebrity on her part. As the story comes to me she wants to be written up, and the newspapers will not gratify her passion. She wishes it to be known that the son of one of our millionaires regarded her as his affinity. And he, being a married man, has been fearful that the story might come out. The scare that he has received will probably cause him to mend his morals.

It Brought Only Ninety Dollars

That San Francisco society which waxed so wildly enthusiastic over the tableaux vivants is interested in the art of the past rather than in the art of today was made very apparent last Saturday night when an oil painting by Frank McComas was auctioned at the Fairmont and brought only ninety dollars. Considering that the painting was disposed of in the cause of the Columbia Park boys—surely a worthy charity—the mean price which it brought might possibly be set down to economy rather than to artistic indifference. And yet considerations of economy seem out of place in an assemblage where fortunes are counted in seven figures. The ball at the Fairmont was not very well attended, yet when the dancers gathered at suppertime there was a good representation of our gilded aristocracy. Mr. Samuel M. Shortridge was chosen to auction the McComas picture and enlisted every charm of his honeyed eloquence in behalf of the Columbia boys. But it was a thankless task. The bidding started at twenty-five dollars and went on sluggishly until it reached eighty dollars where it stopped short. In desperation Mr. Shortridge raised the bid to $90 on his own account, but every effort he made to extract a higher figure proved futile and he had to knock the picture down to himself. After buying it he very gracefully presented it to the ladies of the committee, to be raffled. I wonder how Frank McComas felt when he learned that one of his characteristic desert pieces brought only ninety dollars in a fashionable gathering? I will indorse any remarks which he may make on this subject.

Mrs. Carolan Made a Sensation

The quintessence of quality rallied to Mrs. Francis Carolan's banner on the occasion of this ball. Rarely has there been a ball this season at which such lavish display of gowns and jewels was made. When Mrs. Carolan entered, a perceptible hush came over the folks in the ball room. She created a sensation. Her gown, resembling a vast tongue of gas flame, glowed like blue fire. The corsage flashed, blinked and glowed as the changing humor of light was caught and reflected in the facets of the dark stones in the gold embroidery about the bodice, forming a crest of smouldering brightness to the luminance of blue in which the rest of the gown was fashioned. To emphasize this illusion of iridescent light, Mrs. Carolan trailed a cloud of blue tulle about her, its length flowing into the long pointed train, outlining her figure like an irregular halo of thin blue light. Through this shimmer of gauze, her diamonds flashed mischievously, a high collar of them about her throat and a string of them hanging to the waist. Her sombre coal-black hair was coiled up over her head and was held in place with two large diamond-set pins.

She Amazed Lady Wilson

Lady Sarah Wilson of London, Capetown and the rest of the world, strolled by to have a peep at the gayeties, coming with Mrs. Fenwick, Captain Fenwick, Major Wilson and young Captain Wilson, and when the English visitors beheld the flame-blue vision, they were visibly startled out of their British reserve. Lady Wilson who has the easy-going air of a thoroughbred Bohemian, took out her lorgnette and gazed through the glasses with the most deliberate scrutiny, evidently relishing the incident as an unexpected delight. She herself, coming from dinner at the Fairmont, looked the picture of typical English femininity. Her gown, a fluffy thing of black Chantilly and chiffon, brought into relief every coppery tint of her abundant curly hair which was done up into a high knot, a blue satin band holding the curls in place. She always wears these filets of ribbon about her head, their artful artlessness suggesting youthful coquetry. Incidentally she is a great friend of Lady Duff-Gordon, the "Lucile" of the Sunday supplement whose new dressmaking shop in New York is the rendezvous for the fashionables from all over "the States."

A Duff-Gordon Gown

Speaking of Lady Duff-Gordon, one of her famous gowns was worn at the tableaux vivants by the tall and handsome Mrs. Edgar de Wolfe whose relative, Miss Elsie de Wolfe, is the pet chum of the new arbiter elegantiarum in the fashionable world. Mrs. de Wolfe has just returned from New York, having gone there to select materials for the Charles A. Baldwin home in Colorado Springs. Since the Baldwins have sold their home down the peninsula to the Carolans they have decided to take root at the Springs. But to return to Mrs. de Wolfe. Her dress was the oddest thing in that gathering of fashion. It was made of soft, black velvet, without a curve to indicate the waist-line, and yet it was by no means the shapeless baggy thing of two winters ago. The skirt was hardly more than two yards around. It was a dress of amazing simplicity. The bodice was draped in a sort of fichu design, with kimono sleeves cut in with the rest of the bodice. Like all of Lady Duff-Gordon's pet models, this one was collarless. The effect was one of girlish youthfulness which, naturally, was very becoming. On another evening the same lady wore another "Lucile" gown, this time of hand-tucked chiffon made over satin figured with lavender wistaria. The bodice was made in odd kimono style and looked as if it were simply draped on the wearer. The lower part of the scant skirt was of white satin which hung on the floor all around for several inches, making the wearer look tall and slender, like a Burne-Jones figure in a cathedral window.

Miss Jennie Crocker Dazzled

Like the flowers that bloom in the spring, the girls and women have been blossoming into the most adorable gowns during the past week. It must be in the air. Miss Jennie Crocker came out as a bluebell the night of the ball at the Fairmont, wearing a gown which for daring and dazzle exceeded anything that shy young person has ever appeared in. It was made of silver gauze, over which was draped bright blue chiffon, engirdled with a broad band of brilliants or possibly they were diamonds. I cannot tell. When millionaires wear sparklers on their gowns, they may be real or imitation—no one is any the wiser, and one makes as much of a show as the other. The tunic of blue was hemmed up with a row of the twinklers, and the corsage was outlined with a broad band of them that made the petite lily-faced girl a gleaming glittering figure.

The Ladies Smoked in Public

Those who lunched at the Cliff House last Saturday were given a glimpse of approved European manners and found the sight piquant and interesting. Lady Sarah Wilson, the noted English doer of big things, lunched at the Cliff House with a party of friends among whom was Mr. John Ross of the Southern Pacific Company. After luncheon all the ladies produced their cigarette cases in a very matter of fact way and regaled themselves with their dainty Turkish cigarettes. There was no suspicion of pose in the act, no sign of self-consciousness in the ladies. They smoked as naturally and unaffectedly as they drank their black coffee. That they created something of a sensation among the other lunchers cannot be denied, but they were entirely oblivious of the excitement about them. Many of our ladies smoke in private, of course, but they have not the courage to show their zest for tobacco in the presence of strangers. Some of those present envied the insouciance with which Lady Wilson and her English friends flouted, all unknowingly, the conventionality of the west.

An Anti-Bridge Club

Bridge is not universal among women of leisure. This statement will be questioned but in support of it permit me to point to the Anti-bridge Club of West Point, New York. The members of this unique organization of reform are army women. They meet weekly to do otherwise than play bridge, possibly to do tatting. On this detail I am not informed and it is a minor one of little importance. The point to be dwelt upon is that they do not play bridge and that over their tatting, or not improbable discussion of votes for women, they rejoice in their freedom from the game's thrall. Mrs. Kerr Riggs, wife of Lieutenant Riggs of West Point, was one of the club's founders. It is of local interest to know that Mrs. Barry, wife of General Thomas Barry of Fort Mason who has been ordered to West Point, is eligible to membership. Mrs. Barry does not play bridge and has frequently said so. A bridge party mistakenly attributed to her, which in reality was given by Mrs. Berry, wife of Admiral Berry, called forth a statement of her position on the bridge question. It may be that the West Point women are pioneers in a larger movement which will result in anti-bridge clubs like anti-suffrage societies be-

A Word About Those Tableaux

It may seem discourteous and even irreverent for me to express anything but praise of the beautiful women who placed their charms on view for the sake of charity at the St. Francis last week, but just the same I am going to admit that I was a good deal disappointed in the tableaux vivants. In the first place it struck me as rather remarkable that the first tableau of all should be marred by an anachronism which a high school girl would be capable of pointing out to the good ladies who arranged the entertainment. Watteau's Le Fete Galante is a charming picture indeed and admirably suited to the exploitation of the varied pulchritude of our society ladies, but just how Marie Antoinette and the ladies of her court came to be associated with a Watteau picture is beyond my comprehension. Watteau never dreamed of depicting Marie Antoinette for the simple reason that Marie Antoinette was still unborn in his days. If my memory serves me he was sleeping in his grave full half a century when Marie Antoinette came to the throne of France. So historical accuracy would have been better served if Mrs. Henry T. Scott had chosen a later painter than Watteau for her tableau. Plenty of artists depicted the unfortunate Austrian girl during her brief sad reign and it was not necessary to flout chronology to arrange a suitable picture. Why did not some of our well-read bavardes who followed the arrangements of the tableaux call the attention of those in charge to this palpable mistake?

As to Their Fidelity

Mrs. Henry T. Scott is a very charming woman, but I must say that she does not in the least remind me of Marie Antoinette. This however is a criticism which might be applied to most of the tableaux. I cannot see wherein Mrs. Peter Martin resembles Madame Lebrun. Miss Keeney has nothing in common with Le Breton's peasant girl. Miss Alice Hager is so robust and athletic that she cannot be blamed for having failed to convey the illusion of Winterhalter's Lady of the Camellias; surely a more fitting subject might have been found for her. Similarly Mrs. Kohl failed to remind me of Gainsborough's Duchess of Devonshire. Mrs. Carolan is thought by some to bear a likeness to Mrs. Pat Campbell but neither Mrs. Carolan nor Mrs. Campbell looks a bit like the great Siddons as Reynolds painted her. Miss Sears is too much herself to look like Lady Manners or any other of the beauties whom Sir Joshua painted. And so on through the whole list. It was interesting to see our exclusive society women on review; it was splendid to note how many real beauties there are among them; but it was distinctly disappointing to make comparisons between them and the masterpieces which they strove to reproduce.

The Maclean Musicale

On Sunday last Mr. Donald Maclean gave one of his regular monthly musicales at his studio, 1613 Green street. Mr. Maclean has inaugurated the custom of presenting one of his more advanced pupils at each of these recitals and on this occasion he was assisted by Miss Florence Warden whose rich soprano showed in its fullness of tone and evenness of register the excellence of method of her teacher who is a De Rezske pupil. The "Hymn to the Sun" with which Mr. Maclean opened his program proved one of the most interesting numbers. This is one of the test songs of the Paris Conservatoire and demands above all things nobility of voice. Mr. Maclean sang it superbly, showing mastery of the old as well as the modern French music, the interpretation of which he studied under the most famous teachers during his three years of study in Paris. In "Geduld" by Richard Strauss, the singer showed himself equally at home in the intricacies of the modern German lieder. This remarkable song which contains three ascending climaxes was sung with an intensity which at the close left the audience thrilled and breathless. A group of English songs completed the program.

In the Social Spotlight

Among the business luncheons recently given at the Fairmont may be mentioned the beautiful affair given by Mr. J. K. Wilson in honor of Mr. G. M. Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of New York City. Also that of Mr. Frank B. Anderson, president of the Bank of California to the same distinguished gentleman, and his party.

Mr. George T. Dexter, president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company was guest of honor at an elaborate dinner given by W. L. Hathaway in the Red Room of the Fairmont on Tuesday and on Thursday returned the compliment by giving another dinner in honor of his district managers and representatives on the coast.

Mr. C. A. Coffin of New York, president of the General Electric Company, was the honored guest at a splendid dinner party given by Dr. W. A. Addison of this city to fifty of the most prominent men connected with the electrical business in this city. The Red Room of the Fairmont, which has been the scene of so many beautiful affairs, has held none more delightful than this.

With the arrival of Judge Lovett's party at the Palace the roster of prominent railroad men who have been its guests is complete. Judge Lovett came west in his special train, accompanied by his vice-presidents and assistants on a trip of inspection and to hold conference with President E. P. Ripley of the Santa Fe Railroad, who, in company with his officials, had preceded him to the Palace.

With President Lovett were the following Southern Pacific officials: G. W Goelet, C. C. Stillman, Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance and operation, H. Neill, J. W. McKinley, L. H. Cornell, E. O. McCormick, assistant traffic manager. They were met at the Palace Hotel by J. C. Stubbs, director of traffic who arrived a few hours before them. In the party accompanying President E. P. Ripley were W. H. Hodges of Chicago, vice-president in charge of purchases; General Manager A. G. Wells of Los Angeles; Assistant Passenger Traffic Manager John J. Byrne of Los Angeles; Assistant General Passenger Agent H. K. Gregory; General Superintendent I. L. Hibbard of Los Angeles; Captain A. H. Payson, assistant to the president; Assistant Freight Manager Edward H. Chambers; George F. Nicholson, vice-president in charge of traffic; A. J. Black, passenger traffic manager; T. B. Houghton, freight traffic manager, all of Chicago.

Friends of Mrs. Loughborough and Miss Bessie Zane are welcoming them back to their apartments at the Fairmont, after their extended visit to New York and the East.

Illustrative of the popularity of the Palace facilities for handling social affairs, just two evenings out of a week may be noted: On Friday, the golden ballroom was the scene of the splendid cotillon given by the Entre Nous Cotillon Club, one of the oldest dancing organizations in the city, this particular cotillon being the twenty-sixth which has been held in the Palace. At the same time the banquet room was occupied by the alumni of the University of Michigan, which met at its annual dinner; while the small reception room was the scene of the meeting of the American Society of Civil Engineers, in their regular session.

Again on Saturday, the annual banquet of the Phi Alpha Kappa Chapter was held in the golden ballroom and the annual banquet of the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity took place on the same evening in the Grey Banquet room.

The Palace has been the scene of nearly all the important fraternity and sorority banquets of the year and is in high favor with the men of these societies.

Among the permanent summer guests who have arrived at The Peninsula are Mr. A. S. Whitney and two sons, L. D. St. John, of San Mateo; Mrs. J. M. Purrington of Oakland; Dr. W. C. Chidester of San Mateo; Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Grow of San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. Julius Ach of San Francisco; Miss Bertha Baden, San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. Julian Hart, San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Whitwell, Boston; Mrs. Spencer Ashlin and Mrs. R. B. Lindsay, San Francisco.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado included R. W. Ring, Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Dodge, Thomas B. Owen, Mrs. Marcus Stone, Mrs. H. W. Hyman, Mrs. F. Baruch and family, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Gordon, Thomas Mirk and A. W. Jackson.

Dr. and Mrs. Grant Selfridge are not going to Europe, as was recently reported in the daily press.

The final arrangements for the wedding of Miss Renee Kelly and Edward Alexander Palmer have been completed. It will be celebrated on Monday afternoon at 6 o'clock, April 25, at the residence of the bride's parents in Devisadero street. Mrs. John G. Ewing (Ethel Kelly) will be the matron of honor while Miss Louise McCormick will be the bridesmaid. Clinton Kelley Judy of Los Angeles will attend the groom as best man. Rev. Father Touey of the Paulist Fathers will be the officiating clergyman.

Mrs. A. B. Tower and Miss W. T. Haggerly of Springfield, Mass., are spending the month in San Francisco, and are registered at the Hotel Victoria.

Rear Admiral Uriel Sebree (retired) and Mrs. Sebree who have made their home at the Fairmont for the past two months, left on Monday for an extended visit to San Diego, Mrs. Sebree's home. The admiral has been taking lessons in the "navigation of an automobile" and is preparing to invest in a machine of his own as soon as he becomes sufficiently experienced.

Among the well known people who arrived at the Palace when the Siberia came into port were Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Matthews of Philadelphia, James McCandless, Charles F. Murray and M. B. Young of Honolulu. Mr. Matthews is a prominent business man of Philadelphia and the latter three are all well known in business circles on the islands. Mr. McCandless was en route to the gathering of the Shriners at New Orleans, being a delegate from the Honolulu Temple.

The Palace is the favored rendezvous of visitors from Sacramento. Among those seen there recently were W. E. Gerber and Geo. Peltier of the California State Bank, Dwight H. and G. S. Miller, well known business men, Jos. Terry, the lumber man, State Printer W. A. Shannon, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Hall and L. E. Bontz.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Fisher, U. S. N., of Mare Island, are at the Vendome on their bridal tour.

Mr. A. B. Ayre of Portland, one of Del Monte's most frequent visitors who for several years has spent part of the winter here, arrived last week with Mrs. Ayre and Mrs. Henry E. Jones, also of Portland. They are touring the State and came up from the south, but found nothing there, as Mr. Ayre says, to equal Del Monte with its wonderful gardens.

Mrs. J. G. Cobb of San Francisco is at Del Monte with Mr. and Mrs. M. A. McLaughlin and Miss Frances Moffiitt of Denver. All of the party are famous golfers, and the McLaughlins make annual visits to Del Monte, attracted by the beautiful links.

Paul Bonnet of Paris and Axel Aygaard of Copenhagen, Denmark, who are identified with the wine industry in Spain and France, arrived at the Palace recently after an extended trip through Mexico. They will make an exhaustive study of wineries and wine making in California.

The card party given recently at the St. Francis by the members of the Chrysanthemum Auxiliary of the Children's Hospital was a great success, both socially and financially. There were three or four hundred guests in the rooms at the hotel, where bridge and five hundred were the order of the hour. Several hundred dollars were the net proceeds of the day and the sum is to be devoted to the hospital fund. The Keith painting was awarded to Mrs. Paul Bancroft. The president of the Auxiliary, who worked earnestly for the success of the benefit card party, is Miss Edith Bull, and among her capable corps of assistants were Mrs. J. Stewart Fairweather, Miss Mabel Hogg, Miss Lalla Wenzelberger, Mrs. Ernest McCormick, Mrs. John Chase, Mrs. G. H. Umbsen and Miss Anita Bertheau.

Miss Robson and Her Play

By Edward F. O'Day

It would be extremely nice to find the world in which Aunt Mary and her nephew Jack had their being. Perhaps Professor Lowell, the Martian expert, could find it for us if he searched the universe with sufficient zeal. A pleasant place to live it certainly must be and the only wonder is that Aunt Mary ever needed rejuvenation. How could she possibly grow old in such a paradise. It is a world of money, of course, for money is the root of all theatrical felicity, but there are many other delights in it besides mere dross. It is a world, for instance, where a young fellow may have three chums. Jack had three chums, on the authority of the program, and he was on equally good terms with all of them. This indicates what a different place that world is from ours. It is a world where all the youngsters—for there are no old men in it except servants—not only wear clothes of Kuppenheimer faultlessness but also pose continually in Kuppenheimer attitudes. It is a world where youthful roysterers can shoot cooks, fracture the skulls of cabmen, get themselves "fired" from college and entangled in breach of promise suits without serious consequences to their own peace of mind. It is a world where the pocketbook yields the balm for every hurt, where love is a sight draft honored without question and where life and champagne sparkle as merrily as Miss May Robson's smile. It is not the world which has been exploited in most of the recent plays written by authors with corrugated brows and if Sairey Gamp were asked for an opinion on it she might declare that there ain't no sich place. However we have the authority of Miss Anne Warner, the writer of "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," that there is sich a world and it ill becomes us to question the veracity of a lady playwright. Besides, Miss Robson makes this world very much worth while. Every time Jack or one of his chums raises doubts as to its existence Miss Robson wrinkes her nose, wags her chin and the matter is settled. A very winning champion of improbabilities is Miss Robson, an insinuating pleader for belief in implausible things. I am willing to take Miss Robson's word for everything she says and does. I would take it even more gladly if she did not emphasize all that she says and does quite so energetically. Many of Miss Robson's points I caught the first time she made them, but just the same she drove them home by iteration and reiteration. I am not going to say that Miss Robson is the bond-servant of the obvious, because that would have a harsh sound and would be a little less than the truth. Rather, let me put it, Miss Robson is the thrall of Miss Warner's idea which is not entirely exempt from obviousness. Miss Robson is a mummer with unusual gifts of mugging, if I may be allowed to couch a compliment in uncouth words. Her face is a large part of her theatrical fortune, not so much because it is a pretty face—which it assuredly is—but because she has every muscle of it under control and can make it portray things which Miss Warner is incapable of putting into words. I am inclined to think that Miss Robson is a player who plays with her play. She seems to frolic with Miss Warner's comedy as a cat frolics with a mouse. She pretends to let it get away from her and calmly stops it at the critical moment. I'll bet she feels inclined once in a while to wink at the audience. She is "on to" Aunt Mary and takes her just about as seriously as Aunt Mary should be taken; that is to say, she hardly takes her seriously at all. Miss Robson can do this because she is a well-trained actress, a woman of great experience on the boards, a judge of what is good, bad and indifferent in dramatic vehicles. Miss Robson surely has her own opinion about Miss Warner's play. No doubt she has her opinion about the young men who play the parts of Jack and his three chums, too. They are very young men, too young to be good actors, too young perhaps to realize how young they are. If I were a young actor I should not care to play one of these parts. I would rather play a pair of overalls with Otis Skinner or some other experienced and great actor than a Kuppenheimer dress suit with Miss Robson. I beg Miss Robson's pardon, because I do not mean to depreciate her. But these young actors must learn their difficult business from actors and not from actresses and there is no real actor in Miss Robson's company. There is a real actress, however, so the very young lady who plays Jack's sweetheart is to be felicitated on her opportunity of learning the best traditions by association with Miss Robson.

Following the Lambardi Grand Opera Company at the Columbia will appear Grace George who will be remembered for her fascinating performance in "Divorcons." Miss George is this season presenting a new play called "A Woman's Way" and from all accounts has created nothing short of a furore.

The entire afternoon of Thursday, May 12, will be taken up at the Columbia with the presentation of the list of acts to appear at the benefit to be given on that occasion in aid of The Actors' Fund of America. All the theatre managers of San Francisco have been hard at work for some days past preparing for the affair which will be the biggest undertaking of its kind ever known in the west. Society amateurs will vie with tried professionals for honors in the program of the day.

Impressionism in Musical Criticism

In order that our local music critics may infuse a little refreshing originality into their work, the critical method of Von Bulow is recommended to them. One day he heard his pupil Laura Rappoldi playing Liszt's "By the Spring" and said to her: "By the way, today I heard you playing Liszt's 'Au bord d'une source,' and should like to hear you play it again. I play it slower." While his pupil was playing he made various remarks about the different colors of the water. For instance, at the modulation into E major, he said: "Here the water takes a tinge of blue, while in the following passage in E flat it sparkles with a silvery sheen. The water is illuminated by the light of the sun, the different keys give it varying hues and shifting tints of the rainbow, of course through chromatic changes." Then, we are told, he played it himself with a clearness and transparency that made her think of pearls of crystal which the slightest touch would dissolve into water. Now here is a good idea for our critics. By adopting it they would not only make their reviews more interesting but would also impress the uninitiated with their keen analytical ability. All that is necessary is for the critic to note the chromatic changes and use his imagination in attaching colorful significance to them. The use of this critical method need not be confined to music. It could also be applied to dancing, especially of the Maud Allan sort. Every twist of that lady's limbs could be interpreted. When she dances "The Spring Song," a turn of the ankle could be made to express the twittering of a sparrow; when she gives us "Peer Gynt," the sight of an undraped calf might be considered symbolical of sunrise. There is no end of possibilities in this sort of impressionistic criticism. Anyone who fails to appreciate it may be called a philistine. Will the musical critics please take notice?

The Lambardi Repertoire

Impresario Mario Lambardi and his operatic company returns to San Francisco Sunday evening. The season will open at the Columbia with "La Tosca" on Sunday evening. The cast will include Madam Adaberto as "Tosca," Attilio Maurini as "Cavaradossi," and Giuseppe Maggi as "Scarpia," said to be his greatest role. "Il Trovatore" will be produced Tuesday evening with Madam Adaberto as "Leonora." Alessandro Scalabrini, tenor, will be heard as "Manrico." Angelo Antola is expected to sing the role of "The Count di Luna." "Madam Butterfly" will be presented Monday evening and at the Saturday matinee. There is a possibility that Madam Cecilia Tamanti Zavaski, coloratura soprano, and a great favorite here, will be heard as "Cho-Cho-San." Marina Calvi, however, will sing at the Saturday matinee and if Madam Zavaski is not heard, she will sing also at the Monday evening performance. The title role in "Rigoletto" will be interrupted by Giuseppe Maggi, baritone. Madam Zavaski will be heard as "Gilda." Giovanni Nadal will sing the tenor role of the "Duke." "Migon" will receive its only presentation Thursday evening. The cast for this opera has not as yet been announced. Mascagni's music drama, "Iris," will be presented Wednesday evening with Marina Calvi in the title role, supported by Attilio Maurini, Angelo Antola and Vincenzo Viola. "La Tosca" will be repeated Friday evening and "Madam Butterfly" at the Saturday matinee. The same casts will interpret both of these operas. "Aida" with Madam Elvira Bosetti, Alessandro Scalabrini, Giuseppe Maggi, Madam Dolores Frau and Antonio Sabellico, will receive its only presentation Saturday evening. Opening the last week's engagement will be the "Masked Ball." The balance of the operas will be announced later. The symphony orchestra is under the direction of Maestro

"King Saul" by the St. Ignatius Boys

St. Ignatius College, in the course of the last two decades, has attracted unusual attention by the character of the dramatic productions sponsored by its faculty and given by its students. The histrionic talent displayed in some of them has received warm praise from competent critics while the elaborate stagings have won the admiration of some of our best local managers.

IGNATIANS IN "KING SAUL"

An interesting scene in the biblical drama which the young men of St. Ignatius College will present next week at the Valencia Theatre.

It has become a St. Ignatius custom to give a play every year and in more recent years the plays have usually been original compositions produced for the first time. These events therefore have a great deal of significance; they are worthy the serious notice of dramatic writers and they have been seriously considered. This year the drama to be presented by the young men of the Catholic college is "King Saul," a biblical play from the pen of a Jesuit. It is said to be of unusual merit and to afford big opportunities for dramatic ability. That it will be adequately staged admits of no doubt, considering the past achievements in this line of the college thespians. The premier of "King Saul" will be on Monday evening, April 18, and the other performances will be given on April 19, 21 and 22 with a matinee on April 23. All of these performances will be given at the Valencia Theatre. The opening night will be "alumni night" and on that occasion most of the theatre will be occupied by the graduates of the college. The proceeds from the Thursday night performance will be devoted to the necessities of the sister college of Santa Clara which recently suffered from a disastrous fire.

The Extra Allan Performances

So many hundreds were unable to gain admission to the Maud Allan performances that Manager Will Greenbaum has offered her a big bonus to cancel her trip to the Northwest and will offer two more performances in this city and one in Oakland. On account of the big stage required to produce certain dances these performances will be given at the Valencia Theatre, the dates being Saturday night, April 23, and Monday night, April 25. On these occasions Miss Allan and an increased orchestra will give two beautiful programs and one of the numbers will be her most talked of work, "The Vision of Salome" which Miss Allan has no hesitancy in submitting for local approval. No one who has seen Miss Allan will admit that there is anything offensive in the dances which she has given. "The Vision of Salome" is not supposed to be danced before Herod but is the dream or vision of the young girl after the terrible sight she beheld when Herod commanded the execution of the Baptist. The sale of seats will open Monday morning at Sherman, Clay & Co. The Oakland performance will be given Tuesday night, April 26, Mr. Bishop having again consented to lay off his company for one night. The sale in Oakland also opens Monday morning.

"The Prince of Tonight" at the Savoy

Henry Woodruff, last seen here as the star of "Brown of Harvard," will reopen the Savoy this Sunday evening in "The Prince of Tonight," the latest musical play by Adams, Hough and Howard, authors of "A Stubborn Cinderella" and other successes. The piece is a musical oddity, inasmuch as it begins as a musical comedy of ingratiating sentimental interest and then, for the consolation of a broken-hearted hero, passes from the realm of lyric realities and topical jests into the wonderland of extravaganza. A first act of comedy at Palm Beach, where all the girls are lovely and all the men have money—but one; a transition scene of nymphs and blue and silver ballets; a second act of moon witchery and fairy lore, and a third act that reconciles dream and fact, bringing the cold-hearted girl and the warm-hearted prince-fellow into each others' arms. Such is "The Prince of Tonight" in rough outline. Over sixty people are carried, with a famous beauty chorus, and some of the members of the cast are Ruth Peebles, Erminie Clark, Margaret McBride, Jack Evans, John C. Leach, Arthur Aylesworth, Lew Lawson, Edward Beck and the greatly discussed "broilers" from the Princess Theatre, Chicago. The usual bargain matinee will be given on Thursday.

The Flonzaley Quartet

The finest string quartet in the world, "The Flonzaley Quartet" of Switzerland, is to be the star musical attraction of the coming week and Manager Greenbaum is confident that our music lovers will enjoy it. The first concert will be given this Sunday afternoon at the

WILL M. CRESSY

Garrick Theatre and the program will include the Mozart Quartet in C major, Schumann's Quartet in A minor and a quaint old "Sonata a tre" by Leclaire for two violins and violincello. The second concert will be given Friday night, April 22, at the Novelty Theatre. A Beethoven Quartet and a Haydyn Quartet and movements from works by Max Reger and Smetana will form the program. The farewell concert will be given Sunday afternoon, April 24, at the Garrick with still another program of works by Mozart, Dehnanyi and Sanmartini.

Second Week of May Robson

The second half of the fortnight's engagement of May Robson at the Van Ness will begin Sunday night. The engagement will continue up to and including next Sunday night, April 24. The only afternoon performance is announced for Saturday. The next attraction announced for this theatre will be Charles Frohman's special company in Henri Bernstein's powerful drama of modern times "The Thief." In sending this play to San Francisco Mr. Frohman has at the head of his company the two well known stars Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon. The engagement is limited to two weeks beginning Monday night, April 25.

"Under Southern Skies" at the Alcazar

Replete with atmospheric charm is "Under Southern Skies," which is to be started on a week's run in the Alcazar next Monday evening. It was written by Lottie Blair Parker as a starring medium for Phoebe Davies who for several seasons alternated it with her other successful vehicle "Way Down East," by the same author. "Under Southern Skies" conveys an ingenious and cleverly-drawn story that is redolent of magnolia-bloom and vocal with the drone of honey bees. Its scenes are laid in rural Louisiana, and the period is ten years after the close of the Civil War, while the South was in process of reconstruction. The central figure of the plot is eighteen-year-old Lolia Crofton, who lives with her father in the home which was desolated by his wife's elopement when the girl was in infancy. She has two suitors, Burleigh Mavon, a worthy young fellow, and Steve Daubney, handsome and rather unscrupulous. Between their families a feud has long existed, and it is intensified by their rivalry for the girl. Evelyn Vaughan will be seen as Lolia Crofton, John Ince as Burleigh Mavon, Will R. Walling as Steve Daubney, Louis Bennison as Major Crofton, Howard Hickman as Colonel Daubney, Bessie Barriscale as a charming ingenue, Grace Travers as a Southern belle, and Lillian Elliott, Anne Lockhardt, Beatrice Seamans, Burt Wesner and Walter Belasco as servants.

Cressy at the Orpheum

Next week there will be two new headline acts at the Orpheum, Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne, and "Gus Edwards' Night Birds" with Nellie Brewster and a company of twelve singing and dancing youngsters. Next week and next week only, Mr. Cressy will appear in "The Wyoming Whoop" which is one of his cleverest and most diverting efforts. Miss Dayne will render him efficient support. "Gus Edwards' Night Birds" is the most pretentious production yet staged by that prolific composer and inventor of vaudeville novelties. It is a singing and dancing ensemble in which Nellie Brewster, a clever and fascinating comedienne, and a company of twelve singing and dancing youngsters appear. Gladys Lockwood and Paul MacCarty will present an act of their own contriving which has proved a great hit during the present season. MacCarty is a clever musician and Miss Lockwood possesses a delightful personality and has a quaint manner of delivering her songs which is very effective. The Lancton, Lucier Company, which includes Theodore Daly, will introduce a one-act play entitled "A Fool's Friend." Sunday matinee and night the remarkably interesting series of motion pictures depicting "Old Market Street" will be exhibited and Monday matinee and the balance of next week a series of motion pictures which have but just arrived in this country entitled "Roosevelt in Africa" will be presented. Next week will be the last of Al White's Dancing Bugs, The Walsh, Lynch Company, The Picquays and of the famous songstress comedienne Nellie Nichols.

The Burton Holmes Travelogues

The Burton Holmes Travelogues delivered by Wright Kramer are drawing splendid houses to the Garrick Theatre and are interesting audiences composed of our most intelligent citizens. This Saturday afternoon "New Japan" will be given for the last time and in the evening by request "Our Own Hawaii" will be repeated.

Next Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon "Old Japan Today" will be given. Thursday and Friday nights and Saturday afternoon will be devoted to "Java."

"Salvation Nell" at Ye Liberty

The Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, have an unusual attraction in store for their patrons next week in "Salvation Nell," the wonderful play of New York life in which Mrs. Fiske starred last season. Nothing will be spared by Ye Liberty management to make the presentation of "Salvation Nell" the most notable ever offered at the theatre. Its presentation is limited to one week, after which "Strongheart will be revived.

Attractions at Idora

In Signor Francesco Ferullo and his big Italian band of fifty pieces, Idora, "the park beautiful," in Oakland, has an attraction that is drawing the music lovers of the bay cities every afternoon and evening. The Ferullo organization, now beginning the third week of its five weeks' engagement, has created a musical sensation among the thousands of Idora patrons. Programs of exceptional merit, rendered as only as Italian band can play them, have made the Ferullo band the most popular organization the Idora management has ever presented. Many new amusement devices have been installed and those who crave thrills and sensations can find them in abundance. For the benefit of San Francisco patrons the Key Route runs trains direct to Idora.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—The week's security market has been subject to much manipulation by certain active market interests who took advantage of technical conditions to advance prices early in the week and then break prices sharply at the close. Such manipulations were only warranted as a result of technical conditions in the monetary market, produced by gold exports. However, the decline in values produced a large crop of hysterical rumors from irresponsible people in the financial district and as a result nothing but extreme pessimism prevailed. Certainly there was nothing in the government crop report on wheat to warrant such adverse sentiment and there is every reason for a bountiful harvest this year. Labor difficulties are past, being adjusted on the leading railway and industrial institutions; hence we find little or no menace from this factor. The belief has become quite general that the tobacco decision will not be handed down until the end of May, though there is a chance it may be heard from any Monday. We feel that any decision in this matter has been largely discounted. We can hardly share in the pessimistic utterances of Wall street and believe that stocks taken on moderate decline will later in the season show good profits.

Wheat—Crop disaster and manipulation are now the hopes of the believers in present or high prices of wheat. Close scanning of the horizon discloses no other reason for holding old crop wheat at current levels or the new crop above a basis that will take at least a modest portion of the prospective production off the domestic market. The government crop report, however, confirmed some extreme views of crop damage in the large producing states in the Southwest, but even at that failed to bring the prospective total down as low as the enormous winter wheat crop of last year. The world's stocks of wheat are the largest at this season since 1906 when they were 207,000,000 bushels. Now they are 202,430,000 bushels, an increase of 594,000 bushels in March. A year ago they decreased 9,792,000 bushels. There is an excess of 32,000,000 bushels in supplies over a year ago. America has 97,454,000 bushels or 10,403,000 bushels more than last year, the reduction last month being only 718,000 bushels while in March last year it was 8,122,000 bushels. Stocks afloat and in Europe are 95,220,000 bushels or 15,000,000 bushels more than last year.

Corn—There was severe liquidation of corn last week both for the account of shippers and speculators. The long period of small demand ultimately proved too much for both. The speculative owner had overstayed his opportunity and the shipper was made to feel the weight of a big crop pressing on the one hand and of balky buyers refusing to lend support on the other. The process of liquidation is still on.

Cotton—The weather question which was so much a factor on the last advance, particularly on the October delivery, has now been eliminated even more than at the time of our last weekly letter and the conditions so far as the crop prospects are concerned have radically changed, compared with two weeks ago. The technical situation in the market has also been changed to some extent. The decline has shown that May has been relatively firm compared with July and this is taken as indicating the maintained control over May. Bulls are confidently claiming that the position in May is just as congested as ever and that whenever the reins are tightened again the shorts will be forced in. To offset this possibility the bears are ever ready with statistics and facts regarding curtailment which may hinder or at least keep back, until the last moment, any sensational rise in the nearby deliveries and seventeen or even sixteen cent cotton, which all the bulls have been predicting and a great many of the bears have been fearing, may not again be brought forth even as a prediction, let alone be seen in reality. There is no question that there has been a superbundence of rain throughout the cotton belt and that there is great rejoicing among the growers. One of the biggest crops in the history of cotton is everywhere predicted. We now know that the crop has been and is being seeded under most favorable conditions and that the germination will be rapid. In fact all probability, if not possibility, of creating a hedge by being able to advance the new crop positions deprived the bull clique of public support. According to a wire just received the bulls have their hands full taking care of what they own rather than in taking on more cotton even on a decline. No support is being offered the market except in the way of profit-taking; therefore we still hold the opinion that the price for the new crop of cotton is too high.

Copper—The prices of all grades of copper passing between first and second hands here and abroad have ranged themselves throughout the year at above the rates set forth by certain alleged metal exchanges which have not at any time, within their life sold collectively half of one per cent of the world's copper. The copper market now beings to show a hardening tendency. While sales are not large there are a number of bids for large blocks of the metal at prices ranging between 13¼ and 13½ cents a pound for electrolytic. A representative of one of the large companies states that certain interests are bidding 13½ cents per pound but that the important sellers do not care to make concessions. Consumers have now been out of the market for the past six or seven weeks and their stocks are reported as being low. One producer estimates that the copper consumption in this country is now running at the rate of 750 million and 800 million pounds a year. This increase in consumption is attributed largely to the more general uses of copper on account of the low prices that have prevailed during the last twelve months. While copper stocks have been soft in Boston, copper mining has been making strides in the south and west. The principal mines have been shipping larger tonnages of late. Old Dominion and Balaklala have made a great strike of ore. Advices from the Lake say that the sixth level has entered good copper ground. The Champion Mine of the Copper Range is back to its old record of twenty-eight pounds of ingot copper per ton of rock. Victoria is shipping good rock and Nevada Consolidated put out six million pounds last month and so on down the list of better class mines. Another thing we would bring to the attention of those interested is the reduction in the cost of operations among the big companies. Although the copper market offers great opportunities for scalping, we look for better prices for the standard stocks founded on the fundamental conditions. Still we would advise a neutral position for the present, especially until the New York stock market adjusts itself.

Limited Service

A local church dignitary while visiting some friends not long ago, tucked his napkin in his collar to avoid the juice of the grape-fruit at breakfast. He laughed as he did it, and said it reminded him of a man he once knew who rushed into a restaurant and, seating himself at a table, proceeded to tuck his napkin under his chin. He then called a waiter and said, "Can I get lunch here?"

"Yes," responded the waiter in a dignified manner, "but not a shampoo."

The Same Result

A well-known bishop of Tennessee was taking his customary stroll through the park the other morning. He happened to sit down on one of the benches there. Now the bishop is a very great man, not only in the Methodist Church, but in embonpoint as well. His weight proved too much for the bench, which collapsed, spilling him on the ground. About this time a little girl, rolling a hoop along, saw the reverend gentleman prostrate and offered her assistance. "But, my little girl," said the bishop, "do you think you could help such a great heavy man to his feet?"

"Oh, yes," replied the little girl. "I've helped grandpa lots of times when he's been even drunker than you are."

The Reason Why

I heard a story the other day of a negro living in a sparsely settled portion of a certain Southern State, who was informed by a fellow negro that it was rumored that their town was to be made the terminus of a branch railway system.

"I don't believe no sich repo't," observed the first darky, decisively; "I's traveled, and I knows what I'm talkin' 'bout. Them railroad people can't build no line in dis here flat country."

"What makes you think dat?" asked the second negro.

Whereupon the other, with an air of effectually settling the whole matter, replied:

"Can't yo' see dat dere ain't any place around here to run tunnels through?"

Gladstone and the Peerage

The elevation of Mr. Herbert Gladstone to the peerage recalls to my mind his father's words in declining the offer of an earldom from Queen Victoria in 1885. Writing in the third person to his sovereign Mr. Gladstone said: "It has never formed part of his views to enter that historic chamber, though he does not share the feeling which led Sir R. Peel to put upon record what seemed a perpetual or almost a perpetual self-denying ordinance for his family." Gratefully declining the offer of a peerage immediately after Peel's death, Lady Peel wrote that "a paper in his own handwriting has just been given to me, in which he expressly desires that no member of his family will accept (if offered) any title, distinction or reward on account of service he may have rendered in Parliament or in office." The Peel precedent is doubly inapplicable to Mr. Herbert Gladstone's case, since he becomes a viscount not for his father's sake but for his own.

under my indictment; but I have now no doubt that a calm reconsideration of that matter saved my neck from the fingers of the Committee's hangman. I requested my friends not to visit me any more, and indeed the request was almost needless, for there was a ban upon me, and by this time it seemed to them that my very touch was leprosy, and my breath was poison. I bade them have no fears of my being hung, as I never intended to be taken alive. I had no less than ten shots and a good knife always about my person. They embraced me, and bid me good-bye, all but one, who still stood by me, and a faithful negro boy who brought me my meals. In a miserable state of mind I remained here several days, eagerly watching for the first chance of escape, and reading the surmises as to my whereabouts in the daily papers. One day I feared from an incident that occurred, that my hopes and fears were about to be brought to a speedy termination. I heard at the door the usual signal made by my friends when they visited me, (three knocks)—I opened it, and found a strange Frenchman who asked me in his own language where Gustave was? I answered that he was down stairs. From the scrutinizing manner in which he eyed me, I felt sure that he was one of the Committee; and notwithstanding my disguise, which consisted of a Mexican or California hat, face browned, and hair and mustachios blacked, I feared, if he had ever seen me before that I was detected. He soon left without further conversation. He had no sooner gone than I quitted my room, and entered a water-closet which was at the head of the staircase, and commanded it.

Knowing it to be impossible to escape by the street, and fearing that my hiding place was known, I here determined to make a stand, and if any armed body ascended the stairs to take me, to commence shooting and sell myself as dearly as possible. I remained here about an hour, when hoping that I had not been recognized, I left my position and entered the room of my friends adjoining the one I had been in, taking care to hide the food and other evidence of my having inhabited it. I got under my friend's bed and remained there till night. When he returned home I told him what had occurred and he appeared to be very much alarmed. He informed me that bands of the Committee were hunting me high and low in all parts of the city, and that one H. P. A. Smith (former member of the Legislature from Marin County) was among the most industrious in the search and loudest in his denunciations of me. It now struck me for the first time that after all it might be more for a desire to wreak political vengeance in certain quarters that my pursuers were so eager after me than from any honest belief in my complicity in Mr. King's death. It is not for me, in this relation of my wrongs to make any specific charges against any one nor do I now do it—but my reasons for my suspicions were simply these: This fellow Smith it was well known was a warm advocate of the claims of a certain distinguished gentleman to a high official position, while I was an equally zealous friend of his principal opponent. Perhaps then it was the hope that I was in the possession of some political secrets which if divulged would be destructive of my friend's interests which induced this man and others of his kidney to pursue me so diligently in the expectation that threats of death or banishment would wring them from me. How shrewd my suspicions were, I leave to certain political gentlemen to say who appeared most patriotically to sympathize with the so-called reform movement. But a few days before, this man Smith had requested my influence to secure his nomination for one of the San Francisco seats in the Legislature, pledging himself to support my friend as well as his own for the position above referred to. I courteously declined helping him for good and sufficient reasons, and now he was at the head of a squad of "Reformers," seeking my life!

It so happened that the information of my friend was verified that very night, for about two o'clock a. m., it being very dark outside, I was standing in my friend's room without a light and with the window raised, and actually heard a party of my pursuers talking about me on the street below! Among others I heard Smith, whose voice I recognized, exclaim, "The d——d old rascal, I'll have him before five days more!" When I remember the fawning manner in which he had asked my assistance only a few days before, and the entirely inoffensive way in which I had refused it; when I remembered the confidence with which he had even borrowed from me the poor sum of his passage down the Sacramento, knowing that though a political enemy and almost a stranger he would not be refused —when I remembered his truckling protestations of good feeling notwithstanding political differences, and then with my own ears heard him speak thus of me to the pack of sleuth-hounds of which he was the leader, I confess that for a moment there was murder in my heart. Instinctively I grasped my knife to rush down and kill him, even though it were my own last act on earth; and I believe that in the fury of that moment nothing staid me but the timely reflection that I would bring destruction on an innocent friend whose roof sheltered me. If his eye falls on these pages, let him not deny the truth of what I have written, for so sure as he does his trembling lip will betray to his hearer the lie it utters. He knows how truly I have spoken, and his own heart best knows the motives that prompted his conduct.

But let him pass. It may be of some interest now to him to know all who composed his audience on that night, and how near he came to meeting with a round of applause to which his modest merit would of itself never have aspired. I dismiss him to the guardianship of his own conscience, and the mercy of its reproaches.

While lying under the bed in my friend's room, I had observed a false face or mask, such as is generally used at the fancy balls given by the French Artistes in San Francisco. I had been out of my retreat once before, disguised as a policeman; and afterward discovered by the papers that I had been recognized. My object in incurring the risk, was to get possession of some private papers I had left in my office, but I was unsuccessful, the Committee having been there before me, and taken everything they could find. I was now very anxious to get possession of some correspondence which had passed between a gentleman (one of the foreign consuls) and myself, in reference to a lady, a countrywoman of his; I had left this in a little dressing bureau in my rooms, and fearing that if it fell into stranger hands it might injure him, I determined to make a second sortie if possible to get it. For this purpose I availed myself of this mask. My fool hardiness may be wondered at, but the gentleman was my friend and wrote me the notes for my own protection. I should have destroyed them, but not having done so my duty in justice to him was if possible to get them. I cut the nose out of the mask, blacked it and putting it on with my California hat, sallied out. I reached my rooms unobserved, and saw the landlady. At first she did not recognize me until she heard my voice, and then she was very much frightened, the mask gave me such a horrible expression. I took off the nose to convince her that it was I, but she refused me admittance, telling me that the Committee had been there and taken everything, and it was useless for me to incur any further risk in trying to secure any of my papers. Finding it impossible to even get access to my rooms, I returned to my hiding place, very fortunately attracting no observation.

Since my return from the lower country, the Vigilance Committee have restored to me my papers, but this correspondence is not among them. I trust if among the members of the Committee there are any of that gentleman's countrymen, into whose hands these papers have fallen, they will return them to the source from whence they originated.

The time had now come when it was absolutely necessary for me to remove from Commercial street. I could not hope much longer to escape detection if I remained in the city, and it was far better if I had to be captured, that it should be done when I might have a remote chance of escape by flight, than to be taken like a bird from a cage. Beside, the friend who fed me had gone to the Atlantic States, and to remain there longer was impossible, as every one else who knew where I was, were watched night and day. A very kind friend who had faithfully stood to me through everything, cast about him day after day to secure me a place of safety, but in vain. I even agreed to the proposition of a friend to take me to his room on Montgomery street, next door to the room of No. 33 Secretary of the Committee. This, however, was overruled by all my friends who were consulted.

At length a retreat was found for me with a pious old lady who lived a short distance from the city on the Mission Dolores road. The difficulty now was how to get me there. The outlets of the city were surrounded by armed horsemen continually on patrol, relieving each other at stated hours, night and day, and all on special watch for me. In a word, escape seemed impossible.

Such was the state of the public mind with regard to me, and such had been the measures adopted to prevent my escape when the time arrived for me to attempt it. After much time had been spent in consultation among my friends as to the best plan to be pursued, it was at length decided that my own proposition was the best—which was to disguise myself, and walk boldly forth through my enemies. Accordingly arrangements were made for me to leave my hiding-place just at lamp-light on the evening of the third of June. My friend was to send some one to me, and not come himself, as it was considered dangerous for him to again visit me, he being by this time very narrowly watched. He applied to at least twenty persons to come and make with me the arrangements, but none of them dare come near me, and he was at last obliged to do it himself. He came, and it was agreed that he should meet me with a carriage on the Mission road. Before he left I struck a light and asked him if he would know me? He appeared astonished at my disguise, and said he would not. My face, hair, and moustachios were blacked with pomatum and shoe blacking, my stomach was drawn in and confined with a pair of French stays, and over my clothes I had an overcoat with a Derringer in each pocket. I also had on my slouched hat, and a pair of Derringers in my pantaloons' pockets, together with a six-shooter and a knife in my belt. Thus armed and disguised as soon as my friend had left I sallied forth alone. It was just in the dusk of the evening as I walked up Commercial street toward Kearny, on my way to the Mission. I passed several whom I knew standing in front of Whipple's club-house, and afterward on the road I met Mr. Dan Sweeney and Sandy Marshall. None of them however recognized me for a moment. I walked boldly out Kearny street, and as I went found many a fearful reminder of my peril in tramping hoofs and clashing sabres. I could not forget in a thousand centuries the feeling of mingled hope and horror with which I walked that evening an unjustly outlawed man through the hosts of my enemies.

It was not the fear of death itself that made these moments terrible, for death I could face, and had faced before. But it was the thought of such a death as awaited me in the event of my capture, and the reflection that myriads of tongues would ring into the ears of my children how ignobly their father died, but none would tell them how unjustly. The star-light that glistened back from the sabres of my enemies was not more quick and sudden in its coming and its going than the changes of my thoughts from hope to fear, and back again from fear to hope, as, marking every incident around me, I walked unquestioned and unheeded through the meshes of the net my persecutors had thrown about me. Thanks to a kind Providence, I at length was enabled to draw a long breath on the Mission road far beyond the outmost sentinel. I here met my friend with the carriage, who was surprised to see me out so soon. I talked and laughed with him for it appeared as though a mountain had been lifted from my soul in the last half hour. He reproved my ill-timed merriment in his anxiety for my safety, and told me I had been so long an outlaw I must have got used to it. I told him I did not intend to die but once. May he never undergo the agony of mind necessary for him fully to appreciate my happiness at that moment. We turned around and went back toward the city to the place which was to be my refuge during the rest of my stay in the neighborhood of San Francisco. This as before stated, was the house of a pious old lady, a member of the Baptist church. She lived on the Mission road, with no companion but one sweet little daughter about ten years of age.

Auto Notes

With the introduction of the Anhut Six, which is one of the latest arrivals on automobile row, comes a further manifestation of the progress which has been made in the manufacturing and developing of the motor car. The strongest features of the Anhut Six are standard, as accepted by experts. The car is being handled by the Durant Auto Sales Company, of which R. C. Durant is the Pacific Coast manager. Durant is not a stranger to the coast, and as the son of W. C. Durant, general manager of the general motors, is in a position to thoroughly understand the motor car and its advantageous qualities. The Anhut Six has attracted a great deal of attention, for a popular priced car, it has already won a place among those who know. Durant has recently returned from a visit to the east, and it was while there that he discovered the Anhut Six, whose lines and construction appealed so strongly to him that he visited the factory. He had a car placed at his disposal and put it through a rigid test to determine whether it would be suitable for the western country or not. For over a week, the Anhut Six was tested on hills, rough roads, and sandy stretches, during which it was driven from Chicago to Detroit, over almost impassable roads.

The car stood up perfectly, demonstrating its ability to withstand rough, hard usage. An economy test was also indulged in which showed that the Anhut Six would average from 14 to 18 miles on a gallon of gasoline, under trying conditions. A number of leading mechanical experts were interviewed, and favorable knowledge gained from their recommendations. The Anhut Six has a four cycle, six cylinder motor, cylinders cast in pairs. The dimensions of the cylinders are 3½ inch bore, by 4 inch stroke, developing 36 horsepower. The engine, clutch and transmission are built in one unit with all moving parts inclosed and running in oil. The lubrication system is the circulated splash system, the oil being forced into the crank case by means of a plunger pump. The car comes in an attractive roadster, built on graceful lines, and in pony tonneau, with seating capacity for four, and plenty of room. The wheel base of the Anhut Six is 110 inches, the same chassis being used for both models. The Durant Auto Sales Company is Pacific Coast distributer for this popular make of car, and already Durant has closed with a number of agents to handle the product. A shipment of cars is now on the way, in which will be seen the pony tonneau, with double doors. The company is at present located at 382-384 Golden Gate avenue, but will move into permanent quarters when they can be secured. Walter A. Grant is associated with Durant in the company.

Joe Matson left San Francisco recently with his exhibit. His first stopping place was Santa Rosa where he spent three days, then he went to Sacramento, and thence to Stockton and Chico, from which last place he will ship through to Portland. This is Mr. Matson's first trip to California and he is much pleased with the reception given him, especially in San Francisco, where, he states, more interest has been shown in the exhibit than in any other city in the west. "I have had the same men visit the exhibits here in San Francisco," he said, "spending from one to three hours a day. These men were chifly owners or prospective purchasers of Chalmers cars who wanted to learn its mechanism and were pleased to find how simply the cars were built. I am questioned a great many times as to whether this chassis is the same as the one we are delivering to customers. We are prepared at any time to prove this but it has not been necessary to do so up to the present time."

"Because of the unprecedented call for Hupmobiles," said S. C. Chapman, "the factory has plans under consideration for even greater enlargements than already arranged. They declare the supplying of the Pacific Coast one of their greatest considerations. I have been constantly harrassing them with calls—a great many by wire—for additional shipments of these little cars. Every car put out seems to sell more. From every locality where we have placed the Hupp for the first time there have come back innumerable inquiries. At the present rate our future business looms up beyond possibility of estimation. During the past two days we have sent out six Hupmobiles on delivery. Two of these have gone to E. Oppenheim of Sacramento, one to Dr. J. W. Peck of Berkeley, two to Geo. C. Young of Modesto and the sixth to R. D. Mayes of Dixon. These are in addition to a carload shipped to the Ray Machine Company of Visalia."

A remarkable trip has just been made by Mr. A. G. B. Ridley, demonstrator of the Standard Motor Car Co. who went from San Francisco to Bakersfield in the unusually fast time of 17 hours and 30 minutes or an average of 19 miles per hour. The fact that this trip was made at night time and over a poor country road shows the durability of the Velie machine which Mr. Ridley drove. Mr. Ridley reported that the car was running just as smoothly as it did at the start.

Rev. Bradford Leavitt who owns a Hudson Roadster, is very much enthused over a recent performance of the little car. He drove to Fresno and returned a few days ago, making a total distance of 400 miles. The roads were in extremely bad condition and some of the stretches were reported impassible when he made inquiry before attempting them. In places the roads were plowed just before the late rains which converted them into seemingly bottomless holes of mud. Despite all this the car made the trip without one adjustment and returned home without a single loosened bolt, having averaged 20 miles in this kind of going for each gallon of gasoline.

A. P. Harris, a representative of the Meyer Cord Company of Chicago, has just taken delivery of a Hudson Touring Car. Mr. Harris is in the novelty sign business and he intends to feature it with his automobile. This is becoming one of the latest possibilities in progressive advertising.

Mr. E. L. Cutting, traveling representative of the Standard Motor Car Co., returned recently from an extended trip through the interior of the State and reported that conditions are unusually favorable for a good season in the motor car trade. Mr. Cutting sold a number of Ford cars in the vicinity of Fresno and says that the crops through the San Joaquin Valley are going to be such that the farmers will buy a great many machines this season. He will leave for a trip through the northern part of the State, including Napa, Healdsburg, Santa Rosa and other points where the Standard Motor Car Co. are interested.

A very interesting instance of the automobile's varied uses is given by John W. Neal of Hudson, Kansas, who not only uses his White Steamer as a conveyance but also as a stationary engine. The rear wheels are jacked up, a drum is attached to the hub of one of them and a chain transmits the power. A corn shiller, a corn cutter, a buzz-saw, and a large churn are some of the devices operated. The machine is a 1904 model and is in perfect running condition today. "We find," says Mr. Neal, "that shelling corn, for instance, by power furnished by our Steamer is a wonderful convenience and an economy, because more work can be done in a shorter time and only one man is required where otherwise it would be necessary to have three."

J. L. Whitmore, the Stockton agent for the Pioneer Automobile Company, has just returned home after a visit to town. He drove back in a Chalmers "30" of which he took delivery while here. He also left orders for two more Chalmers and two Hudson touring cars which speaks well for the Stockton automobile trade.

James Jordan of San Francisco accompanied by a party of friends has just returned from a ten days trip to Southern California in his big White Steamer car. William Slimmons who drove the car, in speaking of the trip said, "On the way down we found weather conditions ideal and roads except in spots, where they were newly plowed in process of repair, good. On our way back, however, we had to contend with driving rains and the meanest possible roads all the way. Gutters were furrowed on each side of the roads and it was impossible to keep the machine from skidding and sliding into them. They were all of twelve inches deep causing the car to tip dangerously at times. Between Solidad and Gonzalis, where the roads had been plowed there seemed to be almost bottomless mud. At Coopers Garage in Salinas I found three cars bound for San Francisco, but the passengers had taken train and the drivers were waiting for good weather and improved roads before proceeding. The San Juan side especially in places was very dangerous going. From there on to Oakland the roads were good and we arrived home safely with a mud bespattered car but a perfect score."

"The Danger Trail"

"The Danger Trail" is the second novel by James Oliver Curwood, whose former venture into the realm of fiction dealt with that little known episode in American history, the Mormon colony at Lake Michigan, which, but for the vigorous action of the United States government, might have furnished a rival problem to that of the Utah settlement. "The Danger Trail" takes us into the far north, in the region of Hudson's Bay, an environment which the author knows well and his descriptions show clearly that his is no library acquired learning hastily gotten up for present purposes. "The Danger Trail" is a breathless narrative abounding in unexpected incidents and mysteries and the reader, like the hero, is kept in the dark until the last chapter. John Howland, a civil engineer in the employ of a Chicago company, has been sent forward to take charge of the building of a railroad in Northern Canada to relieve two other men, capable and competent as well as ambitious but who, for some reason which no one can even conjecture, are desirous of "quitting the job." Their attitude is so out of keeping with their known characters that Howland is kept busy in trying to reach some conclusion in the matter. On the night of his arrival at Windsor his own adventures began, for looking out on the deserted streets of the little town at an hour near midnight, he was surprised to see a young and beautiful girl looking in at him, and later, having strolled into the Chinese restaurant which thinly disguised an opium joint he was still more surprised to see the same girl enter unaccompanied and give him unmistakeable reason to assume that she had some communication to make to him alone. The upshot of this rendezvous was that, accompanying her to a little distance beyond the town, he was set upon and nearly killed, his life being saved by a powerful half-breed who, next morning, on his recovering somewhat, visited him with a reiteration of the warning given by the girl on the previous night, that on no account must he proceed. Croisset added that his message came "from the little Meleese," but would give no further information. Naturally, to a man who had fought his way upward all his life, and coming on the heels of the discouragement of the other engineers, Howland's determination was strengthened and he proceeded on the next stage of his journey. At Le Pas he was met by Gregson, one of the retiring engineers, and was surprised and shocked to discover him a nervous wreck. Gregson either could not or would not give him any definite information, and when, on arriving at the construction camp, he found Thorne physically as well as mentally demoralized, he was more than ever at sea. Both at Le Pas and near the camp he met again the strange girl, but no one there seemed to know either her or the half-breed Croisset, though the latter, having conceived a liking for the engineer, despite his conviction that no death was too terrible to be inflicted on Howland, still continued to bring him warnings from "the little Meleese." Both Gregson and Thorne had told Howland that the opposition, the series of disasters which dogged their heels, had made it evident to them that the objection was not directed against the work but against them personally, and on inspection Howland was agreeably surprised to find that a really enormous amount of work had been accomplished and the camp in first class condition in every respect. Why two such competent men should have been discouraged became more than ever a mystery. Meanwhile Howland's own series of disasters was put in train, some of them disclosing a fiendish ingenuity, and there was always "the little Meleese," the half-breed Croisset, and others not yet disclosed, lurking in the background. The culmination of the plot came when Howland was kidnapped and carried into the wilderness by Croisset. At bottom the two men, both energetic, brave and fearless, had an admiration for each other, but under the conditions it would hardly be expected that they would be warm friends or trust each other over much. Croisset had at first the upper hand, and imprisoned Howland in a deserted hut, but on his return, some few days later, he was overpowered and compelled, at the muzzle of a revolver, to lead his erstwhile captive to that mysterious "north" where he was not to go and to face his unknown enemies. Follow many more hair-breadth escapes and narrowly missed calamities when Howland, finally in the hands of his persecutors and up to now entirely in the dark as to the motive for it all, has been condemned to death and is at last made acquainted with the reason for the persecution. The story takes a leap backward of some sixteen years, when one of the Hudson Bay posts was visited by an American and his son. The man committed a dastardly crime, and the factor, his wife being dead, pursued the criminal only to be shot down by his son, leaving his four children orphaned of both parents. The men, for the most part half-breed French, unaccustomed to any laws save those they made and executed themselves, made the cause their own. They vowed vengeance on the heads of those who had injured them, and it mattered nothing to them how long execution should be delayed. In the end it was sure. It happened that the ravisher and murderer, father and son, bore the name John Howland, and it had never occurred to the simple minded children of the snows that the name might be born by others as well, in the big world outside. The elder Howland had already paid the price at the hands of Croisset and it remained now only to bring the son to an accounting. The children of the dead factor had now grown up and of course "the little Meleese" was the four year old baby, the only white girl the voyagers had ever seen and the pet of their community. To the youngest brother had been given the task of discovering the whereabouts of Howland and he, having learned that a man of that name was an employee of the Chicago firm who were constructing the railroad, conceived the plan of so harrying Thorne and Gregson in their work that they would be eager to abandon it when Howland, being next in line, would be sent out to fall an easy victim into their hands. It was only at the fifty-ninth minute of the eleventh hour that he discovered his mistake in time to avert the catastrophe and a comparison of data showing that the condemned prisoner was only a small child at the time of the trouble corroborated the other evidence. Meanwhile, of course, there has been a love story running its rapid course along with that of the adventure and it will need no great amount of perspicacity to discern that a wedding will unite instead of a funeral dividing the only girl in the book and its hero, though to be sure, the half-breed Croisset is every bit as much of a hero as Howland even if he doesn't marry the heroine. Illustrations in color by Charles Livingstone Bull are more than usually attractive and the volume is a credit to that enterprising firm, the Bobbs-Merrill Co. of Indianapolis.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 20,654.

GEO. W. YOST, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of GEO. W. YOST, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the easterly line of Bright Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet northerly from the northerly line of Garfield Street (formerly known as Sherman Street); thence running northerly along said line of Bright Street fifty (50) feet; thence at a right angle easterly, parallel with Garfield Street (formerly known as Sherman Street), one hundred (100) feet; thence at a right angle southerly, and parallel with Bright Street, fifty (50) feet, and thence at a right angle westerly, and parallel with Garfield Street (formerly known as Sherman Street) one hundred (100) feet to the point of beginning, said lot or parcel of land being known and designated as Lots numbers ten and eleven (10 and 11) in Block fifty-seven (57) upon a certain map entitled "Map of property of City Land Association," filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 17th day of March, A. D. 1910.. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of CHARLES LEVIS, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing on the Northerly line of Ellis Street at a point Twenty (20) feet Westerly from the Northwesterly corner of Ellis and Buchanan Streets, thence running Westerly along the Northerly line of Ellis Street Forty (40) feet; thence at right angles Northerly Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles Easterly forty (40) feet, thence at right angles Southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the Northerly line of Ellis Street and the place of beginning Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 278.

You are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit, that said Court by its final judgment and decree may ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said real property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and may adjudge plaintiff to be the owner in fee and in possession of said lands and may quiet plaintiff's title thereto against all persons whomsoever claiming or to claim the same, and for such other relief as may be meet and equitable.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 19th day of February, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

The first publication of this Summons was made in "Town Talk" newspaper on the 26th day of February, A. D. 1910.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Name—City and County of San Francisco (a municipal corporation; Address—San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff,
909 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 2-26-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 28,088.

MARIA ROMEI, Plaintiff, vs.
GIUSEPPE ROMEI, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Giuseppe Romei, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1910.

HARDA ZOIE, Plaintiff, vs.
NICHOLAS ZOIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Nicholas Zoie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion and abandonment of the plaintiff without any sufficient cause or reason and on the further ground of defendant's wilful failure and neglect to provide plaintiff with the common necessaries of life while having the ability so to do; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

What Will Women Wear?

What will the woman of a century hence wear? It was one of the questions discussed by Mme. Melba recently in the course of giving her opinion as to the results of the wider outlook for women. "Woman will always be woman," said the great singer; and thence she opined that a woman will always love her home, and care about her looks. "Freak fashions will die out," the speaker prophesied, "but there will be graceful sweeping effects, fine color harmonies, and daintiness of manner and speech, while the greater use of her intelligence will spiritualize her face." I discussed this opinion with a lady doctor, a woman fashion-artist, and a woman of business, and we all agreed that the working woman of the future is more likely to establish for herself a severe and strictly rational dress, while about her work at all events. Mme. Melba is a working woman too, of course, but the character of her profession protects her from wind and weather; she does not know, as the rest of us do, what it means to have to go out about one's business in rain and snow and storm; to do serious work that needs steadiness of eye and hand, or a brain on the alert to observe and remember and reflect in the midst of rush and noise, and how desirable it is then to be not fretted by needless constrictions or weights or any sort of inconveniences of attire. For my part, I think the woman of the future will have a working dress and a playing dress as distinct and different as are now, for instance, a judge's robes from his shooting-suit. We are, in fact, well on the way to this arrangement already, for a trim but quite loose and simple tailor-made coat and a short skirt are steadily kept in fashion year after year for wear on the occasions that demand such a costume, while we are none the less devoted to grace and color in our ever-fluctuating fashions for evening wear or for smart day occasions. Women will always be women, as Mme. Melba reminds us, and will love daintiness and adornment when circumstances allow.

Some Famous Gems

The splendid effect of the new Crown diamonds, as worn by the Queen of England at the recent Court functions, is being much talked about. The largest of the two handfuls of brilliants into which the famous Cullinan diamond cut up is pear-shaped, and nearly the length of the forefinger of a lady's hand; the next in size is almost square in shape and as big as a large greengage plum. Both are set so as to show no gold; and as they were worn by the Queen in the form of a pendant, one under the other, apparently the great lucid drops sent forth their thousand coruscations attached to her Majesty's neck by magnetic attraction alone. The effect, as may be supposed, was superb. It seems, by the way, as if these two splendid brilliants, marking, as it is hoped and expected that they do, the contented adhesion of the Transvaal as a whole to the British Empire, ought to have names bestowed upon them more worthy of their significance and their beauty and value than the ungainly style and title, "Cullinan No. 1" and "Cullinan No. 2," by which they have been hitherto known. Would it not be appropriate if they took their place amongst what the King has described as "the jewels that form the historic heirloom of the Crown," named after the present monarch and his beloved consort? The "Edward the Seventh" and "Queen Alexandra" crown diamonds would be appropriately named for historical reference and preservation.

Many of the famous diamonds of the world are called after their most illustrious possessors. The greatest of the many splendid stones owned by the Russian monarch is "the Orloff," bought for an immense sum by the Prince of that name for presentation to his royal mistress, Catherine the Great. "The Regent" was the most splendid of the crown jewels of France, and was so called after the Duc d'Orleans who held the reins of government during the minority of Louis XV. The Regent is said to have given $1,225,000 for this treasure, which came from India; the sum was so large, even for a Prince in command of the revenues of France, that it was paid in installments at intervals extending over several years. The "Koh-i-Noor," the largest of our own crown diamonds until these new ones were added, is of course a fanciful name, "the Mountain of Light." Both of the new Cullinan diamonds greatly surpass the Koh-i-Noor in size; "No. 1" is not far short of five times the weight of the older famous gem, and "No. 2" is nearly three times as heavy as the Koh-i-Noor.

It is impossible to compute in money the value of such splendid gems; they pass out of the area of market competition, which is what can be measured by gold coin. An Indian Princess is said to have expressed this fact in picturesque language. The story is told in one of the letters of the late Lord Dalhousie, then Governor-General of India, that if a man were to throw four stones, one to the east, one to the west, one to the north, and one to the south, and then another as high as he could into the air, and all the space between them were filled with gold, it all would not equal the value of the Koh-i-Noor. After this, to be told that the two Cullinan diamonds are believed to be worth two and a half millions of pounds sterling seems quite a commonplace method of computation.

"Why do you always go out on to the balcony when I begin to sing? Can't you bear to listen to me?"

"It isn't that, but I don't want the neighbors to take me for a wife-beater."

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

How's Your Stomach?

H-O

Have you been ill-treating your best friend? Have you been insulting it by offering it a variety of indigestible and unhealthful foods? Possibly it has balked at this and you are now reaping your reward in indigestion. Better apologize by offering it a diet of delicious and wholesome H-O oatmeal, and see how quickly it will respond and perform its natural functions. H-O oatmeal is the only steam-cooked oatmeal on the market. Being dextrinized and easily assimilated, it strengthens and nourishes all parts of the body. It is made from the choicest oats, and by our steam-cooking process, all the rich, nutty flavor of the virgin oats is preserved.

The medical world generally recognizes the value of H-O oatmeal and prescribes it particularly for those of delicate constitutions and for older people requiring the maximum amount of nourishment with the least digestive exertion.

H-O oatmeal is free from hulls and grit.

Do not confuse H-O oatmeal with the ordinary raw oats sold under the name of "Rolled Oats" or "Crushed Oats." H-O oatmeal is never sold in bulk; it is free from dirt, germs, and all impurities.

H-O oatmeal is manufactured from the highest grade of selected stock. After removing all foreign matter, the meat of the oat is subjected to a very high temperature, and by our own patented process is cooked for several hours under heavy steam pressure. This steam-cooking dextrinizes the starch and renders the oats easily digestible. H-O oatmeal is ready for the breakfast table after from ten to fifteen minutes' boiling, and provides an inviting dish of sweet, clean, separate, tender kernels in place of the sticky, soggy, indigestible mass obtained in cooking the usual "Rolled Oats"

Possibly the "other" kind may be cheaper; but as soon as you have tested and appreciated the quality of H-O oatmeal, you will gladly pay the few cents difference.

McCarthy and Gaynor

It is a singular coincidence that at this moment the Mayor of New York and the Mayor of San Francisco are resenting unjust criticism of conditions in their respective cities. Both gentlemen are in an indignant mood because of the slanders that have been put in circulation for political effect. Mayor Gaynor says that criticism of conditions in New York is inspired with the most vicious motives. Mayor McCarthy says the same thing about criticism of conditions in this city. Mayor Gaynor's complaint is against the preachers of New York, "who," he says, "make more noise about reform than all the rest of us put together and do less of it than any other body of men." He invites them to come forward generously, not to entrap but to assist. "Don't lie in wait," he says, "to see some evil done that you may deal harshly with it, but be helpful." Mayor McCarthy's complaint is against certain newspapers that are intent upon discrediting his Administration. He does not ask for help from them knowing as he does that improvement of conditions is not what they want. His enemies would rather see San Francisco converted into a sink of iniquity while he is on the job than to see it transformed into a Platonic community. If he were to make the city approximate their descriptions of it they would be supremely happy. They are well aware that San Francisco in the matter of morals is no better and no worse than it was when Dr. Taylor was blinking at vice and affecting a holy horror of unrighteousness. The newspapers that are abusing Mayor McCarthy are the newspapers that had strings on Dr. Taylor and that kept him jumping like a marionette. They supplied him with ideals for preaching purposes; they encouraged him in his smug self-satisfaction; and all the while they regulated vice in ways which they conceived to be most conducive to the political interests of a little coterie of pseudo-reformers. The Taylor administration served as a fine exemplification of the advantages of Pharisaism. Affecting virtues that he had not Dr. Taylor was accepted at his own valuation, and there were many people who believed that during his Administration the whole town went to bed with the chickens. Mayor McCarthy, by reason of his frankness is less fortunate than his predecessor. He has not affected intolerance of the pastimes that are inseparable from life in a large city, and his enemies taking advantage of his frankness are trying to create the impression that in his case liberality is synonymous with licentiousness.

The Arctic Pole Question

Now that the summit of Mount McKinley has failed to yield anything in the nature of evidence corroborative of Dr. Cook's story of his achievement as a climber we are justified in applying to him the familiar maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. But the question about the discovery of the Pole is not to be settled with a maxim. Nor is it a corollary of the maxim applicable in this instance that to be truthful in one instance is to be truthful in all. Though Lieutenant Peary may have told the truth about Cook it does not follow that he told the truth about himself. Lieutenant Peary has yet to produce proof that he discovered the Pole. And he cannot expect to have presumptions indulged in his favor except by partisans. If he has not yet been proved a liar, he is at least handicapped by the suspicion that he is not a gentleman, and a man that is not that has not the slightest difficulty in deviating from the truth. We know that Peary had no hesitation in pronouncing Cook a faker at a time when he could not have known that such was the fact. We have testimony that he extorted two hundred blue Arctic fox skins from a man who held them in trust for Dr. Cook. We know that he seized a meteorite belonging to the Eskimos which he sold for $40,000. We know that his behaviour on his return to civilization was such as to disgust men of ordinary sensibilities. And knowing all these things we are inclined to assume toward the thrifty explorer the attitude of the sceptic from Missouri. Lieutenant Peary is unfortunate in the matter of his instincts.

The Philistines of Berkeley

Great is the humiliation of the faculty of our State university. To the infinite shame and mortification of the gentlemen who have consecrated their lives to the advancement of the arts and sciences it has been found that all their efforts to diffuse sweetness and light among the people of Berkeley have been in vain. Philistinism is rampant in the college town. There has vulgar Puritanism prevailed over estheticism and sentenced art to outlawry without benefit of clergy or a protest from President Wheeler. This is a severe blow to intellectual pride. If there is one place in the State to which we might have looked with absolute confidence for sympathy with the aims and purposes of art it is that place which is within the shadow of our university; and yet here we find a community that has never been irradiated by the sacred lamp of learning, a benighted community that has never been inducted into the mysteries of the cult of beauty and that is shocked and scandalized by things that might stir the thoughts, the feelings, the dreams of men generation after generation. In short the people of Berkeley are intolerant of the nude in art. A sculptor employed to fashion a gate for the university ornamented it with symbolical figures, and the face of the community at once took on the complexion of Halley's comet. In the symbolism of the sculpture there was no appeal to the Philistines of the college town. They saw nothing but naked effigies of the human biped, and these effigies excited in them feelings that they ought to be ashamed of, but they had not the modesty to conceal the nastiness of their minds. They demanded that the sculpture be banished, and prompt was the deference accorded to their stupid intolerance. It is evident that something must be done for Berkeley. Heretofore Berkeley has been preoccupied with reform in San Francisco, and to this fact may perhaps be attributed its neglect of itself. Our university professors should devote themselves at once to the task of raising the standard of taste in the college community. Berkeley is in need of refinement. It should be educated out of its coarseness. It should be made clear to the citizenry that they have ill treated the creations of an artist which they have judged according to a standard repugnant to all clean-minded persons. They should be enlightened with respect to the test of decency in art. They should be taught the object of art, and have explained to them the difference between matter-of-fact nudes labelled with the names of gods and goddesses and nudes that give us a new and poetic conception. It would benefit them greatly to learn why the nude figure so far as sculpture is concerned is the most abstract and idealized medium of expression; why nudity is in itself not vulgar and why it does not excite sensual emotions in persons whose minds are more receptive to pure than to impure ideas. This subject is broad enough and important enough for a course of lectures. President Wheeler should attend to the matter at once.

The Darling of the Mob

Do we desire honest men in public office? The popular supposition is that we do, but popular suppositions are usually popular fallacies. We make what we conceive to be our common interest our standard of virtue, and demand of our public servants that they adopt it as theirs. In other words we expect them to do rather what we believe to be to our advantage than what they may believe to be just. This is not a wise policy, the consequence of it being that we encourage demagogism, and the arts of the demagogue are immoral. Let us consider by way of illustration the attitude of certain public servants toward the United Railroads in the matter of the Sutter street franchise. Here we find men pretending to believe that a temporary permit to operate electric cars over the outer rails on Market street might result in the forfeiture of certain rights which the city might have on that thoroughfare. Now it is unreasonable to believe that these men really hold so absurd an opinion. No man of ordinary intelligence believes that these officials are honest in their assertion of this opinion. About the meaning of the word "temporary" there can be no argument. In the granting of a temporary permit for anything the authorities can fix the time in which the privilege granted shall cease. Now this is as clear as the sky on a cloudless, sunlit day, and yet we have public servants pretending that there is something about it vague, uncertain and susceptible of misconstruction. This they are doing ostensibly in the interest of the people and apparently the people are approving their conduct. The supposition is that by the practice of this species of dishonesty, which is akin to blackmail, our public servants may succeed in extorting certain rights from the United Railroads and thus derive some advantage for the city. All of which is of course immoral. Is this species of immorality repugnant to the people? Experience teaches that it is not. The people are governed in all their conduct by the different modifications of self-interest and the passions commonly classed as selfish. Of course it is not to their interest to encourage immorality in public office, but they persuade themselves that whatever is for their benefit is right, losing sight of the fact that the elemental principles of justice are not to be modified for expediency or convenience without incurring some penalty. The public official who does wrong to gratify the people is not likely to scruple at doing wrong to gratify himself. The demagogue in office does wrong for the people not because he loves the people but because he wishes to gain the favor of the people. He coddles the people that thrift may following fawning. The relations between him and the people are those of grafter and higher-up, and the ballot box is the medium through which he receives the bribe he solicits.

Hearst's Impending Flop

The Hon. William Randolph Hearst, our most distinguished prophet of disorder, the most agile acrobat in the political arena, has made announcement of a disposition on his part to renew once more his allegiance to the Democratic party. This announcement is perhaps a matter of some significance. From it we may reasonably infer that Mr. Hearst, who is ever engaged in trimming his views as a sailor trims his sails, ever on the alert to catch each vagrant breeze of popular favor, according to his lights sees much in the signs of the times to justify confidence in the immediate future of the Democracy. This is a reasonable inference. Even though it be correct, however, it does not necessarily follow that Mr. Hearst is eager to join the Democratic party again for the benefit of that party. Nor does it follow that he wishes to make that party the instrument of his own political ambition. Mr. Hearst does not play the game of politics solely for the achievement of political ends. He is moved by considerations more important in the philosophy of a man of his temperament than those which preoccupy men who are concerned only about their political interests. Mr. Hearst is a business man, with extensive business interests in Mexico as well as in this country and these he can best advance by political power wielded not in his own propria persona but through the medium of others. Of course we do not pretend to know the nature of Mr. Hearst's present designs. It is for us but to suggest that there is always a great depth beneath the surface of Mr. Hearst's pretensions and professions. He tells us that he is actuated entirely by principle and that he regards "principles as the question of first importance in any campaign." Now this is a sentiment that may be somewhat misleading. While Mr. Hearst is a stickler for principle, he has no superstitious devotion to any set of principles. It is as easy for him to change his principle as his collar. The good principle of today becomes the bad principle of tomorrow in Mr. Hearst's code of political ethics. Mr. Hearst is above all things progressive. His ideals are as elusive as quicksilver. He gives himself credit with his tongue and pen for many fine sentiments which his actions belie, but this is because he is not a logical machine. His principles and impulses are not in strict unison; on the contrary, they are eternally at variance. But we do not impugn Mr. Hearst's sincerity. We realize that were we to judge of his sincerity by the proportion between the degree of the patriotism he professes and teaches and that which he practices we might be constrained to regard him as a hypocrite, but we are mindful of the fact that if to do were as easy as to teach others what were good to be done chapels had been churches and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. Nevertheless viewing the impending consummation from all conceivable standpoints we find ourselves constrained to withhold the felicitations which at first blush we might have been inclined to bestow upon the Democratic party.

Trial by Newspaper

In an address on "Evils and Remedies in the Administration of the Criminal Law" delivered some days ago in Philadelphia by Samuel Untermeyer, one of the leaders of the New York bar, there are some valuable suggestions for the restriction of newspaper utterances on pending judicial cases. Mr. Untermeyer is not of the temperament of most of our Californian law reformers who find no fault with the code except that it supplies a man charged with crime with too many technicalities. Apparently in their judgment it is better that ninety-nine innocent men should suffer injustice than that one guilty man should escape. They have great reverence for the English judicial system and would borrow from it every practice that is in any way conducive to verdicts of guilty, but they take no note of the English safeguards against the oppression of the individual. One of the most important of these safeguards is the vital principle of English jurisprudence—the absolute independence of the man on the bench. He is as far beyond the influence of the Crown as he is above the clamor of the mob. Another important safeguard is that by which newspapers are prohibited from publishing anything concerning a case that is in the courts, other than a verbatim report of the proceedings in open court. This is the great principle that Mr. Untermeyer would have us incorporate in our code. Furthermore he is in favor of the English rule "prohibiting any prosecuting officer under penalty of removal and punishment for a misdemeanor, from expressing or suggesting for publication an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a person accused, or from disclosing any of the proceedings of a grand jury." "When we consider," says Mr. Untermeyer, "the far reaching effect of these press campaigns against persons under criminal charges, such regulations should be regarded as very mild compared with the evils that are sought to be remedied." He adds that the expense to which the State is put in securing impartial jurors is alone more than sufficient to justify the reasonable precaution which he suggests. The people of this State know something of the evils to which Mr. Untermeyer alludes. They have seen newspapers as well as prosecuting attorneys affirming the guilt of accused persons far in advance of their trial. They have seen newspapers and prosecuting officers raging against accused persons, exciting the fury of the mob and even intimidating jurors. Trial by newspaper is a common occurrence in this State. It is an evil that should be abated. There is no reform more urgent than that which has been suggested by the distinguished New York lawyer.

The Dead Faith

She made a little shadow-hidden grave
  The day Faith died;
Therein she laid it, heard the clod's sick fall,
  And smiled aside—
"If less I ask," tear-blind, she mocked, "I may Be less denied."

She set a rose to blossom in her hair,
  The day Faith died—
"Now glad," she said, "and free at last, I go,
  And life is wide."
But through long nights she stared into the dark,
  And knew she lied.

It is easy to find fault with President Taft if you judge him by Roosevelt standards after the manner of the muckrakers. These standards are as popular today as were the standards by which Nero was judged in his day. Nero was the most popular of the Caesars.

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(In the preceding chapters of this serial history of the days of the Vigilantes the narrator tells of the circumstances that led to the assassination of the Bulletin's first editor by James P. Casey, of the organization of the Vigilance Committee and of the manner in which he eluded the men who were eager to lynch him for a crime in which he had no hand. At the close of the last chapter the fugitive from injustice was in hiding in the home of a woman in the Mission.)

(Third Instalment)

I remained with this good old lady about four weeks, during which time nothing worthy of note occurred. My friend who visited me twice a week, brought me all the papers, and I had the pleasure of reading all the kind and good natured things that were said of me, and also all the profound surmises as to my whereabouts.* It was while I was at this house that I received the agreeable though rather surprising information that I was in Carson Valley. A kind friend had started the story for the purpose of throwing my pursuers off the scent, and I here beg to tender him my most heartfelt thanks for his good offices.†

I knew more of what was going on inside the Commitee rooms—except the Executive room—than many who belonged to them. The Law and Order party had their spies in the Vigilance camp, as doubtless they had theirs in ours. I used frequently to see the Light Brigade drilling, with John M. Freeman and Frank Baker in command. One day I distinctly heard John give the word of command—"Trot!" The first day I saw them, although as I afterward learned they numbered but a hundred men, they looked very numerous, and I thought they had come to surround the neighborhood. I was about to get into my hiding-place under the floor, but after looking at them a few moments longer, I saw that they were only exercising. A pretty looking set they were! charging and slashing around, and mowing down fictitious enemies with the most brilliant gallantry imaginable. I could not help wondering how long some of those heavy-set Dutchmen and tape-selling Bayards would have kept their clumsy seats if charged upon by half a dozen well mounted and determined men. They "were a motley crew." Most of them appeared to have quite as much on their hands as they could well attend to in managing their sabres and bridle reins, and sticking to their saddles, without the additional trouble of attempting to learn cavalry manoeuvres. Oh, puissant warriors! Could you only have known that one weak old man, whose imaginary sins had awakened your terrible wrath, and marshaled you in that awful battle array, was calmly amusing himself by looking at you at the distance of a few hundred yards, what a gala day would it have been for you! You would have dismounted and given up your ridiculous attempts to ape the soldier, and most incontinently then and there proceeded to tie a rope around my old neck, and hang me up to the first telegraph post. And in good sooth it were an occupation better befitting your natural gifts and tastes than that of endeavoring to play the part of chivalry, which, in order to be successfully done, requires some modicum of the gentleman.

While I was in this place, I lived in hope from day to day that the lawless proceedings of the Vigilance Committee would be put a stop to, either by force of arms or otherwise. I understood that the Law and Order forces were preparing, when they had a sufficient number of arms, to compel the Committee to disband. And, although it was generally understood by their best military men, that matters had been, and were being managed very badly for them, still I shared the hope entertained by many, that something would finally be done. The fatal mistake was that of leaving their forces and arms scattered about in various defenseless armories where they could at any time be taken in detail by the Committee's superior numbers, instead of going at once into an encampment, and thus concentrating their strength and forming a nucleus, around which their friends from the mountains could rally; and to this mistake the Vigilance Committee may attribute their undeserved success. The proper orders, however, did not come from headquarters, and the junior officers had only to lie on their arms and swallow their chagrin. My friend had promised me that if a fight took place I should be notified of it in time to participate. When, however, the man Hopkins was stabbed by Judge Terry, and the Committee availed themselves of the occasion to take the arms of the State, my hopes died within me. The effects of the wretched policy that had been pursued were then, as had been predicted, felt when too late to remedy them, and the supporters of the constitution and the laws were left not only powerless to maintain their cause, but exposed personally naked and defenseless to the pitiless storm of treason and fanaticism that swept over the city. I became disgusted and disheartened, and begged my friend to set his wits to work to devise some means by which I could leave the county of San Francisco. It mattered not to me where I went, so that I could but go and go speedily. I not only was in peril of my life by remaining, but, had I not been, I no longer desired to breathe the polluted air of the Doomed City. At length matters were arranged and the plan formed for my departure.

Friday evening, the 27th of June—the day that Judge Terry's trial before the Vigilance Committee commenced, and while the Executive Committee were busily engaged in that gentleman's case—was the time fixed for my flight from San Francisco. I was to endeavor to make my way home to Philadelphia by the southern

* Still After McGowan.—Quite a number of members of the Vigilance Committee, with perhaps some of the police, were keeping close watch upon and around a block fronting upon Stockton street yesterday afternoon. It was finally concluded that they were upon the wrong scent. If Ned be in the city, he has firm and shrewd friends who know how to conceal him. Among so many reports as to his whereabouts it is impossible to say which is true, or whether any be true.—Chronicle, June 10.

* Aquatic Sports of the Committee.—Towards the close of yesterday, considerable excitement prevailed. The Committee having received some information that McGowan had been conveyed on board of some vessel which was to put to sea this morning, chartered the steam tug Martin White, Captain H. A. Cheever, and started in pursuit. At an early hour in the afternoon the Martin White got up steam and cleared. The chase was anxiously viewed from Telegraph Hill. Two schooners were observed crowding all their sail to make the Gate. The Martin White puffed and labored, and appeared to gain on the schooners steadily. The chase became exciting. The schooners were the Queen of the West and the Francisco. In a short time the Martin White came along side. The schooners were overhauled, but as the sequel will show, no discovery was made. By this time the excitement in town became intense. It was rumored that McGowan had been captured, and a rush was accordingly made to the wharves to obtain a glance at the ubiquitous individual, about whose whereabouts so much had been said. At length the Martin White hove in sight. The people rushed. She came along side the wharf. A large number of the parcels of the Committee came ashore. They brought with them an ominous looking box, about six feet in length, wrapped in blankets. The rumor was immediately circulated that the aforesaid box contained the mortal remains of the ubiquitous McGowan. It was general believed. The box was placed on a cart; it was conveyed to the rooms of the Vigilance Committee; it was carefully brought up stairs; five thousand people witnessed the sight. In concluding this account of the aquatic sport of the Committee, we would state that from all the inquiries that we have made on the subject, we are of the opinion that the box over which so much parade was made did not contain the remains of McGowan, and that it was filled with tower-muskets, warranted by the maker not to explode.—San Francisco Herald, May 27.

† Ned McGowan near Carson Valley.—This notorious individual is said to have been met by a Mr. David J. Barnes, from Missouri, at a place called Silver Creek, just below Carson Valley. Mr. Barnes had been wintering at Bear river, on his way to this State, and on his way across the mountains met a man at Silver Creek called Judge McGowan, who, in company with five other persons, was spending his time in hunting. From an article in reference to the discovery of this noted character in the Sacramento Spirit of the Age of yesterday, and telegraphed to the Evening Bulletin, we glean the following:

Says Mr. Barnes: "After I camped in the evening, I went down to their camp, some four or five miles off the road. They had lost one of their horses. They (four men) came to my camp next morning. One of them said: 'Judge McGowan, you can send that saddle to Placerville by this emigrant.' The men reported that they were hunting and sometimes prospecting."

Mr. Barnes brought the saddle with him to Placerville, and endeavored to leave it at a hotel as directed, but the landlord refused to accept it or Barnes either. He then brought it to this city, and left it at the store of Heard & Osborn, where it remains, subject to the order of Judge McGowan.

Mr. Barnes reports that when he asked what name he should leave with the saddle, McGowan answered: "No matter what name—just leave it there till called for." McGowan's party were apparently out of provisions.—Daily Town Talk, June 25.

route through Mexico. I did not much like to start on a Friday, inasmuch as it was hangman's or Vigilante day; and I have never been entirely free from superstition. However, as the journey was not properly to commence until the following day, I overcame my scruples, and prepared for the start. My friend called early in the evening to inform me that all was arranged, and the horses, together with a guide who had been provided, (James Dennison), and a companion, were in waiting at the Mission Dolores, so that all I had to do was to go there, mount and ride for life.

I bid an affectionate farewell to the good and kind lady who had sheltered me, and thoroughly disguised stepped out into the night, and accompanied by my friend bent my steps toward the Mission. Having arrived there, and found everything in readiness, I put on my spurs, embraced my kind friend who had been more than a brother to me—may God reward him—and mounted the good horse who was to carry me, I trusted, safely from danger.

I felt sad, very sad, not only at parting with my true and faithful friend who had been so constant and so kind throughout my many perils, but also at leaving the City of San Francisco. An hour before I was all anxiety to turn my back upon it forever, but when the time of parting came, involuntarily my mind recurred to the many happy days I had passed there, and the many friends whose cheerful smile and pleasant laugh I was, as I supposed, on that evening bidding farewell to forever. I kissed my hand to my friend, and turning my head toward the city, notwithstanding the dreadful plague-spot that marred its beauty, I bid it a sorrowful, yet affectionate "good night."

That night we were only to ride to Dennison's rancho at Half Moon Bay, a distance of about twenty-five miles from the Mission, in what is now the county of San Mateo. We had to traverse a rugged mountain road, bad enough in the day-time, but at night, except on the surest-footed beasts, almost impassable. Our object was to keep off the main roads as much as possible both night and day. However, we got on pretty well till within about three miles of our stopping-place, when my horse, who was quite a colt, and full of spirit, knowing that he was approaching home started to run and threw me. I fell very heavily, and was badly hurt. Indeed, I thought for a time that my back must be broken. He did not run far, however, before the Californian who accompanied us caught him. I could scarcely walk, my back pained me so dreadfully. I knew, though, what I had to go through in the journey before me, and thinking it too soon to begin to complain, I again mounted with great difficulty, assisted by my companions, and rode on to the house. It was daylight when we reached the end of our ride, and right glad I was to have an opportunity to rest. I went to bed and slept until eleven o'clock a. m., when I arose, and while I took breakfast Dennison and the Californian—who by the way was his brother-in-law—caught the horses that we were to take with us for the journey. The Californian, whose name will figure considerably in this narrative, I may as well here describe: His name is Ramon Valencia. He is very dark complexioned, though his skin is as soft and polished as a woman's. He is of medium stature, very well formed, and has most expressive features,—a fine bright and intelligent eye, a great deal of vivacity, and much good sense. He had married the sister of my friend Dennison, but had lost her under most unhappy circumstances. He was very kind-hearted, and many a weary mile he beguiled by his agreeable chat in broken English. I can never forget his kindness to me during my weary pilgrimage, and beg now to offer him my thanks and good wishes for his future. Would that it were in my power to return him even one of his many disinterested and generous acts of friendship to me.

Dennison selected six of his finest California horses, and in another hour we were in the saddle and had commenced our journey. I felt very sore from my fall of the preceding night, but said nothing about it, determined to bear up until I had placed many leagues between myself and danger. Nothing in the way of incident occurred to us during that day's travel. We followed the coast range, always keeping as far as possible the trails, and avoiding the main roads.

The termination of that day's ride was a little Spanish settlement near the coast, called the Piscadero, where we found only a few Californians and two or three Americans. It is some twenty-five or thirty miles south of the ranch of my friend Dennison, which we had left in the morning. We arrived there just before dusk, and found quarters with a California widow-lady. She was, like all her country-women, a most kind-hearted and estim-

The Physician at the Supper Table---I.

By the Sybarite

"That's not insomnia," responded the physician, as two California clubmen sat over a pint of Monopole and some sweetbreads, a la Conde, at the dead of a starless night. "You are too young and too moderate to come in contact with so Mephistophelian a companion. You are merely affected with slight attacks of wakefulness—or, sleeplessness, as it is generally termed."

"Slight attacks! Doctor, you are too clever—too good-natured over another's woes. Slight attacks! Great Caesar's invulnerable phantom! I haven't had a full night's rest for six months, except occasionally after indulging immoderately in stirrup-cups; and then I am compelled to pay for it succeeding nights at usurious rates of interest."

"This is a delicious wine, and properly cooled."

"Some people like their champagne frappe."

"Do you?"

"Doctor!"

"Now, honest?"

"I have indulged in it, once in a while."

"And did you like it?"

"What has that to do with my insomnia?"

"Did you ever read Dr. Hammond's novel called Mr. Oldmixon?"

"What are you going to give me for my insomnia? Yes; what are you going to give me?"

"I remember that that most princely of all snobs, McAllister, recommended champagne frappe; so 'that frozen sheets may appear through it,' a vile trick learned by McAllister from some European gentleman's gentleman, and by said McAllister taught to an inanely vulgar coterie of cads that played at being in society! Alas, indeed! For the true connoisseur of champagne would hold an honest drink of buttermilk in higher esteem than a glass of champagne that had suffered the indignity of frappe. But the leader of New York's Four Hundred died soon afterward. His advice on champagne drinking made all clubdom and all other sensible drinking men shudder—or laugh. Perhaps his own formula killed him. Did you ever read a little book entitled 'See how it sparkles?' I will get it. Excuse me for a moment. * * * Here: 'There cannot be too much respect paid to champagne. In the first place it should be properly cooled but never iced, while nobody but a youngster or an aged idiot would presume to disturb the excellencies of a pretentious repast by serving it frappe, which may be termed a gastronomic blasphemy. It should be poured carefully into a tapering glass, and be drunk slowly, as soon as decanted. The old-fashioned stem glass with a broad top is the best, except that it is too big. Champagne is the most evanescent of all wines. Evaporation of flavor and evanescence of fragrance set in the moment the wine reaches the glass. Therefore the glass should be emptied at once and completely. There is no breach of manners in this, as, by a slight movement of the hand, the entertainer or serving man is signaled not to immediately refill the glass.'"

"I guess you have forgotten all about my insomnia."

"One would have inferred from McAllister's advice to his Four Hundred concerning the New York method of dealing with the noblest of wines that he and his Four Hundred were still in that stage of social development wherein olives are eaten by the aid of a fork."

"You say my trouble is sleeplessness and not insomnia?"

"Sleeplessness to insomnia is as a mosquito bite to a sword thrust. A little camphor or other embrocation for the one and more critical treatment for the other."

"But you will give me a prescription, Doctor?"

"You will get no prescription from me. I am your friend, and I will give you some advice; advice is free, by the way, which is not the case with prescriptions—that is, generally."

"Well."

"In a few words, then, eat a cracker or two just before going to bed. Indulge as little as possible in fluids; gulp down nothing ice-cold, and don't drink tea or coffee after midday. Keep your feet warm day and night. Ride on a street car, on the outside, or walk half an hour before going to bed. To elaborate: The good old cure for sleeplessness holds through all changes:—an easy conscience and a healthy body. A due portion of fatigue and quiet surroundings may be added as also necessary to induce refreshing sleep, and sleep which is not refreshing is about as unsatisfactory as wakefulness. Nevertheless, by people of a nervous temperament some strictly material rules for courting the balmy god with success are not to be despised. Many little things conduce to sleeplessness, the avoidance of which will remove that trouble. Indigestion, cold feet, overfatigue, tea and coffee taken in excess, excitement generally, all tend to a restlessness of the brain, which prevents calm sleep. Many devices are resorted to to expel such nervousness. The old suggestion, made in ridicule, originally, to read some very dry book or to have some one talk you to sleep is really excellent in practice. The dull monotony of a prosy book, and even more the dull monotone of a prosy talker, usually produces just the dull impressions on the brain which are required to induce sleep. A monotonous train of thoughts often serves. You have probably heard the story of that eminent student of brain disorders who prescribed the constant dripping of water on a metal pan. The regular ticking of a clock frequently sends sleepless persons into the desired state of brain inaction, though in fact all these processes may serve to drive a very nervous person into a wild hysteria of wakefulness."

"So I am to have no prescription? I am just to carry out your advice—no medicine of any kind. Why, the street car men will think I am a crank, or the hold-ups may go after me during some of my half-hour walks. No tea or coffee, no cold feet, no nothing but a few crackers to take to bed with me? Doctor, you are a peach."

"Sleeplessness is always wakefulness in one or more of its multitudinous forms, and the recourse to narcotic poisons for its relief is utterly unscientific and deplorable. It is as clumsy in theory—in so far as it can be said to have a theory—as knocking a man down because he needs rest. What is it that prevents the natural and physicial rest of the body at rythmical periods? The brain is as truly a part of the body as the stomach, and it is as much a fault of the organs of the mind to prevent sleep by mental worry or wakefulness as it is a fault of the stomach to render it impossible by bad digestion. No intelligent practitioner dreams of narcotizing the nerves of the gastric organs to promote sleep. Why in the name of common sense should any medical man for an instant think it legitimate to narcotize the brain because it exhibits some disturbing irregularity in its functions? Sleep is not a special prerogative of the brain. Every organ sleeps, and generally sleep is the aggregate of many sleeps. It is time to protest against this clumsy procedure. If I do so warmly, it is because I feel that the mistake is of common making. It is so much easier to write a prescription or make up a bottle of medicine or a box of pills with one of the rank poisons that mimic sleep, and as they do so deprave cerebral and nerve tissue, than it would be to search out the real and active cause of wakefulness. There are more than a score and a half of known causes or forms of sleeplessness, each one requiring direct and specific treatment, and, yet, as if by common consent, the profession sanctions the abuse of such drugs as chloral and bromide as poisonous sleep producers. No medical man is justified in undertaking the treatment of his maladies. It is impossible that he should so far step out of himself as to be able to form a reasonable judgment of his case objectively; and no practitioner has the justification of science for the recourse to narcotics as remedies for sleeplessness, except when an additional pain is the accidental disturber of a sleep function, or a habit of wakefulness may be broken by an occasional dose of the stupefier."

"But what on earth would become of the multitudes of young physicians that are turned out from our colleges every year if the afflicted can pull through on advice instead of prescriptions?"

"There you are. But I will be confidential. The fact is, the world is possessed with the notion that when a man is taken sick, a terrible ado must be kept up, an alternation of nursing and fussing, while preternaturally wise and whispering doctors, sympathizing friends, tearful relatives and chattering nurses add their contributions to the wrong side, and all because somebody is ill and needs chiefly rest. We have not yet, most of us, gotten rid of the old notion of the ancients that disease is a personality, a something that is in the air, that travels about, enters our dwellings, and finally seizes hold of us—something akin in the minds of the ignorant to a goblin, ghost, fiend, demon or witch, which only pills or potations can exorcise, kill or cure. I am confident that many physicians will say, if the patient will let them, that two-thirds of all the maladies of all the people in the world would disappear in a few hours or days, if left to themselves, with no other appliances than such as instinct would suggest and common sense employ. But patients often estimate the doctor's skill by the wonderfully wise look which he assumes and the extent and variety of his prescriptions; and a sick man's friends hate to seem unsympathizing, and are so apt to be officious. It is to be understood, of course, that I am not speaking of extreme cases, but of the treatment of most of the little ills which come upon overworked and worrying men and women, so many of whom we find all around us in this pushing competitive age. Their best remedy, if they can take it, is good air, dietary proprieties, healthful exercise, frequent baths, and occasional recreation and rest. These—"

Being a Brief Chronicle of Significant Events the Wide World Over

The Roosevelt Indelicacy

Colonel Roosevelt is in such close touch with the newspaper correspondents who are accompanying him on his European tour that it is a wonder he did not censor more carefully one of the dispatches sent to the papers during the Italian visit. It stated that during the stay of Colonel and Mrs. Roosevelt in Spezzia they paid a visit to the bed room which they occupied twenty-five years ago on their honeymoon. Almost any man would shrink from having such a fact published broadcast, but as the correspondents apparently published nothing which does not meet with the colonel's approval, it would seem that he saw nothing indelicate in the statement. Foreign papers were much amused when it was announced that Roosevelt arrived in Spezzia incognito—clad in a Rough Rider overcoat of khaki with the insignia of a colonel. That is not the sort of incognito to which Europe has been accustomed.

The Fight into Canada

The commissioner general of immigration has been investigating the exodus of American citizens to Canada and as a result of his findings efforts may be made by the government to stem the tide of emigration. More than 12,000 American citizens with from $1000 to $5000 each, practically all farmers and the heads of families, expatriated themselves between March, 1909 and March, 1910. They went from all parts of the United States but particularly from the Middle West, to take up fertile government land. The full number of persons who went to Canada during this period of one year was 95,370 and on a conservative estimate they took with them $1000 each; in other words $95,370,000 in gold. Of the number 57,576 were American born and 37,794 were aliens. The emigrants are of the best agricultural type, thrifty, skilled and with families. It has been estimated that since 1897 emigrants took from this country to Canada $520,830,000, practically all in gold.

The Cure of Cancer

Two significant incidents in the war which civilization is waging on cancer occurred recently. Dr. G. B. Massey of Chicago demonstrated the efficacy of electrical treatment for the disease in the London Cancer Hospital. Dr. Massey pierced cancerous tissue with three zinc needles coated with mercury and turned on an electric current millamperes. The cancer bleached and then shrivelled. The needles were next placed in healthy tissue surrounding the cancer, destroying the outlying colonies of cancer germs and the lines of dissemination. This first use of ionic surgery in England has created a profound sensation among cancer experts. Within a few days of this experiment President Taft asked the Congress to appropriate $50,000 for the establishment of a laboratory for the study of cancer in fishes. This disease sometimes becomes epidemic in fishes, sweeping them away in thousands, and it is thought that the study of it in the lower organisms will aid the study of it in man.

The Milwaukee Socialists

The victory of the Milwaukee Socialists in the recent election has given capital in the city a bad scare and it has been announced that four big apartment buildings to cost from $30,000 to $100,000 each, which were to have been erected, will not be built this year. The Socialists, however, declare that they will be conservative and will not disturb business interests. This declaration has not altogether satisfied business men and the course of the new city leaders will be watched with apprehension. The party elected the mayor, comptroller, treasurer, city attorney and twenty-one aldermen. During the next two years the party will have the naming of commissioner of public health, inspector of buildings, two commissioners of the board of public works, city engineer, tax commissioner, fire and police commissioners. The victory of the Socialists is attributed to the fact that 7 per cent of the population of Milwaukee is German.

Immigration in March

Immigration figures for the month of March show a greater influx than in any previous March, the actual number of immigrants for that month being 108,286. For February the figure was 44,397. The great increase is attributed to the prosperous condition of the country which is not only bringing new settlers but also drawing back those who fled to Europe during the financial depression of 1907. Still large numbers are expected from now on. The figures prepared by the immigration commissioner at New York show that of those who arrived at Ellis Island in March 1,742 were debarred, including 175 women. The proportion of English, Irish, Scotch and German immigrants was comparatively small. Italy furnished 29,488 persons, mostly men, of whom 13,070 were illiterate. There were 19,488 Austrians, 17,900 Russians, chiefly Jews, 17,712 Hungarians, 4,405 Greeks and 2,611 Germans, including German speaking Swiss. Only four of about 2,000 Englishmen were unable to read or write. Of this cityful of workers only 2,611 came on the mere chance of getting jobs. All the rest have friends or relatives in the regions to which they were bound. New York received the largest proportion of the March arrivals, 32,314, and most of these stopped in the five boroughs of the city. Pennsylvania absorbed 20,564, who went to the mining regions; Illinois took 13,078; New Jersey, 8,063; Ohio, 6,549; Connecticut, 3,392; Wisconsin, 2,198; California, 1,741; Missouri, 1,616; West Virginia, 1,172; Iowa, 1,008; Minnesota, 1,638, and other States less than a thousand each.

A World's Fair in New York

San Francisco should be vitally interested in the news that plans are being formulated for a world's fair in New York in 1913. Coming two years before the projected Panama fair in this city that would be a serious detriment to our success. The plan is to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Manhattan by the Dutch. A citizens' committee headed by Henry Clews called upon Mayor Gaynor a few days ago and asked him to appoint a committee of five hundred to consider the proposition. Mayor Gaynor was favorably disposed toward the suggestion. When the committee has been appointed a dinner will be given and the world's fair will be launched. Two years is hardly a sufficient breathing spell between a world's fair in New York and a world's fair in San Francisco. The New York project should be carefully considered by our citizens.

The Spectator

The Pot and the Kettle

Men about town equipped with a sense of humor are deriving much amusement from the sporadic ebullitions of hatred by which the Call and Bulletin have let it be known that each believes the other has become a degree more degraded than itself. But a short time ago these two blushless perverts of journalism were, as they should be, on terms of cordiality like birds of a feather. They made of pharisaic righteousness a common cause, and campaigned for decency at a fixed price per column, all the while pretending that they abhorred sinners and lived up to the most exalted ideals. In time they fell out, and as a result of mutual crimination and recrimination honest men are enabled at their leisure to glimpse the infamy of both. When the story of the corrupt compact made by the Bulletin for the purpose of getting a rake-off from the city printing contract came out some weeks ago, the Call gleefully gave it publicity. A little later the Bulletin retaliated by pointing out that the Call had published as news an attack on Hetch-Hetchy that was paid for by the Spring Valley Water Company. Thereupon the Call, having no defense to make, invited Mayor McCarthy to avail himself of its columns for the purpose of expatiating on the pungent odors that emanate from the fragrant Older contaminating the circumambient and menacing the community with a personally conducted pestilence.

The Bludgeon Method

The Bulletin's attack on the Call was characterstically pharisaic. According to the editor of the Bulletin he was offered $450 to publish the article in question as news, but rejected the proposal saying that he would print it only as an advertisement. This is probably true, but it does not signify anything. The Bulletin is probably getting sufficient money from Phelan and Spreckels, the enemies of Spring Valley, to justify it in turning its back on that public service corporation. But the Bulletin would have it understood that it never disguises advertising matter as news. This is of course no nearer to the truth than the boughten journal ever gets when prevarication is more to the purpose of that thrifty sheet. The Bulletin like all our daily papers publishes as news anything that a regular advertiser asks to have published. The Bulletin, furthermore, will suppress anything that a regular advertiser asks to have suppressed. In this respect it is no worse than any of its daily contemporaries. The only difference between the Bulletin and the other dailies is in the matter of the method employed in getting advertising. The semi-respectable dailies solicit advertising matter on a legitimate basis; the Bulletin goes after it with a bludgeon, practicing coercion as was done in the case of the Emporium once upon a time and also in the case of the theatres.

Harvey's Bonds

To get an idea of the length a San Francisco daily will go in the interest of an advertiser consider the case of the Ocean Shore Railroad Company. Some months ago when Downey Harvey was in desperate straits and going about peddling bonds, he conciliated the dailies by throwing money at them with the prodigality of a drunken sailor. Through the advertising columns of the dailies he boomed his bonds, assuring people that as an investment they could not be beaten anywhere under the sun. Everybody on the inside knew that the bonds were depreciating at the rate of a dollar a minute. They also knew that the bonds could be purchased in the open market for much less than the price that Harvey demanded. At that time the truth about the road was told in these columns, but the dailies did more than suppress it; they encouraged the public to buy. They were hardly less enthusiastic about the bankrupt enterprise than Mr. Harvey himself, of whom, to be just, it should be said, he was at least sincere. His enthusiasm was the honest enthusiasm of Colonel Sellers. The truth is now out, but even now one of the dailies—the Call—is booming the road in its editorial columns. The other day in a discussion of the merits of the Harvey enterprise the Call rhapsodized over the valuable terminal facilities in this city. The fact is that Harvey has nothing more than a lease on certain ground, the limited extent of which makes it wholly inadequate for the purposes of the road.

McCarthy and the Examiner

Between Mayor McCarthy and the Examiner there is now in progress one of the bitterest feuds that has ever grown out of the troubled relations of a politician and a newspaper. It is a feud which seems to be only in its incipiency but which will probably proceed for a long time with most unpleasant results. That none but the surface indications of the warfare have become apparent to the general public is not surprising, but doubtless shrewd reckoners have estimated the warmth of feeling behind the open interchanges of the two combatants. For quite a while Mayor McCarthy was silent but observant while the Examiner attacked the policy and acts of his administration in news story, editorial and cartoon. That his wrath was brewing and preparing to overflow might have been guessed. The spilling of his anger in public took place last Sunday at the dedication of the Farragut School. The Examiner, on that occasion, was coupled by the Mayor with his old enemy, the Bulletin, and William Randolph Hearst was scorched with invective. This speech of denunciation was published at length in the Call and the Post of the following day.

A Damaging Campaign

Let it not be thought for a moment that Mayor McCarthy's attack upon the Examiner is confined to a verbal demonstration. If that were the case the authorities in the Examiner office at Spear and Folsom streets would have little worriment. Verbal denunciation may sting but it does little practical hurt to a newspaper. Knowing this fact Mayor McCarthy has selected the weakest joint in the Examiner harness and is battering away at it with deeds, not words. The weakest joint in a newspaper harness is circulation. Circulation is the pulse of newspaper business, the pulse which the advertiser feels before he makes a contract. So Mayor McCarthy has commenced a campaign against the Examiner's local circulation. For this campaign he has a formidable weapon in organized labor. I am told that ten days after Mayor McCarthy started this form of warfare friends of his had delivered at the office of the Examiner 4,800 cancellations of subscriptions, "stops" as they are called. One Examiner route has been wiped out of existence and others are crippled. To lose 4,800 subscribers in ten days is a phenomenon of rare and most distressing significance in a newspaper counting room. And mind you, the warfare has only begun.

The Call's Troubles

Mayor McCarthy has made an order barring from his office the reporters of all newspapers except the Call and the Post. These papers he regards as friendly to his administration and he has used them in giving publicity to the denunciations hurled at the Examiner and the Bulletin. It is a strange turn of the wheel which places Mayor McCarthy and the Call en rapport, for it was not so long ago that the attacks made upon McCarthy in the Call brought forth reprisals in the shape of a libel suit and bitter speeches on the stump. Now the lion and the lamb are gambolling together. Not that the Call is in a very frisky mood just now. It has troubles of its own. They have to do with the recently organized solicitors' union. The men who solicit subscriptions organized some time ago and demanded the munificient wage of $18.60 a week. The Call refused to accede to this demand and the solicitors' union put a boycott on the paper. I have been told that the Call has lost 15,000 subscribers as a result of the boycott but the figure is surely exaggerated. If it were divided by three it would still be a very serious loss. The Call is still recalcitrant and has put out a small army of solicitors to regain what it has dropped. It is giving away photogravures as premiums, too. Premiums are usually a sign of sluggish newspaper circulation. So are contests, like the Examiner's "what is she doing" contest.

The Bulletin Too

Mayor McCarthy and the Bulletin are enemies of such long standing that the memory of man scarcely runs to the recollection of their amity. The Bulletin has been attacking the Mayor much more bitterly than the Examiner, but McCarthy is concentrating his retaliatory efforts on the Hearst paper. Nevertheless the Bulletin is feeling the thump of its own boomerang. One day the Bulletin allowed a woman to state through its columns that there are 70.000 prostitutes in this city and that there is not a lodging or apartment house on North Beach which does not harbor some of these unfortunates. Whether the Bulletin's authority meant to say 70.000 or whether that was a typographical slip for 7.000, I do not know. But there were only 72,500 adult females in this city at the time of the last census, so the Bulletin, apparently, maligned nearly every woman in the city. The enemies of the Bulletin have lost no opportunity of calling attention to this. The other statement has aroused the greatest indignation in the Italian Quarter. The Italians take a justifiable pride in North Beach, their particular section of the city, and they have shown in no uncertain terms how much they resent the statement made by the Bulletin. Verily, the running of a daily in San Francisco hath little in common with reclining on a bed of poppy petals.

Spreckels Again Rebuffed

Mr. Rudolph Spreckels sustained his reputation as a consistent loser at the Bohemian Club last Tuesday. The annual election of the club occurred on that day, and it has been pronounced the most spirited election in the history of the club. To our young militant millionaire belongs all the credit for the exceptional vivacity that characterized the proceedings. To him must be attributed the fascinating echoes of the graft prosecution that resounded in the club, firing everybody with enthusiasm and a consuming partisan zeal. Mr. Spreckels' ardent passion for leadership was never more manifest than on this occasion. It overcame the scruples of a modest nature that mildly asserted itself by reason of the dubious methods that were employed in behalf of Mr. Spreckels less than two years ago when he was admitted to membership through a back door. Mr. Spreckels' scruples succumbed to the dictates of a will that never brooks restraint. Some time ago Mr. Spreckels resolved to re-elect John C. Dornin to the secretaryship of the club. It was understood that with Dornin on the board of directors he would be able to prevent certain men whom he dislikes from becoming members. So he conducted a campaign for Dornin. He rounded up all his sycophants and parasites and plunged them into Dornin's fight. From the First National Bank "literature" urging the election of Dornin was sent wherever it might do the most good. On election day Mr. Spreckels was on hand marshaling his forces. With his attorney Charley Wheeler, his electrical engineer, his bank manager, his handy editor, Mr. Older, his personally conducted judges—Lawlor and Dunne—he made a gallant fight; but in vain. Henry H. Haight was elected secretary of the club by a comfortable majority, and Rudie frowned himself back to the bank.

Talbot Clifton is Coming

From "White Hat" McCarthy I learn that Talbot Clifton, the Englishman who invented Burlingame, is once more on his way to pay this city a visit. I would not be a bit surprised if he should make one of that party of a hundred London sports with Lord Roseberry at their head who are crossing land and sea to be present at the Jeffries-Johnson fight. A great sportsman and a true one is Talbot Clifton and his visit here will create more stir than the coming of half a dozen Kitcheners. On his last brief visit Talbot Clifton saw only three of his old friends. He stayed in the city but a short time, announcing that he was here for the purpose of enjoying once more the society of his old pal, "White Hat." I think Joe Tobin and Walter Hobart were the only other celebrities who penetrated his exclusiveness on that occasion. It remains to be seen whether he will be more democratic this time.

How He Met "White Hat"

Gone never to return are the good old days when Talbot Clifton romped the nights away to the music of golden guineas. Gone are his coaches, his tally-ho, his tandems, his splendid mounts. Gone too the glorious haunts where he delighted to entertain and be entertained by the gilded sports of the dead town. But San Francisco has new attractions to replace the old and "White Hat" is still here to act as guide, philosopher and friend to the returning Britisher. That was a historic day at the Vendome in San Jose when Clifton and McCarthy met and became fast friends. McCarthy, I think, was down there to break the world's driving record by going four miles in ten-twelve. He was in the Vendome when the Britisher arrived. Going to the register he found inscribed there, "John Talbot Clifton and valet, London, England." So McCarthy wrote under it "D. McCarthy and valise, San Francisco." Somebody called Clifton's attention to the joke and the two men were made acquainted. They were friends from that minute.

Colonel Chinn Wouldn't Fight

A loyal friend indeed was Clifton to McCarthy, as those who were present at the Burlingame Club one memorable night will testify. Colonel Jack Chinn was there and he told Talbot Clifton to be on his guard or "White Hat" would get the better of him in a horse deal. The Englishman stiffened and arose from his seat while a painful silence fell upon the company. "Colonel Chinn," he said with his most deliberate drawl, "Mr. McCarthy is not here to answer that remark. But he is my friend and I am forced to tell you, sir, that you are a liar, in fact you are a d——d liar and if you desire satisfaction from me, kindly name your time, place and weapon, sir." The colonel discounted his fearsome Kentucky reputation on the spot. He "took water." It is characteristic of Clifton that he never mentioned the incident to McCarthy, but of course "White Hat" heard the story immediately from a dozen sources and it cemented the bond between the two friends.

Talbot Clifton's Gifts

During his prolonged stay here Clifton maintained a very expensive establishment. He had rooms at the Palace, a luxuriously furnished suite at Marchand's, a room at the Burlingame Club and a studio in the Crocker Building. Clifton was a dilettante and spent a good deal of time in painting. When he went away he presented everything he owned in California to McCarthy, from his horses and traps to his pictures. All the pictures and other treasured mementoes of Clifton were burned in "White Hat's" home at the time of the fire. When Clifton paid a brief visit to the city later he bought a horse from McCarthy for $5,000 and left the horse in McCarthy's keeping. "White Hat" has the animal still. I think that Clifton is married now but whether he will bring his wife with him when he visits us I do not know.

Gunst Tackles the Tobacco Trust

It is not unusual for a Californian to cut a swath in New York either in financial or social circles, but what Mose Gunst is doing in the big metropolis is by no means of a commonplace character. Mose has become of sufficient importance in the financial world to impel the Wall Street Journal to sit up and take notice. According to that paper Gunst is in New York making arrangements to fight the Tobacco trust in the heart of its own territory. For some years Gunst has been ranked among our leading and richest captains of industry, but nobody suspected that he had anything like sufficient money power to warrant him in disputing the big Tobacco trust's monopoly of New York City trade. It was thought that he was putting a dangerous strain on his resources in resisting the efforts of the trust to drive him out of business in San Francisco. But we have seen him fight the trust to a standstill in our midst; and now that he has carried the war into New York we must come to the conclusion that our distinguished fellow citizen is among the topnotchers in the world of finance. According to the Wall Street Journal Gunst has fifty-five tobacco stores on the Pacific Coast and several factories in Cuba and Porto Rico. To conduct his campaign in New York he has organized a $2,500,000 company, and he has already opened a large retail store in West Forty-second street. Evidently Gunst is as game in business as he was formerly when he was better known as a sporting man than as a merchant. In the old days when he owned but one store he devoted no less attention to gambling than to business. On the floor above his store in Kearny street he conducted a poker game the "drop" of which netted him several hundreds of dollars every night. His boon companions in those days were stars of the prize-ring, and

In recent years Gunst has been a very sick man, a circumstance making it all the more wonderful that he should muster up energy for the tobacco war. He is afflicted with locomotor ataxia, the ravages of which he has stayed to some extent by cultivating abstemious habits.

A Case of Plagiarism

If imitation be the sincerest form of flattery, the appropriation of another's ideas and words must be the superlative of admiration. Then should Mr. Ralph E. Renaud, dramatic critic of the Chronicle, regard himself as the object of the superlative admiration of Lynn Ethel Wilson, a member of the staff of the Oakland Tribune who signs her name to theatrical articles. Lynn Ethel Wilson has shown herself to be in wonderful accord with Mr. Renaud on the subject of Maud Allan's dancing. Not only does she think his thoughts about Miss Allan but she also writes his words. It is very interesting to compare what Mr. Renaud wrote in the Chronicle of April 6 about Miss Allan with what Lynn Ethel Wilson wrote on the same subject in the Oakland Tribune on April 7. For greater facility in making the comparison, let us resort to the deadly parallel:

What Mr. Renaud Wrote	What Miss Wilson Wrote
She is a figure stepping delicately from the swelling round of a Greek vase.	A dainty, elusive figure stepping delicately from the swelling round of some old Grecian vase.
Her art is neither moral nor immoral. It is the art of absolute beauty.	Her art is neither moral nor immoral. It is the art of absolute beauty.
Within my time no such personal triumph has occurred here.	Miss Allan's triumph is purely personal.
Her method is Greek in conception, atmosphere and spirit.	Her method is Greek in conception, atmosphere and spirit.

Friction in the Reform Camp

Though the leading job-chasers of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League are united in the service of the people and animated by the one and only virtuous purpose of snatching the State from the tentacles of the Octopus they are not crusading in halcyon harmony. There is a rift within the lute of their common cause. It requires no cultivated ear to catch the jangling discords that smite the air as they move along through the villages of the plain people, uttering in accents wild their dithyrambic appeals to patriotism and civic pride. This inharmoniousness, I am told, is the result chiefly of the selfishness of the Hon. A. J. Wallace, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor and of Judge Works, candidate for United States Senator. These gentlemen appear to be wholly oblivious of the paramount importance of the Hon. Hiram Johnson. They have yet to understand that Mr. Johnson is the incarnation of the Lincoln-Roosevelt idea, the embodiment of all and sundry principles of reform, the concentrated essence of the political purity for which the whole State is clamoring. When they opened the primary campaign they conceded to Mr. Johnson the blushing honors of a headliner. It was agreed that he should be the last speaker at all meetings. Thus did Wallace and Works indicate their recognition of Mr. Johnson's superior power of attraction; for the supposition is that to hold an audience you must keep the star in reserve. The arrangement agreed upon was therefore an acknowledgment of Mr. Johnson's title to stellar distinction. But it was not long before the gubernatorial candidate realized that the distinction was devoid of substance. This realization dawned upon his intellectuals as night after night Works and Wallace talked their audience into that tired feeling which makes a pillow a far greater desideratum than the melting music of the most gifted tongue. What does it avail a man to have the last say if there's nobody in a mood to give him ear?

He Rides Alone

Works and Wallace, it appears, take themselves seriously as orators. They are prosaic gents, pregnant with words, and when they start flowing they create the impression that they are giving an imitation of the Tennysonian brook. The tide of their eloquence they pour along without the slightest concern for the headliner. They have almost emptied more than one hall before Johnson was given the opportunity to unsheath his palpitant tongue. Naturally the distinguished reformer for revenue is disgruntled. He has been telling his troubles to the telegraph poles while speeding through the valleys and over the hilltops far away. But Johnson is strategic, and he has not suffered with the meekness of a martyr. Of late he has been out-maneuvering his rival chinsters. This he has done with the aid of an automobile. For a time the three candidates rode in this car; but now Mr. Johnson rides alone. Beating his rivals to one-night stands, he has been enjoying a monopoly of attention.

Treachery Charged

Nevertheless Mr. Johnson is not altogether satisfied with himself and his campaign. He has learned that down in Southern California, the stronghold of reform, Phil Stanton is getting the support of Mr. Wallace's friends and admirers. This he regards as a species of treachery, and he is very much worried about it. He feels that if he cannot get the united support of the reformers of the South there is not much likelihood of his winning at the primary. His friends have been calling attention to the fact that the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of Los Angeles is backing both Wallace and Stanton, and they want to know the reason why this combination has been made. Incidentally they are stimulating the spirit of discord by questioning the sincerity of the insurance company as a reformer, remarking that all insurance men are reformers only when the legislature is not in session threatening to enact the right kind of insurance legislation with an eye single to the perennial insurance sack. In further aggravation of this whole embarrassing situation is the circulation of the report that the Hon. Francis J. Heney has absented himself from the State at the instance of Mr. Johnson, who conceives that his old associate on the Spreckels' leg would do him more harm than good were he to take to the hustings at this time. Mr. Heney's friends are warmly resenting what they regard as a foul imputation.

Holding Himself in Abeyance

The only gubernatorial candidate who has yet to begin an active canvas is Mr. Alden Anderson. He appears to be in no hurry to take to the bema. He is maintaining a philosophic calm, waiting patiently for the psychological moment to shed the light of his personality on the proceedings. Wise politicians are saying that Mr. Anderson's inactivity is a masterstroke of genius. He is letting his rivals get on the nerves of the people; he is husbanding his resources for the wind-up, while they are wearing themselves out prematurely. Already it is becoming apparent that Mr. Curry has been unprofitably previous. He has been spending money with a lavish hand, and he will have to call a halt by the time Mr. Anderson gets busy. Meanwhile a good deal of noiseless work is being done in Mr. Anderson's behalf, and the indications are that he is to receive the earnest and aggressive support of the business interests of the State. Conservative men generally are conscious of the importance of keeping the gubernatorial office out of the hands of politicians whose chief qualification is either a talent for "mixing" or a disposition to set the whole State by the ears.

"So he has lost faith in deep breathing?"
"Yes; it wouldn't keep his hair from falling out."

Bradley's Pet Rule

How hard it is to please everybody was illustrated recently in the experience of the telephone company. A rule requiring the operators to respond to all bells with the question "Number please?" was put into effect by General Manager Bradley who is a stickler for courtesy. The rule made a hit. Scores of people congratulated Mr. Bradley on what they considered a happy inspiration, and he was much pleased that the rule should have proved so grateful to the patrons of the company. Not all of them, however, regarded the rule with favor. One day Mr. Bradley was rung up by a citizen who wanted to know why the operators were so polite. He was told that the company wished to promote amiable relations between patrons and employees. "Well, cut out the 'please,' said the man. "As everybody knows that the girls don't mean what they say, why should they say it? Let us have no more of this hypocrisy. It makes me hot every time I get that word 'please' over the wire."

His Pathetic Plight

A new planet swims into our ken. A new star flames on the political horizon. Walter Macarthur, editor of the official organ of the Sailors' Union is in a receptive mood for the nomination for Congress in the Fourth district. Let it not be understood, however, that this distinguished representatives of the Phelan-Spreckels cabal has any yearning for Washington life. Says his sponsor, the Boughten Bulletin: "He would prefer to stay right here and fight municipal evils, but like a good soldier in the people's cause, he is willing to undertake any task to which the people may assign him." In short Mr. Macarthur is in the hands of his friends, a predicament that evokes my profoundest pity. "In the hands of his friends" means that he is in the hands of Crothers and Older. To go from their hands to Washington would be like going from a bawdy house to church.

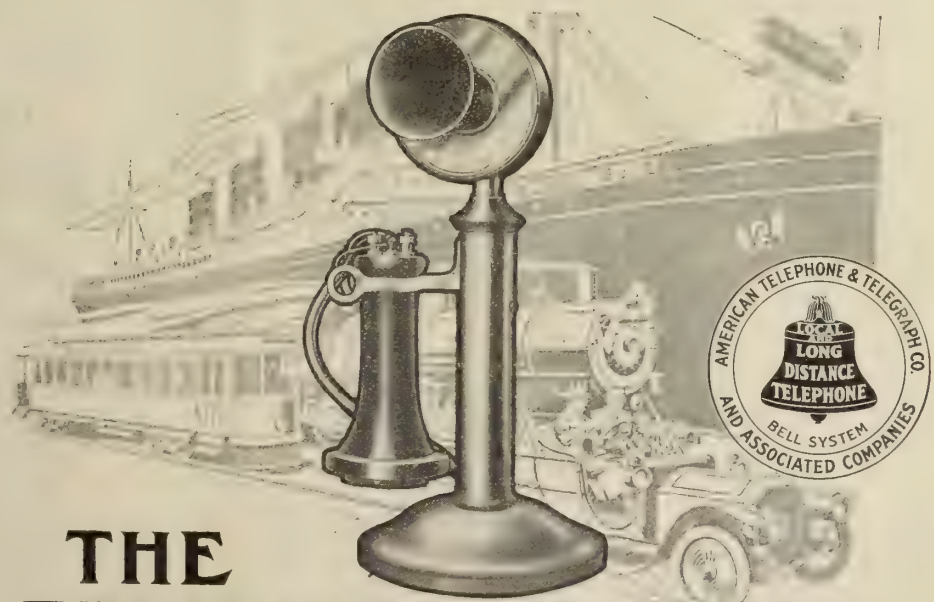
An Obsolete Californian Lingo

Eleanor Gates, whose marriage name is Tully, is writing Rube stories for a cheap eastern publication of nation wide circulation. I am not objecting to Eleanor's method of earning an honest dollar or two; but I do object to her Californian Rube. In her latest story she pictures a gawk named Sheridan Smith making a fool of himself in New York by expressing himself in language that may be accurate in the vernacular of South Dakota or North Oklahoma, although even that is doubtful, but is certainly wholly unlike anything on land or sea in California. It may be argued by this authoress that her "Son" as he calls himself, is an imported Missourian; but she neglects to so identify him in her story. Californians, even those who own 1400 acres of fruit land in the San Joaquin Valley "where the sun shines 344 days in the year," do not use such atrocious grammar as Mrs. Tully puts in the mouth of Sheridan Smith, and they would not stand appalled in the presence of the New York police department as she says he did. In another story this lady author libeled Texas in a similar manner by making one of the citizens of that civilized State gape with wonder upon the electric signs of New York, clearly intimating that as the Rube was from Texas he had never seen anything like it in his barbarous native environment. This sort of thing is going altogether too far as far as California is concerned, and I suspect that Texas doesn't like it any better than we do. Bret Harte has much to answer for in the matter of providing a language peculiar to the Californian of early days; but we of a later period had come to believe that the native son of the fourth generation had profited by his public school education and was sufficiently sophisticated to take even provincial New York as a matter of course and not to be wondered at. Mrs. Tully, however, knows how to write for her market, and she may not be blamed too harshly for selling her adulterated wares to consumers who prefer that brand to anything wearing the pure food label. Still, we are pleasurably aware of the vast improvement that her "Juanita of the Rancho" experienced under the editorial revision of Mr. Belasco.

Sam Davis on Sage Brush

Sam Davis of Carson City is in New York spreading the gospel of sage brush. Although he went east as chairman of Nevada's publicity and industrial commission Sam has shown extreme reluctance to indulge in boom talk on behalf of his beloved State, declaring that it is against his temperament. His reluctance has won for him more publicity than a less skilled press agent would obtain by the most feverish eagerness to break into print. Always when Sam Davis talks it is worth while listening and on the present occasion his talk has been largely on sage brush. There are possibilities in sage brush of which the world has never dreamed and Sam is not yet prepared to publish them all. But a few hints of its golden worth were wrung from him by an insistent interviewer and no doubt more will be forthcoming at the proper time. Until that time arrives we must be content with the information that first of all Thomas Edison and after him a number of university professors have experimented with sage brush and so successfully that the raising of sage brush bids fair to become a Nevada business as important as the exploitation of gold mines and the granting of divorces. "By a practically worked out and economical process," says Sam Davis, "sage brush is made to yield these products invaluable in industries, science and arts: charcoal, acetic acid, wood alcohol, creosote, creton and potassium. After paying for gathering the raw material and the cost of the processes by which sage brush is made to yield these valuable articles there remains a net profit of $15 a ton of sage brush. We have in Nevada three million acres of sage brush which will yield five tons to the acre. That is, the sage brush land of Nevada is now covered with $825,000,000 of gold. Or, if you will, the equivalent



THE EFFICIENT MINUTE

We have speeded up our ships and railways; we have made rapid transit more and more rapid; we have developed a mile a minute in the air and much faster in an automobile.

But the Bell Telephone is quickest of all. It is instantaneous. No weeks or days or minutes wasted in waiting for somebody to go and come; no waiting for an answer.

It is the most effective agency for making minutes more useful, more efficient.

In almost every field of work men are accomplishing more in less time with the Bell Telephone than they could without it. They can talk with more people, near and far; they can keep the run of more details; they can buy or sell more goods, and to better advantage; they can be active in more affairs.

The Bell Telephone has placed a new and higher value upon the minute—for everybody. It has done this by means of One Policy, One System, and Universal Service.

Bell Long Distance Telephone service not only gives an added value to a man's minutes—it accomplishes business results which would be absolutely impossible without it. Every Bell Telephone is the Center of the System.

of gold." That the interviewer was properly impressed may be accepted without question, for he made no reference to Colonel Sellers in his subsequent talk with Sam.

As to Reno Divorces

On the subject of the divorce colony at Reno Sam Davis did not wax enthusiastic. In fact he declared that there was no divorce colony at Reno. It is apparent from what he stated on this topic that the fair fame of Reno has been trifled with by the writers for the sensational press. Nothing could be more decorous than the manner in which the divorce problem is handled in Reno. When the interviewer broached the delicate subject this is the way the conversation flowed: "In the name of the prophet—figs!" responded Mr. Davis. "Reno has no divorce colony. Some men, some women, attracted equally by the beauty of Reno and the justness of our State divorce laws, have taken up their residences there. Those of them who are ladies and gentlemen are received into the best society of Reno—than which there is none better in the world—those of them who are not are shunned there as, of course, all such persons in New York are shunned by good society. I assume that the courts grant divorces to those justly entitled to them and refuse when such is not the case. In the meantime those who are there seeking legal residence have their minds broadened by a greater and nobler view of life and their bodies strengthened by the glorious climate of Nevada, wherein to walk requires no inducement—only opportunity."

Senor Wanrell's Loss

Nobody acquitted himself better at the Press Club's "four years after" entertainment last Sunday night than Senor Joaquin Wanrell, the club's favorite basso. He sang with that powerful intensity for which he is noted and brought down the crowded house. And yet Wanrell had every reason for declining to appear. That afternoon a fire broke out in the old Wallace home in Van Ness avenue where Tait's used to be and destroyed Wanrell's studio and living apartments. The singer was away at the time and went home to find that he hadn't a bit of personal property except the clothes on his back. That was why he sang in a brown sack suit and tan shoes. While Wanrell's loss counts up to a big figure it is not by dollars that he measures it. Money can never replace his splendid collection of Ricordi operatic scores, his autographed photos collected from famous artists during twenty years, the compositions of his Madrid teacher, Senor Ynzenga, and last but not least, his fine Scotch collie which was burned to death. Wanrell was offered $500 for the dog not long ago but it was a present and he prized the animal very, very highly. Wanrell had just finished refurnishing his studio at considerable cost when the flames swept it away, but he is far from discouraged. One of the first to place his own studio at Wanrell's disposal was Louis Eaton, the organist at Trinity Church, and this and other proofs of friendship did much to cheer the singer in his misfortune. However he refused all offers of assistance and secured nearby rooms in Eddy street where he is teaching his pupils until he can once again obtain permanent quarters.

The Death of Nadar

Nadar is dead. Who was Nadar? He was nearly ninety years old and all his years were passed in Paris. He bought a story from Balzac before the forties. He was a successful artist before the revolution of '48. In the fifties he originated the idea of a heavier-than-air flying machine. In '63 he carried his wife in a balloon from Paris to Hanover. He started a photographic studio which has been famous ever since. He organized a balloon service during the siege of Paris and was almost shot as a Communist. Seventy years ago he ran a newspaper and published in its feuilleton Poe's "Murders in the Rue Morgue." His friend Baudelaire read the story and became enamored of Poe's tales. The rest is literary history. Nadar was the intimate of Hugo, of the Goncourts, of Daudet. Unhappy Gerard de Nerval dined with him before going to his miserable death. Nadar was the hero, one of the heroes, of the Gallifet incident. When the Commune was over and General de Gallifet was marching his terrible regulars down the boulevard, a shot was fired from Nadar's house. The soldiers rushed for the entrance, but General de Gallifet dashed his horse in front of the door and made his men march on. Nadar used to say: "Gallifet saved my life, believing that I tried to shoot him." Nadar was the friend of all sorts of men, religious, irreligious. When he went up in his balloon Louis Veuillot, the leader of the militant Catholics, whispered in his ear: "Think of your soul—cast your anchor upward!"

ENTRANCE GATES TO WEST CLAY PARK.

Handsome Home Tract is Platted

The agents for West Clay Park announce that they are ready to place the lots on the market. West Clay Park was formerly known as the Bunker property, and is located between Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth avenues and runs from Lake street north to the Presidio wall. The owners of this land have spent a year and a half and a very large sum of money to make it a high class residential park. Preparatory to announcing the sale, the land has been graded and laid out in large lots, the average size being about 40 feet front by 115 feet in depth. There are two entrances to the park, one at Twenty-second avenue and one at Twenty-fourth, at both of which points have been erected impressive gates built of white stone from Utah. These gates are most pleasing in design, making a very effective approach. Inside of the park the streets have all been bituminized and stone walks have been laid. There are no unsightly poles, as the telephone and electric light wires are carried in conduits under ground. In addition to these, trees, shrubs, lawn and flowers have been laid out. The lots will be sold with restrictions forbidding the use of the land for any purpose other than for residences, which must not cost less than $5,000 each. Among the other restrictions are the prohibiting of front fences, etc. The subdivision has been carefully laid out, with a view of giving to each lot the benefit of the magnificent views which are obtainable from this point. The marine view is one of the striking features. The land commands a vista of the Presidio, the Golden Gate, as well as the Pacific Ocean and Bakers Beach. Although the property has never been offered for sale or advertised as yet, three lots have been sold to S. A. Born and he has already started the construction of three fine houses on the land. Two other lots have also been sold to private parties, with the understanding that they will at once build artistic residences. Another feature of the subdivision is an automobile drive running to the rear of nearly every lot, as it is quite likely that the purchasers of this class of property will want accommodations for automobiles. Lyon & Hoag, agents for the land, express their confidence in being able to effect ready sales. They argue that there are no other residential parks in the city and that the marine view and the building restrictions will appeal to a large class of buyers. The whole idea of laying out the property was to secure, first, the magnificent views by arranging the lots in such a way that the views cannot hereafter be obstructed and also to make it absolutely safe for a person to invest in a home or residence without danger of annoyance by undesirable neighbors.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE SOLD

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Alameda.

In the Matter of the Estate of HANNAH S. CRANE, Deceased.

MARY N. HUSSEY having presented to the Judge of this Court her verified petition praying for an order of this Court to sell the real estate belonging to said estate at public or private sale, and it appearing to the Judge of this Court from such petition that it is necessary and would be for the advantage, benefit and best interests of the estate and those interested therein to sell the said real estate for the purposes and reasons therein mentioned, and said petition having been filed in the Clerk's office of this County;

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Alameda, Department No. 4 thereof, on the 20th day of May, 1910, at ten o'clock a. m. of said day at the Courtroom of said Court, at the Courthouse in the City of Oakland, County of Alameda, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of said deceased to sell the said real estate at either public or private sale.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for a period of four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in which said City and County said real property desired to be sold is situated.

Dated this 13th day of April, 1910. WM. S. WELLS, Judge.

The Walking Fad

Since the automobile has attained such popularity that it is in danger of becoming too vulgar for our exclusives, many of the fastidious cult have reverted to nature, taking to the highways and giving over the evil-smelling buzz-wagon to those who have not as yet penetrated the deeper mysteries of the art of living. Walking has become the greatest fad that ever took Burlingame by storm. The Sears long-distance jaunt was but an outcome of the talk about this fad. While none of the women or girls ever took a continuous jaunt of that length, they think nothing at all of ten or fifteen miles.

MISS MABEL CRAMER

The beautiful San Rafael girl who danced in imitation of Miss Maud Allan at a benefit performance this week.

Mrs. H. McDonald Spencer and her sisters, the Josselyn girls, have organized a walking club among their Burlingame friends. It is a small but very exclusive coterie and just now the attainment of records for speed and distance stirs Burlingame out of its ennuied placidity as nothing in years has done. It was Mr. Spencer himself who started the fad last fall. The giant Apollo and idol of the country club set hikes to San Jose, a distance of approximately thirty miles from his home, between early breakfast and luncheon time and thinks nothing of the feat. His debonnair disregard of his feat has inspired his friends with envy and it was the petite Mrs. Spencer herself who became his first pupil. She is now pacing her girl friends from town. Miss Innes Keeney, Miss Genevieve Harvey, Miss Marjorie Josselyn and Miss Helen Chesebrough are among the girls who are devoted to the walking fad.

Here's the Secret

Aside from a desire to get back to nature another reason inspires the Burlingame women to such activity. It is absolutely imperative that you be slender, lissome, like a Burne-Jones damosel. You dare not pinch or pull in the waist, for your clothes must fit easily, like the husks clinging to the tender green corn. Embonpoint is not only passe but positively impossible in the fashionable set. Since the luncheons and teas must be attended, the only way to fight the approach of deadly adipose is to take to the highways, and if you chance down Burlingame way any morning, lolling along in your easy motor, you may come across a group of short-skirted nimble-footed maids, tripping gaily beside the dew-washed hedges. They belong to the Back-to-Nature cult whose high priestess is the blonde and dainty Mrs. Spencer.

Mrs. Spencer as a Mummer

Speaking of Mrs. Spencer reminds me of the big hit she made recently as "'Op 'O Me Thumb," when this graceful little playlet was given by the San Francisco Stage Society at the Hotel St. Francis. Mrs. Spencer who belongs to the grande monde, several generations of her folks having been social leaders, donned the humble attire of a laundry-girl, a role raised to the dignity of immortality by Trilby, and in this garb did a bit of character acting that stamped her as a person of high ability. She forgot the audience, becoming oblivious to the gilded surroundings as well as to the lorgnettes through which she was being critically scrutinized. Society roles, where a pretty woman is given opportunities to surround herself with enhancing accessories, are easy enough for the society amateur, but the depiction of poverty and neglect is not readily sympathized with, even when a society leader condescends to be the mummer.

MRS. JACK MATTHEIS

Formerly Miss Franc Merchante whose wedding in San Jose was a surprise to her many friends.

Mrs. Mark Gerstle Best

But while I am giving credit to Mrs. Spencer for her histrionic skill let me not forget to state that Mrs. Mark Gerstle was indubitably the best amateur of that particular evening. The difficulties of a cockney role are manifold, but greater still are the difficulties of adequately interpreting a Shavian part. Mrs. Gerstle overcame them with surprising ease. She played the part of the wife in Shaw's "How He Lied to Her Husband" and a professional actress could not have exhibited more poise, more facility, more self-possession. Mrs. Gerstle is a woman of superior intelligence and her intellect shines in her eyes and in her smile. Her part was a very difficult one for Shaw wrote it along the border of burlesque without once letting his pen slip across the line. The ordinary actress would be sure to make it ridiculous and contemptible and it required courage for an amateur to attempt it. Mrs. Gerstle was fully justified by her rendition of the role. Hers was distinctly the overshadowing triumph of the evening from a critical standpoint. I would like very much to see her in a longer Shaw role, Candida for instance. She has the sense of humor which is necessary for the understanding and acting of the Irishman's plays and the only obstacle is the finding of other amateurs who could support her.

Two Millions from Charles Legay

One of the papers published a cable dispatch from Paris recently, telling of the fortune left by Charles Legay, a commission agent, to Mrs. J. C. Wilkins of California. The fortune consisted of two million dollars and was left by Legay to Mrs. Wilkins because she was his niece and he tenderly loved her although he had never seen her. This story is substantially correct, but would have been much more interesting if the paper had told who Charles Legay and Mrs. Wilkins were. Old timers will remember Charles Legay, the stock broker who was one of the most distinguished beaux of the early days here. He occupied a position similar to that of Mr. Greenway in the society of today. After making a comfortable fortune here Legay went to Paris where he lived until his death last year. He had two nieces here, the Misses Boyd. Kate Boyd married Henry L. Van Wyck, a stock broker who amassed a fortune and subsequently took his family to Europe where Mrs. Van Wyck kept in touch with her wealthy uncle. Mrs. Van Wyck returned to this city last year and suddenly died in her rooms at the Granada Hotel. It is said that she was bitterly disappointed when she found that her uncle had left her out of his will. The Van Wyck girls were very pretty and interesting. Edna married Arthur V. Callaghan and now resides in Salt Lake. Gertrude was married very quietly a few weeks after her mother's death to a Mr. Potter of Massachusetts, a wealthy man whom she met in the East. The niece to whom Mr. Legay left his fortune is Mrs. Wilkins of San Rafael whose husband was an engineer for the Northwestern Pacific. While Mrs. Wilkins was a very pleasing and cultivated young woman she was not a member of the society set of San Rafael. When the news of her great good fortune came, however, she was given an opportunity to improve her social condition by association with some of the prominent families of San Rafael, but the suddenly conceived friendship of strangers made no impression upon her reserve. No doubt when she returns to California she will be offered another opportunity to enter the social corral. I doubt whether she will accept it.

The Expected Happened

The engagement just announced of Miss Marie Churchill, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Churchill, and John Martyn Haenke does not come as a surprise, as the many friends of this pretty young Southern girl have long noted the devotion of the young man which has been marked since their first meeting. I predicted their engagement some time ago. It was a case of love at first sight on both sides. Mr. and Mrs. Churchill have only been residents of California a few years; they belong to a prominent and well known family of Little Rock, Arkansas. Miss Churchill is a brunette with brilliant dark eyes and has been a great favorite in army and navy circles since her debut a couple of years ago. In fact when the fleet sailed away last summer it was thought by many that her engagement to a popular young ensign would be announced. But I always knew that these were on the wrong track. Mr. Haenke is also a recent arrival in this city. He came here from Melbourne shortly after the fire and is a rising young architect. He belongs to the University, Burlingame and El Cerito Clubs. Mr. and Mrs. Churchill have recently moved into an attractive new home in San Mateo where the wedding will take place on Wednesday, June 1, at noon. As yet no details have been arranged. The couple will reside in San Mateo.

A Recent Wedding

The many friends of Miss Franc Merchante of this city received quite a surprise when they were notified of her wedding on April 4 to Mr. Jack Mattheis. Although Miss Merchante's friends were aware that a romantic attachment had existed between this charming young lady and Mr. Mattheis for over a year, the suddenness of the marriage invested the affair with added interest. Accompanied by a party of her intimate friends Miss Merchante motored to San Jose in her big touring car and was met by her fiance with a party of his friends and the ceremony was performed. Miss Merchante is noted for her interest in various charities while her husband is prominent in automobile circles, being head salesman of the local Packard agency. Mr. and Mrs. Mattheis are making their home at 103 Congress street.

Are You Armigerous?

A sanguine gentleman in Chancery Lane, London, is responsible for the "American Armoury and Blue Book." He is John Matthews, genealogist. The work is patterned, remotely, of course, after Burke's Peerage with this fundamental difference. It costs fifteen dollars to get into the Armoury and without payment of the fee no one, however qualified, may hope to see his name there inscribed. Conversely fifteen dollars could not keep one's name out of Burke's record of England's armigerous families if it belonged therein. For twenty years Mr. Matthews has labored to extend the scope of his work which, he states, was founded in 1890. Pursuing this end he now invades local aristocracy with printed accounts of his efforts and sample pages of the Armoury. Already seven San Franciscans count themselves among the publicly proclaimed armigerous persons of America, (it has a horrid sound), while scores of others have received Mr. Matthews' ingenuous appeal for permission to make a "General Search" among genealogical records to determine whether or not their earliest known ancestors belonged to the Burke's Peerage set. Mr. Matthews will do his best, given "any particulars you have of your earliest known ancestor" to prove that he in his turn had ancestors worth recording. Specimen pages of the "Armoury" and other literature concerning it make delightful reading. From one of Mr. Matthews' circulars I learn that the following local people have bought into the record: Mrs. O. D. Baldwin, Mrs. Arthur D. Cross of Oakland, George E. Hall, William H. T. Huie, Robert D. Hume, Theodore B. Lyman of Alameda, Mrs. W. D. Mansfield, Henry B. Pierce, Horace D. Pillsbury, Lieutenant-Colonel Otis W. Pollock of Alameda and Chauncey R. Winslow.

Sig. Severi at the Tavern

The Techau Tavern has secured the services of Sig. Gino Severi as conductor of the orchestra. Sig. Severi was for a long time connected with the Lambardi Opera Company which in itself indicates to the music lovers of San Francisco the quality of operatic music in which Sig. Severi excells. He will play during luncheon, in the afternoon during shopping hours, at dinner time, and will give concerts after the theatres. In addition to being an eminent soloist Sig. Severi is a very capable leader and inspires his audience with his temperament and magnetism. The management have no doubt that the patrons of Techau Tavern will enjoy his efforts.

In the Social Spotlight

The St. Francis was thronged with fashionable luncheon parties Monday afternoon. Baron von Shroeder entertained seven of his friends; Mrs. Eugene de Sabla had as her guests several San Mateo matrons and belles who were in town for the day; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Foster brought together a number of young people to meet their niece, Miss Anna Scott; and Mrs. Peter Martin, Mrs. Fletcher Byer, Mrs. J. J. Moore and Mrs. Thomas Eastland were surrounded by groups of friends whom they entertained most charmingly.

Charles Templeton Crocker gave a very pleasant dinner in honor of Robert Goelet of New York at the St. Francis, having as his guests Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin, Miss Jennie Crocker and Duane Hopkins.

Ensign Spears of the West Virginia signalized the return of the Pacific squadron to Man-o'-War row by a delightful tea in the White and Gold Room of the St. Francis.

Sherwood Coffin and Edgar Zook entertained at an after-theater party at the St. Francis in honor of Miss Scott and her fiance.

Percy Selby revived memories of the famous Burlingame-Del Monte walk at a luncheon given at the St. Francis on Thursday to Dr. McEnery, S. Bogue Russel and George Parsons.

Numerous pretty supper parties followed the plays of the Stage Society at the St. Francis. Among them was that of Knox Maddox who was host to Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. C. Frederick Kohl, Mrs. Worthington Ames and Dr. Tracy Russell, and that of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mathieu whose guests were Mr. and Mrs. H. McDonald Spencer, Dr. and Mrs. J. Wilson Shiels, Mrs. Mark Gerstle, Mrs. E. E. Brownell, Willard Barton Jr., Palmer Fuller and Joseph Rosborough.

One of the most enjoyable affairs of the week was the dinner given Friday night at the St. Francis by Mrs. Eleanor Martin in honor of Miss Kathleen Weston who is about to leave for Kentucky with her parents, General and Mrs. Weston. Among those who were present and afterwards enjoyed the box party at the Columbia were Miss Weston, Miss Innes Keeney, Miss Anna Wheeler, Miss Guinette Henley, Downey Harvey, Charles G. Adams, Arthur Fennimore, Lieutenant Burns and Philip Paschell.

One of the prettiest dinners of the season was that given at the Fairmont on Thursday by Thomas Wilson to fourteen of his friends. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. William Sesnon, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Depue, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Alden Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Rideout, Mrs. Florence Porter Pfingst, Miss Carroll, Mr. Hall and Mr. Sims.

N. C. Parsons, a mining man of McCabe, Arizona, was among the recent arrivals at the Hotel Victoria.

Mrs. W. F. Main and Miss Julia Main are Chicago visitors who are guests at the Hotel Victoria.

Mrs. M. E. Lincoln of New York is registered at the Hotel Victoria.

Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Yates, accompanied by their three children are at the Hotel Victoria. They come from Leod, S. D.

A delightful dinner was given on last Saturday by Mrs. Milo M. Potter in the main dining room of the Potter. After dinner, dancing was enjoyed. The guests included Mrs. Eugene de Sabla, Mrs. Clement Tobin, Miss Vera de Sabla, Miss Anna Weller, Miss Helen Campbell, Miss Beatrice Wetmore, Miss Lilian Inderrieden, Miss Laura Pearkes, Miss Leontine Inderrieden, Miss Nina Jones, Mr. Webb Willits, Mr. Harlow Frink, Mr. Walter Webb, Mr. W. Seward Webb Jr., Mr. F. S. Sterling, Mr. Russell Lard, Dr. Biddle, Mr. L. Clayton, Mr. John Edwards, Mr. Reginald Fernald and Mr. Jere Calef.

W. W. Dodge, accompanied by his wife and youngest son, are spending a few days at the Potter. Mr. Dodge formerly lived in Burlington, Iowa, where he represented his district in the State senate.

Emmett S. Husted, assistant manager of the Hotel Del Monte, arrived at the Potter Hotel during the week.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado included J. B. Faget, Charles F. Wilson, Miss Hutchinson, Mrs. J. H. Wonderly of Grand, Michigan, Mrs. Henry Payot, H. W. Colson, Joe Harris and H. G. Martell.

Among the many parties enjoying the hospitality of The Peninsula recently were Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Tompkins, the Misses Tompkins, Miss Helen Simpson, Miss Fern Elder and Miss Fitch, all of San Jose.

A very distinguished party of guests at Del Monte includes Dr. W. Seward Webb, vice-president of the New York Central, Mrs. Webb, their two sons, Wm. S. Webb Jr. and H. Walter Webb, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Purdy, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence, all of New York. They arrived in two private cars and brought two or three motor car with them, planning to make the most of the glorious weather and the wonderful scenic drives.

Four of Coronado's most expert golfers were at Del Monte last week for some sport on the links. They were Mr. W. Schuttler, G. Thompson, P. Thompson and Mr. A. B. Daniels, who won highest honors in the recent golf tournament at Coronado.

Miss Julia McPherson entertained at one of the week's dinner parties, a group of friends sharing her hospitality at the Hotel Victoria.

Capt. Arthur Cranston, U. S. A., and Mrs. Cranston are in town for a ten days' visit, and are registered at the Hotel Victoria. Capt. Cranson is stationed at the Presidio of Monterey.

COUNTRY PLEASURES
CITY COMFORTS

The Ideal Life

The Crocker Tract, Piedmont, combines country pleasures with city comforts as does no other spot in the whole range of bay country. It has rapid electric transportation to Oakland and San Francisco combined with great spaces of open country, spacious gardens, groves of oaks, beautiful walks and drives, one of the most inspiring views of the world and a rare climate, free from fog.

If you want a home of real destinction you want it in CROCKER TRACT, Piedmont. Villa Sites ranging in size from a large lot to several acres---for homes to cost $15,000 to $50,000---are on sale by

WICKHAM HAVENS INCORPORATED, 1212 Broadway, Oakland, California

The Fairmont is the favorite place for luncheon parties and the tables by the windows overlooking the bay and the city in both the main dining room and the grey room are always in great demand. Among the many informal parties noted there during the past week were those of General and Mrs. Long, Miss Buckley, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, Mrs. William Cluff and Mrs. Harry Umbsen.

Miss Theresa McEnery who has been visiting friends in Burlingame has returned to town and is once more at her apartments at the Fairmont.

Among the recent arrivals at the Fairmont were General and Mrs. Henry W. Sackett of New York. General Sackett is a member of the staff of Governor Hughes of that State and is making a leisurely tour of the west.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Cardinal of Montgomery, Alabama, arrived at the Fairmont on Monday from the southern part of the State. Mr. Cardinal is identified with one of the large railroads of his State.

John O. Reed and M. E. Cooley, professors of Ann Arbor, have been guests of the Fairmont this week. They are accompanied by Wilfred B. Shaw, secretary of the Alumni Association of the university, and all were the guests of the local chapter of that body at their annual banquet in this city.

An interesting party of prominent Japanese merchants and business men arrived at the Fairmont from the steamer Chiyo Maru of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha line. They are making a tour of the world in search of new ideas for the development of their business.

William M. Graham, one of the most successful oil men in the State, member of exclusive clubs and a great golf enthusiast, has been a guest at the Palace during the week. Mrs. Graham whose introduction to H. R. H. King Edward by Maxine Elliott last season was the signal for her rapid rise in royal favor, has leased a house in London for the season and is entertaining very extensively there.

R. M. Miller, traffic manager of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Co. with headquarters in Portland, has been at the Palace for the past few days.

H. C. Page, a commission merchant of the same city, is also a guest at the Palace, as is Loyal B. Stearns, formerly judge of the Superior Court of Portland.

Among the recent arrivals from abroad at the Palace are Count A. de Saint Croix and Jacques de Montesquieu of Paris. These gentlemen have been making a tour of the world and arrived recently from the Orient. Another guest was the German Prince Carol Lippe Bermwald who concealed his identity under a commonplace non de plume until he found the girl of his choice whom he had followed across the world from the fatherland, and married her.

J. C. Ainsworth, president of the United States National Bank of Portland, Oregon, arrived at the Palace early in the week. With him were Mrs. Ainsworth, Mrs. G. H. Flanders, Miss C. W. Flanders, and M. H. Flanders. The party is en route to Honolulu for a short visit.

Mrs. Milo M. Potter and daughter, the very popular and beautiful Miss Nina Jones, have been up from Santa Barbara for a few days and are at the Palace. Mrs. Potter's many friends in this city have prevailed on her to come up and make a visit of some length and she is planning to do so in the near future.

Several dinners made the past week an interesting one at the Hotel Victoria. Among the hostesses were Mrs. J. P. Van Laer, Mrs. F. G. Atkinson, Mrs. Mary E. Heron and Mrs. J. O. B. Gunn.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Cornwall of Denver, Colo., with Mrs. M. J. Bosworth and Mr. C. C. Bosworth, are spending the month at the Vendome. They all came from the City of Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Jackson of Berkeley motored down to the Vendome for the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. C. Dohrman of San Francisco motored down to the Vendome for the week end.

Among the parties of charming eastern people who visited Del Monte recently were Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. Sandon Hoyt, Miss Josephine Sandon, Miss Sarah and Master Sandon Hoyt, all of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin motored down last week and spent a few days at Del Monte.

Mr. H. A. Powell, a prominent business man of San Francisco, was host at a pleasant dinner party at The Peninsula recently given to Mr. Hewlett Benjamin, the Misses Powell and Mr Stanley Powell.

Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, wife of the great financier, with her daughter and Miss Rhett and Miss Florence Blythe, all of New York, arrived in her private car last week and have been spending several happy days on the scienic drives, lunching at Pebble Beach Inn quite frequently.

Mr. C. A. Laumeister, a capitalist of San Francisco, accompanied by Miss Laumeister and a party of friends, motored to The Peninsula for dinner a few days ago.

Mr. and Mrs. L. V. Maxwell of San Francisco motored down to the Hotel Vendome for the week end; also Mr. and Mrs. Webster Jones of Oakland.

Handsome Henry Woodruff

The Star Whose Appearance at the Savoy in "The Prince of To-night" Has Fluttered the Hearts of All the Impressionable Young Ladies

By Edward F. O'Day

"Ambrosial locks" is a phrase which fills the mouth as with the melting sweetness of sugar. No doubt 'tis a good phrase but lacking the sweet tooth I do not like it. Just the same I am forced, in my office of fitting the word to the thought, to speak of the ambrosial locks of Handsome Henry Woodruff. There is no other phrase that properly describes his curls and if the association of ideas immediately suggests that Handsome Henry Woodruff must be a sort of Greek god, I am perfectly satisfied that the young ladies who filled the Savoy Theatre on the night that I had the privilege of seeing him would never think of demurring. Judging from the ecstatic expressions of countenance with which they hung upon the spectacle of his beauty I would venture to declare that for them Handsome Henry Woodruff is Apollo and Adonis and Antinous rolled into one. Where are those who say that this maligned modern world has lost the old Greek love of beauty? If it survives nowhere else, it is at least to be found in the adoration of a miss for a handsome mister beyond the footlights and it was quite apparent to me that in feminine eyes Henry Woodruff is one of the handsomest misters who has ever adorned the local boards. Not being a sympathetic judge of the sort of masculine pulchritude to which the young ladies yield blind devotion I am not going to say a word about the handsomeness of Handsome Henry Woodruff. Rather let me say that I wish he had a more musical voice and a more musical laugh. I would much rather hear Woodruff speak than laugh, but at the same time I found his speaking considerably less than an unalloyed pleasure. Some day too I would like to see him act, a detail of the performance which has been rendered unnecessary by the manner in which "The Prince of To-night" was put together. I'll wager Handsome Henry Woodruff could act pretty well if there were not more than half a houseful of adoring misses to distract his attention from his art by their frank admiration of his gifts of nature. But evidently the authors and the managers know that wherever Woodruff goes the house will be packed with the young ladies, so they have built him a musical show in which he needs only pose.

It's not a bad show at that. It's a modern fairytale, a very modern fairytale in which the princess makes love to the prince instead of vice versa. This revolutionary method is necessary because the prince has no heart—another extremely modern touch that cannot be too much admired. The manner in which young women tender their hearts to the heartless prince is extremely realistic. I understand that the thing is happening every day in Europe where our American heiresses are constantly taking pity on heartless princes. In the play the process is only made possible by a trip to fairyland, but this is a touch of idealism with which no fault need be found. When the heartless prince tells the lady who loves him a fairy tale, he is telling the truth, truth-telling being an essential of the hero in musical comedy (when he is talking to the leading woman only). When the prince in real life tells a fairy tale to an American heiress, of course he is lying. As may be imagined there are many other differences between the Prince of To-night and the princes of today, but they need not be dwelt on here. Henry Woodruff has enough pulchritude to outfit half a dozen Braganzas, Sagans and Castellanes and his pulchritude is the all-absorbing part of him to the principal part of the audience. So why go further.

The play has a very entertaining comedian, John C. Leach, a very pretty leading woman, Ruth Peebles and a mediocre entourage. The broilers are pretty much the same as other broilers, the chorus men ditto. When a bevy of really ravishing broilers comes to town it is an event; when a good looking assortment of chorus men comes it will be the millennium.

"The Thief" at the Van Ness Theatre

"The Thief," the French society play by Henry Bernstein that Charles Frohman will produce at the Van Ness Theatre for two weeks beginning Monday evening, with a special company headed by Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, is a work that has been the topic of much discussion and criticism during the past three or more years in this country and abroad. Though a society drama, the sex problem does not enter into the story at all, neither is it a case of marriage and infidelity. On the contrary, the plot relates the extremity to which a wife goes in order to hold her husband's love which she fears is fading. Knowing his love of dress and finely appareled women she steals some money wherewith to purchase handsome garments in which to charm him. This error leads her into committing another unwillingly, and she then seeks to retrace her steps, but only sinks deeper into the mire. Eventually she is rescued, and there is a general reconciliation. This is the play in brief, wonderfully condensed by the author into three acts, with genius and absorbing interest.

The Allan Matinees

The demand for seats for the Maud Allan performances at the Valencia Theatre has been so large that Managers Will Greenbaum and Martin Beck have succeeded in inducing Miss Allan to postpone her departure for Europe and appear at two special matinees. The first of these extra performances will be a genuine "matinee" for it will be given at eleven o'clock in the morning, Friday, April 29, at the Orpheum. The last appearance of Maud Allan will be at the Garrick on Sunday afternoon, May 1, when she will dance a "request program."

Last Nights of the Lambardi Company

The brilliant season of grand opera by the Lambardi company at the Columbia will be one of the marked successes of the year. The second and last week begins with this Sunday evening's presentation of "The Masked Ball." This opera has not been sung here in a number of seasons and the Lambardi people give it a superb interpretation. "La Boheme" is announced for Monday and Saturday evenings. It is one of the best drawing cards in the company's extensive repertoire and the sale of seats for the forthcoming presentations is very heavy. "Rigeletto" will be heard on Tuesday night for the last time during the engagement and at the matinee on Wednesday the double bill composed of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I'Pagliacci" will bring out a big house. "Carmen" is announced for Wednesday night with a strong cast and on Thursday night "The Masked Ball" will be staged. The one and only presentation during the engagement of "La Favorita" is announced for Friday night. "Iris" will be the Saturday matinee bill and the engagement will close on Sunday night with "Ernani."

"Merely Mary Ann" at the Alcazar

"Merely Mary Ann" which is to be the Alcazar's offering throughout the coming week, was one of the most emphatic successes scored in that theatre last season, its hit being largely due to the artistic acting of Evelyn Vaughan in the title part. Israel Zangwill wrote the play and Eleanor Robson starred in it several seasons. In the cast with Miss Vaughan will be John E. Ince as Launcelot, Will R. Walling as a business man among the bohemians, Burt Wesner as a music publisher, Louis Bennison as a country vicar, Walter Belasco as a Sunday journalist, Charles Trowbridge as a medical student, William Garwood as an automobiling nobleman, Lillian Elliott as the lodging-house keeper, Bessie Barriscale as her daughter, Marie Baker as the impecunious peeress, Ann Lockhardt as her friend, Grace Travers as a young noblewoman and Roy Neill as a footman. The comedy is in four acts, and realistic staging is promised.

Dr. Wullner to Return

Sunday afternoon, May 1, will mark the return of Dr. Ludwig Wullner and his accompanist, Coenraad V. Bos, to San Francisco. The distinguished lieder-singer whose first visit last winter won for him thousands of admirers is to be heard at the Valencia Theatre in three recitals: Sunday, May 1, Friday night, May 6 and again on the afternoon of Sunday, May 8. To these concerts will be added the Greek Theatre recital on Tuesday afternoon, May 3. The sale of seats for the San Francisco recitals will open at Kohler & Chase's Wednesday, April 27. The San Francisco programs will be different from those which Dr. Wullner sang here last winter. Schumann's little heard "Dichterliebe" cycle will be the feature of the opening concert. The sixteen love lyrics which form it afford full play for the many interpretative moods of which Dr. Wullner is master. Entirely different will be the program of Friday, May 6. The "Four Serious Songs" by Brahms will be the most notable feature. The texts are taken from Ecclesiastes and the First Corinthians. Dr. Wullner sings these biblical songs with a reverence and an understanding which demonstrate his right to the title, "exponent of Brahms," which has been applied to him in his own country. The program at the Greek Theatre will introduce Ernst von Wildenbruch's tremendous "Witch's Song" which has been the sensation of Dr. Wullner's recent New York recitals and sixteen other superb numbers. The details of the farewell San Francisco program will be announced later.

ANNA LAUGHLIN

The "Toyland Prima Donna" who comes next week to the Orpheum

Elita Otis at the Orpheum

Elita Proctor Otis who has long been recognized as one of the best actresses in her line on the legitimate stage, will play her first vaudeville engagement at the Orpheum next week. She will present a comedy sketch by Wm. Cary Duncan entitled "Mrs. Bunner's Bun." In the role of Mrs. Bunner, a fond wife who attempts to cure her husband of partiality for drink by emulating his example, she displays her great ability as a mimic. Anna Laughlin, the "Toyland Prima Donna" in chattersongs and dances will be a popular feature. The Five Juggling Normans are said to be in a class by themselves. Marshall Montgomery, the ventriloquist, will give a taste of his skill. Next week will positively be the last of Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne who will appear for the first time in this city in Mr. Cressy's latest comedy success "One Night Only." It is a sequel to his famous "Town Hall Tonight." There will be a final series of motion pictures showing "Roosevelt in Africa." Next week will be the last of Gladys Lockwood and Paul MacCarty, Lancton, Lucier & Co., and Gus Edwards' "Night Birds" with Nellie Brewster.

The Last of the "Pop" Concerts

The last "Pop" concert of the season by the Lyric Quartet will be given next Sunday afternoon, May 1, at Kohler and Chase hall. Miss Therese Ehrman, a pianiste of exceptional ability, will be the assisting artist and will play Mozart's beautiful "Quartet" in G minor for piano and strings with Misses Pasmore, Furth and Dorothy Pasmore; also the "Serenade" for two violins and piano by Christian Sinding, Miss Mary Pasmore and Miss Sallie Ehrman being the violinists. The string quartet of the afternoon will be Tschaikowsky's Op. 11 in D major.

The Burton Holmes Travelogues

This Saturday afternoon, April 23, the subject of the Burton Holmes Travelogue to be delivered by Wright Kramer at the Garrick will be "Java." Next week will be the last of the season. On Monday, Tuesday and Friday nights and Wednesday afternoon "More about Paris" will be the subject. On Thursday, Saturday and Sunday nights by special request last year's most popular subject, "Berlin with a trip to the Spreewald," will be repeated.

A College Play at Ye Liberty

The vehicle of the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, for the week commencing next Monday evening will be "Strongheart," the play in which Robert Edeson achieved his biggest success. The piece was written by William C. De Mille especially for Edeson, and is the original of all the college plays—the play that started the run of pieces of this nature—and as is usual in such cases it is by long odds the best of them all. Its story is a gripping one throughout, its scenes of college life are not overdrawn in the least and there is enough love interest and fun throughout the four acts to make its appeal general. Harrison Ford, the juvenile man of the stock company, is working in conjunction with stage manager Webster in the preparation of the "Strongheart" production, as he appeared in the play for three years with Robert Edeson and is thoroughly familiar with it. Sydney Ayres appears in the title role, Elizabeth Stewart as his "pale-face" lover, and all the other favorites will be seen to advantage. After one week of

HENRY SHUMER

The splendid character actor of the Bishop Players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland.

"Strongheart" the Oakland stock players will present for the first time in the West, "The Barrier," the successful play made from Rex Beach's story of the North.

The Damrosch Concerts

A whole week's feast of music will be enjoyed when the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch visits us next month. With the assistance of Mme. Sara Anderson, Mme. Nevada Van der Veer, Mr. Reed Miller and Mr. Marcus Kellerman, all eminent vocal soloists and Alexander Saslavsky, violinist, George Barrere, flutist and Paul Kefer, violincellist, a series of programs will be given such as this city has never before known. The concerts will be given at the Garrick Theater and the season will open with a great Wagner Festival on Sunday afternoon, May 3. On Monday night, May 9, a Tschaikowsky program will be given under the auspices of the Kate Murison School Association. Tuesday night will be a symphony night with Brahms' "Second" as the feature. Wednesday night will be under the auspices of the local center of the American Musical Society and the first half of the program will consist of works by American composers and the second half of important foreign novelties. On Friday night, May 13, the Loring Club will assist in a rendition of the music of the last Bohemian Club Jinks, "St. Patrick of Tara," with Wallace A. Sabin wielding the baton in conjunction with a symphony concert under Mr. Damrosch with Mozart's "Jupiter" as the attraction. Saturday afternoon, May 14, another grand symphony concert with Beethoven's "Eroica" and Richard Strauss' "Tone Poem —Don Juan" on the list and in the evening a second Wagner Festival program will be offered. The farewell concert will be given Sunday afternoon, May 15, when in addition to a program of orchestra works Tschaikowsky's most successful opera "Eugene Onegin" will be given with a chorus of 125 voices trained by Paul Steindorff.

The Flonzaley Quartet

The farewell concert of the Flonzaley Quartet will be given this Sunday afternoon, April 24, at the Garrick. The program will consist of Mozart's "Quartet" in B flat major, a "Sonata a Tre" by Sanmartini and a "Quartet" by Dohnanyi.

Good Music at Idora

Idora Park continues to attract the music lovers with interesting programs rendered by the popular Ferullo Band. But two more weeks remain before this organization will depart from "the park beautiful." Over 150,000 have already visited Idora during the first three weeks and thousands will return not once, but often, during the remainder of the Ferullo engagement. Among the interesting musical numbers on Sunday's program will be selections from Strauss' "Chocolate Soldier," the reigning musical success in New York. The music of the operetta, it is claimed, will rival the popularity of the "Merry Widow." The music has not been heard before outside of the big eastern cities. Mr. Ferullo was presented with the original manuscript through the courtesy of Mr. Lampe, the well known composer.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—The advance in the security market during the recent week has been steadily maintained as a result of substantial buying by important interests on every recession. Operations have not been of the spectacular kind, but there has been a slow appreciation in prices, as a result of the re-arguing of the Tobacco and Standard Oil cases, a factor eliminated as a menace from the world of commerce and finance for a year. In conjunction with this distinctly favorable feature has been the very heavy rains covering a wide belt of the agricultural country which insure a large winter wheat crop and fit the soil for spring planting. We find every promise of a higher range in security prices in the ensuing two or three months as a result of these many favorable conditions, and it seems quite probable that with the adjournment of Congress in June, the way will be clear for the consummation of some important railroad and financial operations that will be the chief factor for much speculation.

Wheat—Cause and effect are beginning to be illustrated in the old simple way in the wheat market. The surplus of last year's enormous crop, denied to would-be eager foreign buyers in the first half of the crop year, is now looking for any kind of purchasers in the last quarter when the shadow of an even larger new wheat crop is hanging over the market. A condition and not a theory confronts the owner of the property. Prices are still far too high for the foreign buyer. Probably the most far-reaching of any of the weak features of the present world situation in wheat is the action taken by the leading wheat importing countries of Europe. These have been actuated by the high prevailing prices of wheat to seed an unusually large acreage. Therefore the world's exporting countries this year will have a much smaller field in which to compete.

Corn—Prices of corn have ranged within very narrow limits during the past week. Persistent covering of short corn for May delivery by the leading shorts who are thus closing up a chapter in what has proven a long and trying campaign, has offset in part the continuous liquidation by longs who, as in other grains, have misjudged and overstayed their opportunities.

Cotton—To illustrate the importance which Europe attaches to prospects for a good crop of cotton at this time of the year and, especially under protection of the statistical positions, as it exists today, the following extract from a Liverpool paper of a recent date is quoted:

"The visible supply figures are not very encouraging to the bulls and with good planting weather the only feature which withholds free selling is the fear of this powerful clique. We are fast approaching a time when the influence of the coming crop makes itself felt. We still think therefore that sales of new crop months on a strong market will pay well."

Much stress has been laid on the smallness of stock of American cotton at Liverpool, but upon investigation it will be found to be comparatively large when measured by the small stock at this date and the previous ten million bale crop of 1903-04. Liverpool is holding 850,000 bales today, including the amount afloat, against 569,000 in 1904, and notwithstanding that the stock of American cotton at Liverpool in the latter year dwindled until it was only 49,000 bales on September 24, prices gradually tended lower from about the current levels of today for spot cotton, until a level of 6½ cents was touched before the expiration of December. It may be asked what brought such a decline in the face of so strong a statistical position and the query is silently answered by the results of a favorable planting and growing season—a large crop. News from New York, however, is to the effect that the bull clique is sure of its position in its efforts to squeeze the shorts in the May option. We therefore continue to advise keeping away from May unless for a short turn, but on the new crop we unreservedly advise the short side.

Copper—While pessimism surrounds the copper market and the metal has been sold at concessions in price, the situation is really improving, because of increasing consumption and decreasing production, a condition that is reducing the accumulated surplus. This is as yet taking place but slowly and the statistics for a single month may show an increase in the stock as was the case for February. At this writing the American statistics for March are not available. The European statistics have shown a decrease of about 5,000,000 pounds for that month. It is well known that domestic consumption is increasing steadily. The latest reliable reports show a substantial increase in consumption by Germany and France for 1909, and as soon as conditions become adjusted in Great Britain a revival of demand may be expected. In the meantime the reports from Germany and France show a steady increase there.

Mr. Chas. W. Fielding, chairman of the Rio Tinto Co. Lt'd, in a recent interview said: "I do not think we need consider the present stock of copper as a very serious menace to the market when we remember that the stocks today are only about in the same proportion to consumption as were the stocks ten years ago and twenty years ago, respectively, to the relative consumption then. The future of the copper market rests entirely in the hands of the American producers and we are confident that consumption would in no way be harmed if moderately higher prices were obtained by the regulation of their output." The copper stocks of the New York Stock Exchange and Boston curb have been erratic in their fluctations, yet we think no mistake can be made in buying stocks of the standard mines whose output or probability of the same, is the best gauge of their value.

Sir Ernest Shackleton, the noted English explorer known the world over as "Farthest South Shackleton," is enthusiastic over the manner in which he was entertained in Boston, as in other cities which he is visiting. "Everything is done for me, by jove!" he declared as he entered the big Thomas Flyer touring car which was engaged to meet him at the South Station and pilot him about the city. "The hospitality of your people is splendid, and another wonderful thing is your fine motor cars and your tall buildings. I can't get used to them really."

able soul. There were several houses in the place, but none near hers, and this was our reason for selecting our quarters with her.

Dennison and I thought that, in the event of our being pursued, it was as well to cover up our tracks as well as possible, and give rise to as little surmise as we could as to who we were. Accordingly he told the widow that I was an American priest, traveling through Southern California for the purpose of visiting the various Missions, and obtaining material for a book I was writing concerning their history. At the same time to guard against accidents, he informed her at once that I could speak no Spanish. Of course the Californian Ramon, was in the secret. This introduction was sufficient to insure Padre Don Edouardo—as Dennison called me—a good supper, the best bed in the house, and the attention and respect of everybody great and small about the premises. I was born and educated in the Roman Catholic church, and when the old lady and her daughter, who spoke a little English, were making my bed, I made the sign of the cross—not in derision,—far from it. I thanked God for my safe deliverance from my enemies so far, and repeated the prayers of the church. In the morning I found a very nice breakfast prepared for me, and having finished it we got ready to resume our journey. I asked the widow for my bill, but she replied Nada, nada, Padre, and seemed astonished that I should suppose any charge would be made to a priest in her house. I managed, however, after a good deal of persuasion, to get her to accept a five dollar-piece. All being in readiness, I bid the old lady good bye, and we mounted and commenced our second day's journey.

We were to travel that day as far as the city of Santa Cruz, distant forty miles from the Piscadero. On arriving within about half a mile of the town, Dennison proposed that I should wait outside while he and Ramon went in to reconnoitre. It was desirable if possible to pass Santa Cruz without going through it, the more especially as it was Sunday, and almost everybody from the country was in town. Beside, we had no means of knowing what reports might have reached there with regard to my flight, nor how the people stood affected as to the Vigilance Committee. Accordingly Ramon furnished me with a fresh horse, and while he and Dennison rode into town I fastened him to a fence in a lane near the city, and hid myself in a ditch hard by until they should return. The heat and fatigue of the day had thrown me into a burning fever. There was very little water in the ditch and a great many cattle about it. Nevertheless I had to drink every few minutes, notwithstanding I discovered from the singular taste of the water, that, in the language of Dr. Ollipod, "the cows had been here." Ramon and Dennison did not return for three hours. At last they came, having ascertained the only feasible route without having to inquire while I was with them. They informed me that it was necessary we should travel some fifteen miles further in order to get to a suitable stopping place. Accordingly, all sick and sore as I was, I again mounted and we galloped straight through the town without let or hindrance.

On the outskirts on the other side, we fell in with one of the brothers Castro—a family well known in that section of the State. He was a relative of Ramon, and appeared delighted to see him. Dennison told him the old story about my being an American priest, unable to speak Spanish, which was of course enough to insure me his good will and respect.

This Castro sympathized with the Vigilance Committee. His reason for it was that he thought it was a demonstration against the judges and lawyers. He had been subjected to many vexatious landsuits as he said, and beside disliked "los Yankes" as he called the Americans. One of them had married one of his daughters, and inveigled him into a speculation of building a grist and saw mill by which he had lost several thousand dollars. It stood upon the opposite side of the town; indeed the ditch above mentioned in which I was hid, was the mill race of the establishment. There was not enough water in it to swim a toy boat, much less to turn a wheel for a mill.

We soon parted company with this gentleman and rode on until we reached the Hacienda of his brother, distant some fifteen miles from the city of Santa Cruz, where we stopped for the night. This hacienda was, in itself, quite a little village. The mansion, although built of adobes, was unlike the generality of California houses. It has been built since the acquisition of the country by the Americans. It is a large, well finished, two story house. What particularly struck me about it was the ceiling of the upper rooms, which was composed of most beautiful colored wood. There were, in all, some fifty persons about the premises.

These were the daughters, sons-in-law, and other relatives of the master, together with his dependants, servants, etc. As soon as we entered the house our host embraced his relative Ramon, and welcomed us very kindly. Our horses were cared for, and after we had partaken of a fine repast the old gentleman invited us upstairs into a sort of drawing room or parlor.

Here we found a large number of persons of both sexes, who seemed to be gathered there as at a sort of evening party. Our host directed some of his people to play for us, which they did delightfully. It is seldom that one fails to observe about these large haciendas some four or five musicians, who play upon instruments for the amusement of the household. It being Sunday night, after nine o'clock the dancing commenced.

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

My friend Dennison, who is a very fine looking fellow, and perfectly posted in the customs of the country, had brought with him a suitable dress for the occasion, and being a good dancer figured very gaily in the revels. He spoke the language of the country very fluently, was quite a beau, and apparently a great favorite with the dark-eyed Senoritas. Ramon also took an active part in the festivities, while a son-in-law of my host, who spoke English, and myself, entertained each other in conversation. Thus the evening passed off very pleasantly. Long before the dancers had begun to flag, I retired for the night to a good bed and sound sleep.

While at breakfast the next morning, the old gentleman through Dennison, who interpreted, asked me a great many questions. We had dropped the character of the priest, and I found that the title of judge gained for me the respect of all. He asked me, among other things, how old I was. I told him forty-three. He replied that I must be at least sixty. "Why," said he, "I look younger than you, and I am fifty-five." I should suppose from his appearance that that was about his age. He was very large, probably weighing from two hundred to two hundred and twenty-five pounds. I must have looked much older than forty-three, for my beard was quite white, and I had not shaved for six weeks. As there was no necessity, however, for deceiving him with regard to my age, I told him the truth—that I was forty-three. He said that he had observed the Americans to be like women in this respect—that they never told their real age.

We remained at the hospitable mansion of the old gentleman nearly all that day, waiting for one of his sons to get ready, who was to accompany us as far as San Luis Obispo, a distance of two hundred miles. He was going in search of a younger brother who had wandered away from home in company with some Sonorians. He was the youngest child, and they were anxious to get him back. Mr. Castro's family are as fine specimens of the old Californians as one would wish to see. The old gentleman himself, hale, hearty and robust, with a frank, manly countenance, bespeaking the kindness and benevolence of his heart; his sons tall, active and graceful, and withal very intelligent. His wife, a good natured, amiable and lively old lady, still retaining the traces of her youthful beauty, while her daughters are possessed of all the bewitching little graces of mind and body which make the Spanish beauty so irresistible. Long shall I remember the happy hours of respite from sorrow and anxiety which I enjoyed under that hospitable roof, and I here again and again thank them from the bottom of my heart for their kindness to me.

At length, young Castro being ready, and having caught four fine horses for his journey, we bade adieu to our kind host and hostess, and in the cool of the afternoon again departed on our way. We rode that evening some twenty miles, leisurely cantering along the road, driving before us our spare horses, now numbering ten in all. A little after night we stopped at the house of ——— ———, a Mexican, whose name I have forgotten. Here we found tolerable quarters, and were amused by the story of our host's adventures during the war with Mexico. He had been a lieutenant in Santa Anna's army, and in one of the engagements with Gen. Scott's forces was taken prisoner. His strong resemblance to an Irishman who had deserted from the American ranks nearly proved fatal to him. Indeed, he was about to be ordered to be shot, but managed at the last moment to convince the Americans that he was really a Mexican. He lived here on a little ranch of his own, and stated that before the war he had been acting in the capacity of private secretary to one of the Governors of California. He was an important witness in many of the land cases then and now pending.

We retired for the night, intending to make an early start in the morning, and if possible spend our Fourth of July in Santa Barbara, distant three hundred miles. I slept very well, and enjoyed my rest, and after breakfast on the following morning, the first day of July, we left Santa Cruz county and entered Monterey. We rode until dark, and then for the first time prepared to camp out. We had ridden in all, that day, ninety miles.

We pitched our camp near an Indian's hut, and having purchased of him a rabbit and a piece of mutton, we cooked and ate our supper, and laid down to sleep. It was a beautiful summer night, and I slept as quietly under the stars as ever I did under the canopy of a luxurious bed. Nothing disturbed my rest except a curious dream I had toward morning—that the Indians had robbed me and thrown me down a well. At daylight we were astir, and, having eaten our breakfast, and saddled the horses, we started at a gallop for San Luis Obispo.

After we had ridden by the most unfrequented roads several miles, just as the trail we were following turned around the foot of a low hill, we suddenly came upon a band of Sonorians twenty-five or thirty in number. Apparently they were returning from the mines, and having found water, encamped, and were in the act of cooking part of a beef they had just killed, when we came upon them. This was in a very wild and lonely place. I had about my person a large sum of money, and my companions appeared somewhat alarmed. Nevertheless, the best policy was to show no fear; so we rode boldly up and asked them where we could get some water. They pointed to a clump of flags or rushes a short distance from their camp. They were all well armed, and he who was apparently their leader, was a very fine looking and well dressed man. Their horses, which were also very fine, were grazing about them unsaddled. We went to the water, and while there Dennison cautioned me not to speak, and above all not to dismount, saying that they were probably banditti, and at any rate had a great aversion to Americans, who sometimes drove their people from the mines.

We found the water very bad. It was as white as milk, being strongly impregnated with sulphur—nevertheless being very thirsty, we dipped some of it up in a tin cup and drank it. As we rode off my companions bid the Sonorians good day, and Ramon, to prevent appearance of alarm on our part, carelessly asked them for a piece of their meat which they gave him, and as soon as we had got a few yards from their camp, we put spurs to our horses and galloped away, very glad to get out of such dubious company.

We rode but a few miles before we stopped to feed, water and change our horses at the Mission of San Miguel. While here, the young horse that Castro was riding was stampeded by some Indians, and three hours were lost in endeavoring to recapture him, but without success. We secured the saddle which he had thrown off in his flight, and went on without him. Without anything of note occurring, we shortly arrived at a large plain or desert, in which was a hot spring. Here we dismounted and took a most refreshing bath. We likewise met here some of Castro's friends, and he, after conversing with them a little while, determined to go back and again attempt to recover his lost horse, and so parted with us. After two or three hours of brisk riding we came to the Rancho Santa Margarita, where we again stopped to rest and change. This rancho was once a mission, but is sadly gone to decay. The old mission building is inhabited by a California woman, who keeps therein a kind of restaurant and liquor store. The place, however, in point of stock and extent of land, is said to be one of the most valuable in the State.

After resting sufficiently we again started and soon completed the remaining twelve miles of our journey, which brought us to the town of San Luis Obispo, making a day's ride in all of eighty miles. I remained outside of the town, while Dennison and Ramon went in to reconnoitre, and find a place for the horses, taking mine with them but leaving the saddle with me to avert suspicion. About dark they returned and reporting that all was right, we went together into the town and ordered supper at a sort of hostelry near the old mission building. While we were seated at the table a party of Americans entered the room and eyed me very closely. I joined immediately in the conversation of my companions, and from certain indications feared that one of the new comers knew me. After supper Ramon and I followed him out, to see if he would make a demonstration, or if any attempt was on foot to arrest me. He entered a place where a number of Spaniards were playing at billiards, and sat down. I seated myself at once beside him, determined to ascertain whether he really knew me. I now became convinced though he looked at me very hard, that if he had ever known me at all he did not now recognize me, and felt greatly relieved. We applied to a blacksmith to get our horses shod, but on being informed that it would require half of the next day to get it done, we were compelled to postpone it until we should reach Santa Barbara. I did not see much worthy of note in the town except the old church. There are no fine buildings there, and after wandering about an hour or two, I became sleepy when instead of going to the tavern, I entered the corral where the horses were feeding, and making a bed of the sweat blankets and my overcoat with plenty of hay, I laid down and slept soundly. This, the second night of my "camping out," was, like the first, marked by a singular dream. I dreamed that I was in Sacramento and that a party of Vigilantes headed by Richard N. Berry, were pursuing me, and succeeded in capturing me, but that I subsequently escaped. What put Berry's name into my head I cannot imagine, for he never was, that I know of, a member of the Committee.

At daylight we started from San Luis Obispo, determined, if possible, to reach Santa Barbara that night. After riding between thirty-five and forty miles without drawing rein, we lost our way, and went at least two leagues off of the road. It was a very sultry day, and the fatigue and heat of the ride had again brought on my fever. Ramon, the guide, said the sun would have cooked an egg in our hands if we could have held it. We could absolutely see the heat in little waves conforming to the surface of the sandy plain. For miles around us it was one scorching, unbroken series of sand hillocks, reminding me of what I had read of African deserts. Not a spear of grass, nothing but the shining waves of sand as the wind had shaped them.

For hours I had not tasted water, and the heat and my burning fever made them appear days. My tongue became thick, my throat parched, and I felt a sensation like choking. Finally, to my great joy, after two hours search, we again found the road, and about two o'clock p. m. we arrived at a place called Los Alamos, distant about fifty miles from the town of San Luis Obispo. Here we changed horses, and endeavored to get something to eat, but without success. We got some water, however, which greatly refreshed us, and then rode on over a bad road to the Mission of Santa Inez. Before we arrived there I quite gave out with fatigue, fever and thirst. I was two or three miles behind my companions, they having ridden on to encourage me to push my animal. I had neither strength to whip or spur him. As I was lagging along the road, more dead than alive, and suffering dreadfully from fever and thirst, I saw some cattle that were ahead of me, leave the road, and at once knew they must be going for water. I followed them and found it, but on attempting to dismount my suffering was so intense that I fairly fainted by the side of the stream. How long I was in that condition I cannot say, but on reviving I found my horse standing beside me. He was very gentle at all times ,but then too tired to stray away. After bathing my wrists and face I took a drink which greatly refreshed me, and again mounting my horse I went back to the road and traveled on. After going some distance the road led me to a crossing place, higher up on the same stream from which I had drunk. Here I found Ramon waiting for me, who informed me that Dennison, fearing something had happened, had ridden back on the road in search of me. After some time he returned, and was furiously angry. I told him what had happened, and he swore like a trooper. I was too much exhausted to answer back. He had gone back six miles in search of me, of course passing me when I was off the road at the water. He told me that he had avoided telling me before a fact which he knew, viz.: that the blacksmith to whom we had applied to get our horses shod at San Luis Obispo, had once worked in San Francisco for a man named Blaidsdel, and had recognized me, and he had been fearful all day that he would get up a party and follow us. He told me that he was responsible to my friends in San Francisco for my safety, and so long as that was the case, I must look to him for water or anything else that I wanted. All this was very true and reasonable, but I also not being in the best of humors after a while found strength to quarrel back at him, and we had a regular swearing match, in which I was decidedly wrong, for the poor fellow was responsible for my safety and was doing all that he could to secure it.

After our spat was over, he pointed to a mountain ahead of us and told me it was Santa Inez mountain, and we must cross it that night if the horses could carry us. The quarrel had waked me up and I had recovered strength. I told him I could cross it if the horse could, and could do anything else that he or any other man could do—poor weak boaster that I was—and thus, refreshed with an hour's rest and water and wrath, we started to cross the mountain of Santa Inez, and what a mountain! To me, tired as I was and not accustomed to anything of the sort, it seemed impossible in the jaded condition of our horses to cross that night.

Before commencing the ascent Dennison told me to recall to my mind the worst hill I had ever traveled up, and then add a hundred per cent to it and I would have some idea of the one before us. I laughed and told him to "jog on." Each of us had to lead a spare horse, but in my exhausted condition I had to relinquish mine before we got half way over. Dennison then led two. It was quite dark before we reached the summit, up to which point I got on pretty well; but in descending the other side I was less fortunate. I was twice unhorsed, probably from not letting my animal take his own way.

At length, after stumbling and sliding down the tortuous trail in the darkness, risking every moment the necks of both riders and beasts, we reached the plain below and rode toward the Refugio Ranch where we arrived about nine o'clock in the evening; having traveled that day more than one hundred miles. Here to our great disappointment, owing to the lateness of the hour, we could get nothing to eat or drink. I had not tasted a mouthful since morning, and, weak, sick and disheartened, I threw myself down in the corral, spurs and all, and slept till daylight.

In the morning, it being the Fourth of July, Dennison brought me a bottle of bad brandy, and after drinking some of it I rubbed myself with the balance. We then got a good breakfast which, as may be supposed, we relished exceedingly. After breakfast we hired fresh horses with which to ride into Santa Barbara, distant but a few miles, and left our own at the Ranch to rest. After we had started Dennison told me that his intention was to remain in Santa Barbara three days so as to thoroughly recruit the horses and give ourselves an opportunity to rest and bathe in the hot springs. On reflection I thought if that was the case, I had better remain at the Refugio. My eye was weeping blood and matter, and paining me very much, and I was otherwise very sick and sore. Besides, the Rancho was a more retired place than the town, and there was less chance of my being identified by the sheriff of the county, or any sympathizers with the Vigilance Committee. Dennison agreed with me, and it was arranged that he should send back on the following Monday for me and the horses. Accordingly we returned to the house to make the arrangements for my stay. He told them that I was sick, and desired to rest there for a few days. This was true, for I was almost worn out. They consented to the arrangement and Dennison and Ramon rode on to the town.

I could not then speak or understand a word of Spanish and considering my condition in other respects, the day bid fair to be a dull Fourth of July to me. Situated as I was, however, I cared little for pleasure of any kind. I was playing the "game of life" and had to keep myself guarded at all points. Pleasures or comforts were secondary considerations with me. Mustering all my philosophy I essayed to revive my drooping spirits by looking about me. At the Rancho Refugio there are three main buildings; all, of course, built of adobes, together with several small outhouses of the same construction. There are probably about the place from forty to fifty persons, all related to a well known and generally respectable family in that county, by the name of Ortego. I became acquainted with many of them afterward, during my long stay in Santa Barbara, which was destined to be much longer than I then anticipated. Little did I dream that morning that I was standing in a county whose boundary I would not again cross until I had roamed for seven months among its mountains, a hunted and despairing man, with scarcely life, and less of hope. Had such a vision crossed my mind I should not, as I did, have endeavored to shake off my sadness, and enter into some sort of companionship with the people around me.

The Refugio is celebrated in the history of California as having many years ago been plundered by freebooters. And indeed on looking around on the countenances of some of the residents and frequenters, I could not help thinking that, like our armies in Mexico, the freebooters had left their mark behind them; for many of them looked the freebooter still.

At one of the houses they sold villainous brandy for a dollar a bottle, and an old fellow whom they called Don Miguel Cota, and who appeared to be a man of some consequence among them, had a decided relish for it. Seeing that I was possessed of the means of gratifying his penchant, he assiduously cultivated my acquaintance, and we struck up at once such a friendship as could exist when neither of us spoke a word of the other's language. However, we got on tolerably well, and for want of better employment, I got the old Don as drunk as any patriot on that glorious day could have desired to see him. Without exactly understanding what there was particularly in the day to license unusual excess, he seemed to take it for granted that there must be something very glorious about it, and entered into the patriotism of the occasion with great spirit. Unhappily, however, in getting old Don Miguel drunk, I intoxicated with rage his better half, Senora Cota. She delivered herself of an oration to me, which, judging from the expression of her countenance—by no means beautiful even in repose—and her violent gesticulation, I took to be anything but complimentary. As it was couched, however, in the Spanish tongue, all, save the gesture which accompanied it, was thrown away. That, however, was sufficient, and like the clown in the circus, I understood her very well, though I did not know what she said. She made me understand this much—that if I had anything to give away I had much better present it to her, than spend it to purchase brandy with which to fuddle her lord and master. Finally, however, I managed to conciliate her by giving one of the children a piece of money, and, after a great deal of pretence of not understanding me, I prevailed on her to make me a cup of tea.

I was stopping with another branch of the family who were apparently well off, and lived in the center adobe. Notwithstanding I paid well for all I got, when night came I found my bed made for me outside of the house. They appeared to have certain rules from which they would not vary. All who belonged to the family, and had rights and privileges about the premises could sleep within doors, but those who were not of the family, and had no rights in common with them, had to sleep out, notwithstanding there was abundance of room within.

The second day of my stay at the Ranch, several personages, apparently not belonging to the household, made their appearance. Among them were two, who, as they will hereafter figure in this narrative, I may as well introduce to the reader now. One of them was, perhaps, thirty-five years of age, of medium size, well formed, of rather dark complexion, and was named Pedro Ortaga, and resided at a place called Arroyo Honde. The other was younger, and smaller in stature than his companion, with rather a lighter skin; he was said to be well connected in Santa Barbara, and resided at a ranch known as Las Crusas. Both of them spoke English very well. Pedro, as well as old Miguel, was very fond of his "poco cognac," and we very soon struck up an acquaintance. He, as well as his companion, asked me a great many questions concerning myself, all of which I answered as I thought proper. I could not help thinking that, in consideration of our short acquaintance, they treated me more like "downeasters" than the descendants of Cortes. I did not then, however, suspect their object. I told them that I was a drover, and was then on my way to Los Angeles, to buy horses. They said they would like to sell me a horse, and I replied that on my return I would probably purchase of them. Not long after this, the companion of Pedro told me that Don Miguel had said that I had told him, I had five thousand dollars about me. I then began to suspect the character of my gentleman. I knew that he had told me a lie, and took it for granted that he must have some object in it. I asked him how it was possible that Miguel had said I told him so, when he spoke not a word of English nor I of Spanish. This appeared to confuse him, and he was for some time silent. I told him, however, in a very frank way, in order to throw him off the scent, that my money was to come down by the steamer to Santa Barbara; that it would have been too unwieldly to have brought it along the road, and beside, I did not intend to make any purchases until I had reached Los Angeles; but that, on my return, I would probably purchase of him. They appeared very anxious to know how much money I had with me, and Pedro suggested the idea of my loaning him a small sum, only five dollars, and taking an order for it on a gentleman residing near Santa Barbara, whom I knew very well by reputation. The five dollars was a matter of no consequence, but as I suspected it was only a ruse to get a sight at my purse, I politely declined. I bought them, however, as much brandy as they could drink, which was not a little, for they were decidedly good drinkers, and nothing more was said about the money that day. At dark I retired again to my bed outside the house.

I forgot to mention that I had received a message from Dennison, that he wanted me to meet him in the town of Santa Barbara, on Sunday, the sixth of July, instead of Monday, as had been arranged when we parted. I accordingly had my horses corraled the next morning while at breakfast, and having hired a young Spaniard to drive the extra ones for me, was soon ready to start. I made signs to the Senora to know how much I owed her, to which she replied with a shrug of her shoulders "quien sabe," and was apparently much pleased when I gave her six dollars. I then mounted, and accompanied by my guide, started for the city of Santa Barbara. I had now ridden nearly five hundred miles from San Francisco, and certainly thought I had a right to congratulate myself on my escape from all peril. As I rode along that lovely morning, excepting bodily fatigue, I had no feelings but those of pleasure, and my heart was full of thankfulness to a merciful Providence for my deliverance from my enemies. Visions of future happiness and comfort in the bosom of my family, far away from the harpies from whose persecution I was fleeing, flitted through my mind, and I could already hear in fancy the welcome of my wife and the prattle of my children. Joy, resentment, the hope of vengeance, gratitude to my friends, in short, almost every feeling by turns took possession of me, except apprehension; of that I was free. But, alas! how true is it that "man proposes and God disposes." How little did I imagine as I reveled in the sweet freshness of that summer morning, that the heart then so lightly bounding with joy and hope, would, ere that summer evening, be crushed and almost pulseless with despair!

Auto Notes

The recent remarkable performance of a Columbus Electric Automobile in running 108 miles on one charge of the battery was not a "stunt" performed by a specially equipped car under special conditions, according to W. D. Vance, manager of the Bay Cities Electric Company, agents for the Columbus. "The car was a regularly equipped stock machine and carried one passenger beside myself," said Mr. Vance, "and I will make the same trip, San Jose and return, finishing the balance of the distance in Oakland, any day without previous notice or special preparation of any sort. With Edison batteries, which by the way are a part of the equipment of the Columbus when wanted, there is no doubt but that it will run 175 miles on one charge over the same road. This form of battery, however, has some disadvantages and I believe that the range of mileage already demonstrated with a lead battery gives us an electric which will satisfy the most exacting user."

The Pioneer Automobile Company has received orders for a carload of Hudsons and a carload of Chalmers to be shipped to their branch office at Fresno; also a carload each of Hudsons and Chalmers for the Sacramento agency. These cars are all to be shipped this week. In addition to this the Pioneer Automobile Company have four cars of Hudsons and three cars of Chalmers to be shipped during the week, which will be the largest shipments they have had this season.

The White Steam Car is the one most frequently seen in the Kern County oil fields. As every one knows the road conditions throughout the oil district could not well be worse and the White's popularity in that section is very significant of its ability to negotiate the roughest going. Two White Steamer sales have just been made to Bakersfield purchasers for this traveling in the oil fields. One of the cars went to E. D. Burge and the other to H. G. Parrish. Both machines are seven passenger cars. The two owners left town with their new autos, driving them through to Bakersfield in spite of the bad roads that resulted from the late rains.

Although his term of office has expired, Benjamin Katz, the Boy Mayor of San Francisco, finds numerous public obligations still resting upon him. Among other things he is sending out letters of appreciation, for himself and cabinet, to those who showed them coutesies during their official career. Among other letters there was one mailed to the Pioneer Automobile Company. It reads:

Pioneer Auto Co., San Francisco, Cal.

Gentlemen: We, the Boy Mayor and Cabinet, wish to express to you our sincere thanks for your generosity in permitting us to have the use of your Chalmers car. If we have ever had enjoyable riding it was in your car during our "reign."

Also, we wish to cimpliment you upon the expert chauffeurs whom you employ.

Again thanking you for your kindness, we are,

Yours very sincerely,

—Benjamin Katz.

S. G. Chapman who unloaded a shipment of Hupmobiles recently is sending them out on delivery as rapidly as he can get them equipped. W. A. Johnson of Martinez, Charles Lamb of Cedarville and C. W. Wagner of San Francisco have each received one of these little machines while a whole carload have been shipped to C. W. Hobson of Fresno. Chapman has also made a recent delivery of an Oakland "40" to Steiger Bros. of Petaluma. All of Chapman's agencies are flourishing. J. H. Martin is placing every Oakland with which Chapman can furnish him in the Coalinga oil fields, and the other agents throughout the State are doing equally well with both Oaklands and Hupps.

LOZIER

THE LOZIER SELLS AT A HIGHER PRICE THAN ANY OTHER MOTOR CAR BUILT

The average price received for every Lozier car sold during the past two years was $5036—the highest average price obtained for any make of car built. In other words, the product of the Lozier factory has commanded a higher price per car than that of any other manufacturer.

The first Lozier model, built in 1904, sold at $5000 and the best Lozier car has since that time never been sold for less.

The Lozier Motor Car is surely worth the price obtained for it or it would not continue to command its price year after year. Other cars have been sold at Lozier prices, or higher, but only for a limited time—a fictitious list price must give way to the law that inevitably forces values to seek their proper level. In spite of the fact that the Lozier car commands a higher average price than any other car built, the business of the Lozier Motor Company during the past two years has increased 167 per cent, a greater percentage of increase than shown by any of the seven leading manufacturers producing cars which sell at $3500 and over.

The value of the Lozier car has been fixed, and has been proven by this splendid increase in business at these prices. Continuous advertising has not done it, for every one of the seven leading manufacturers referred to has spent vastly more money in advertising in the past two years than has been expended by the Lozier Company. What is the conclusion? That the Lozier car continuing in demand at a higher average price than any other motor car, must logically be the best car. We hesitated to use this much abused term, but we sincerely believe that the LOZIER is the one car which proves to warrant the claim being made.

for the spring requirements. Adding to these the three carloads just received at the Los Angeles branch and two carloads at the Seattle branch, with several more carloads en route at this time, will give an idea of the enormous extent of the automobile business on the coast.

G. L. Weathers who recently took the Pioneer Automobile Company's agency in Visalia is in town and reports great interest in the Chalmers from his section of the State. "Improving roads," said Mr. Weathers, "indicate an active touring season down our way and consequently there is increasing activity in the auto business. The Chalmers is easily the most popular car in the vicinity of Visalia. Many buyers are waiting a month or six weeks and even longer for this make of machine rather than take earlier delivery on some other. The only trouble I anticipate with the Chalmers is inability to fill orders."

Weinstock Nichols Co. are having exceptional success in introducing Morgan & Wright Nobby Tread Tires throughout the country districts of the States where muddy or rough road conditions are to be contended with. Their dealers in the larger towns are likewise enjoying an enormous trade. The Diamond Hotel of Chico has recently equipped its large auto bus with these anti-skids.

Few, even of his most intimate friends, surmised that when Frank H. Davis left town last week in a White Gasoline Car he was going on a honeymoon tour. Such, however, was the case and Davis is in line for congratulations. Up at the White Company they are smiling and saying "just wait until he gets back," the significance of which is open to conjecture. Davis, who is a grandson of the late Manuel Torres, the noted Castilian pioneer, has been associated with the White Company for some time and is one of their most valued men on the coast. He knows the auto and the auto trade from every angle and because of his general efficiency fills the position of retail sales manager on the White force. Mrs. Davis is a sister of Leslie E. Burks, the prominent attorney who is secretary of the auto club of California and also secretary of the San Francisco real estate board. Another brother is Chester W. Burks who is secretary of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. Even on his honeymoon Davis cannot quite resign the car selling instinct and consequently has sold the White Gasoline machine in which he is making the trip to James A. Keyes of Suisun.

Homer S. King, president of the San Francisco Clearance House, has just taken delivery of a big 45 horsepower Alco which he equipped with 36x5 Morgan & Wright Nobby Tread Tires. The Nobbies add greatly to the car's handsome appearance.

C. R. Zacharias, Modesto agent for the Pioneer Automobile Company, is in town, having with him orders for several cars. Zacharias reports that the roads between here and Modesto are shaping up fine and an active touring season is consequently expected. He also reports that the last two weeks have seen unusual interest in the auto business. Among recent sales made by Zacharias are a Chalmers "40" roadster to W. H. Langdon, a Chalmers "30" touring car to Mrs. M. E. Tucker and a Hudson touring car to Dr. J. P. Fuller.

"The record speaks for itself and Diamond Tires are good enough for me," writes Mr. Sidney Kingsbaker of Los Angeles to The Diamond Rubber Co. In his letter he states that a Diamond tire has covered 18,473 miles to date on his Stoddard-Dayton car and from all appearances is good for several thousand miles yet.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 29,006.

ROSE P. BLOW, Plaintiff, vs.
CHARLES H. BLOW, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Charles H. Blow, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of plaintiff continuously for more than one (1) year last past; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of April, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 20,654.

GEO. W. YOST, Plaintiff, vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of GEO. W. YOST, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the easterly line of Bright Street, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet northerly from the northerly line of Garfield Street (formerly known as Sherman Street); thence running northerly along said line of Bright Street fifty (50) feet; thence at a right angle easterly, parallel with Garfield Street (formerly known as Sherman Street), one hundred (100) feet; thence at a right angle southerly, and parallel with Bright Street, fifty (50) feet, and thence at a right angle westerly, and parallel with Garfield Street (formerly known as Sherman Street) one hundred (100) feet to the point of beginning, said lot or parcel of land being known and designated as Lots numbers ten and eleven (10 and 11) in Block fifty-seven (57) upon a certain map entitled "Map of property of City Land Association," filed in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

HARDA ZOIE, Plaintiff, vs.
NICHOLAS ZOIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Nicholas Zoie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion and abandonment of the plaintiff without any sufficient cause or reason and on the further ground of defendant's wilful failure and neglect to provide plaintiff with the common necessaries of life while having the ability so to do; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By W. R. CASTAGUETTO, Deputy Clerk.

Famous Men and Their Sweethearts

An announcement of particular interest to biographers and students of literature was recently made. It was well known that the celebrated French poet, Alfred de Musset, had a secret love affair. Who the idol of his affections was, to whom he addressed his famous love letters, which, it is announced, will shortly be translated into English, no one knew. The secret is now revealed that it was Aimee d'Alton, wife of his brother, Paul de Musset.

As may well be imagined, the love letters of such a poet tell of his passion in the most beautiful words, a remark which also applies to the love letters of Thomas Carlyle, which were published last year. The Chelsea sage, in his later years, could scarcely be described as a sentimental man, but when he was first attracted by the charms of Jane Welsh, whom he ultimately married, he proved himself a most passionate lover, although differences in temperament ultimately made the marriage a very unhappy one. Judging by the following extract from a love letter written by Carlyle in 1823, however, it will be seen that he anticipated no such unhappiness.

"The only thing I know," he said, "is that you are the most delightful, enthusiastic, contemptuous, affectionate, sarcastic, capricious, warm-hearted, lofty-minded, half-devil, half-angel of a woman that ever ruled over the heart of a man; that I will love you, must love you, whatever may betide, till the last moment of my existence; and that if we both act rightly our lot may be the happiest of a thousand mortal lots."

And it was shortly afterwards that Miss Welsh said in one of her letters, "God bless you, my darling; I am yours ever and wholly."

The story has often been told how Bismarck first met Johanna von Puttkamer; how he was at once smitten with her charms, and being invited to pay a visit to her alone, and finding the whole Puttkamer family lined up to greet him, flung himself off his horse and impetuously embraced Johanna before the whole family. It was an ideal marriage, and Bismarck to the end of his life used to say, referring to his wife, "She made me what I am."

Bismarck's English Love

According to a new Bismarck biography, however, it appears that one of the Iron Chancellor's youthful loves was a Miss Russell, to whom he paid ardent court when he was twenty years old, and to whom he was at one time engaged. He first met Miss Russell at Wiesbaden, in the company of her uncle and aunt, the Duke and Duchess of C——, and Bismarck made no secret of his tender fondness for "the British blonde of unusual beauty." A betrothal appears actually to have taken place, but the engagement to the "irresistible English miss" was broken off, "when, where, or why," writes the biographer, "nobody seems ever to have heard."

The manner in which Bismarck demonstrated his love for Johanna von Puttkamer reminds one that Garibaldi fell in love at first sight while in Brazil. On entering a certain house the first person on whom his gaze fell was a beautiful girl. "It was Anita, the mother of my children," says Garibaldi in his autobiography. "We both remained in an ecstatic silence, gazing at each other like two persons who do not meet for the first time, and who seek in each other's lineaments something which shall reveal the secret of their hearts. 'You must be mine.' I spoke but little Portuguese and I said these audacious words in Italian. However, they seemed to have some magnetic power, and I tied a knot which death could only break."

Pretty Proposals

There was something sweetly pretty and pathetic in Oliver Wendell Holmes' proposal to the lady of his choice, as they walked across the Boston Common. "Shall we take the long way together?" Nor was Daniel Webster's proposal less simple and beautiful. As he sat one day holding a skein of yarn for Grace Fletcher to unwind, what could be more natural or more graceful than his significant words: "Miss Grace, you and I have tied and untied a good many knots. Are you willing that we shall tie one which can never be untied?"

When Schumann, the famous composer, fell head over heels in love with Clara Wieck, his master's daughter, his path of courtship was by no means one of roses, for Herr Wieck had no wish to see his only daughter the wife of a penniless musician, and he forbade the lovers to hold any communication with each other. But love laughs at parental frowns, and, as Schumann could not even write to his ladylove, he poured out his soul to her in a series of "Letters to Clara," printed in a musical journal of which he was the editor. When the time was ripe for settling his destiny he made music the vehicle of his passion, and actually proposed to Clara on the piano under her father's nose, without a single word being uttered, and received her joyful assent through the same medium.

Spohr won his wife with dramatic suddenness. After playing a duet at a Court concert with Dorette Scheidler, a beautiful and gifted harpist, and while the tumult of applause was still ringing in their ears, he said to his companion, "Shall we play together thus through life?" For answer "the lady burst into tears and sank into his arms."

No—er—an understudy.

$3.50 Recipe Cures Weak Kidneys

FREE

Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining, Swelling, etc. Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K 601 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

Not Dead But Sleeping

Mark Twain has passed from the ranks of mortality to the immortal society of all creative geniuses. Of no other American writer may one so confidently predict an increasing renown and use in the years that are to come. His literary career was a process of evolution which refined his humor and deepened his philosophy as life unfolded for him its teeming storchouse of experiences. All the world learned to laugh with him while he was learning to weep and if there is a gift of tears in his legacy to mankind, it is because he was too great to let the taste of the bitterness of sorrow linger on his palate. Suffering much and writing much his gifts of laughter and of tears were communicated freshly to a catholic public, an inspiration for right living and clean thinking. What is a great moralists but a master of wholesome laughter and cleansing tears? and what greater impulses can a writer give to humanity than these? His work had its greatest reward in its results; yet is it pleasing to know that it brought him, too, fame and fine friendships and riches. These also are worthy rewards; do we not indict the word when it withoholds them from the great? Like all the greatest he knew the mind of the child and out of that rare knowledge fashioned books for children that men and women of all ages can never tire of. There are two of these which thrill young blood merely, but the old are gripped by their dramatic intensity, their poignant sorrow, their searching satire. He wrote one of the greatest short stories in the world in the later years of his creative work, making it one of the greatest, not merely by the flawlessness of the plot and the perfect artistry of its telling but more particularly by the sure insight into human nature. Yes, he knew the potentiality of corruption that abides in the written word, so he pointed the moral in a tale. But all his work points just that moral; there was no page he would dying wish to blot. Some day he will be compared with France's greatest modern humorist and the comparison will be interesting but disconcerting. Both men wrote of the Maid of Orleans, let us say; but the book of one enhanced his fame by exposing a new facet to the brilliant light of public approval—the book of the other brings a sense of humiliation to those who would fain believe that great truthfulness is a necessary forerunner of great genius. Both men have waged war on shams, but what avails it to fight against the sham if one is not enlisted under the banner of the true? That was where our dead fighter always marched. As the years passed he cared less for the ready laugh and more for the hesitating smile that bespoke a thoughtful sympathy. He always amused but latterly he insisted that we think and the problems to which he turned our minds were solemn problems, the problems of eternity. Never was there a suspicision of cant in his moralizings, never a hint of pharisaism in his virtue. We knew the heroism of the decades through which he toiled toward freedom from a load of others' debts, but not from his lips. Of his weakness he spoke frankly and humorously; he never drew a lesson from his own righteousness. From that first story of Angel's to the autobiography what tremendous output! but written with what singleness of purpose, how admirably co-ordinated! Looking at that row of books it is impossible to think of the author dead. How better could a writer live than in such works? Though his name be now inscribed in the bills of mortality, yet will Mark Twain live forever.

Bryan's Self-Revelation

Many comments, some soberly earnest, others satirical, and not a few of the purely comic variety, have been made on William Jennings Bryan's letter to the Democrats of the District of Columbia on the occasion of their last Jefferson day dinner. But singularly enough the most impressive thing in the letter evoked no comment whatever. We allude to the extraordinary argument by which Mr. Bryan sheds a flood of light on his intellectual processes. In this letter the vociferous tribune harks back to his old quantitative theory of money, advanced in the first 16 to 1 campaign, and calls attention to the fact that President Taft in his Lincoln day speech attributed present high prices mainly to the increase in the production of gold. Says Mr. Bryan: "This unexpected indorsement of our party's proposition in 1896 when we demanded more money as the only remedy for falling prices is very gratifying." And he adds: "We may now consider the quantitative theory of money established beyond dispute and proceed to the consideration of other questions." Thus does the Peerless One, the perennial idol of the masses, the irrepressible doctrinaire statesman at once vindicate his superb mentality and pay homage to the Chief Magistrate of his country. Mr. Taft according to Mr. Bryan is infallible. Because Mr. Taft has indirectly proclaimed the soundness of a theory, Mr. Bryan holds that the theory can be no longer questioned. This is the dictum of a man who has been taken seriously for more than a decade by millions of enlightened American citizens constituting so large a proportion of the whole of the sovereign people as to be able to make his election to the Presidency imminent in three campaigns. It has been argued with reference to Mr. Bryan that he must be a great man since he has commanded the confidence of a vast body of his fellow citizens through a long period of his career. It never occurs to those by whom this proposition is advanced that possibly Mr. Bryan's popularity argues not that he is a great man but that there is a scarcity of intelligence in a very large element of the people.

"The Promise of American Life"

A pretty severe indictment of the American people is to be found in a book recently put on the market by the Macmillans. It is the work of Herbert Croly, and it is entitled "The Promise of American Life." Mr. Croly finds that our institutions are a failure because the one object of every male in the nation is the making of money. He holds that a national civilization that produces only one type, a money-maker, is not to be considered of a high order. Mr. Croly is an original thinker, and he has remedies for our social and political evils, but he does not make it clear how they are to be applied. It would certainly be a good thing to encourage individuality of mind and character as Mr. Croly suggests, but how this is to be done in a nation obsessed with the ideal that all men are equal, and committed to the principle that the masses have not only the right to act but the wisdom for action, it is somewhat difficult to conceive. This idea and this principle form a combination in restraint of individuality of mind and character. It is conducive to nothing so much as the rise of mediocrity and the triumph of the platitude.

Through British Eyes

The chief benefit to be derived from Mr. Croly's study of American life comes to us in the form of foreign discussion. It is always well to be afforded the opportunity to see ourselves as others see us. Mr. Croly's book has created this opportunity. It has evoked some interesting and instructive reflections from the Saturday Review of London. That journal, acquiescing in Mr. Croly's view regarding the ascendancy of the money-maker in this country, observes that everyone who has met many Americans is aware that the one subject which interests them is "business." Instead of perceiving this to be a defect, a limitation, according to the reviewer, we are proud of it as proof of our practicality and industry. We talk much of "uplifting" by education, draw large cheques to show our faith in education, and pay no attention whatever to the opinion of the educated man. "It is literally true," says the London weekly, "that in no country in the world has the opinion of an educated man less weight in real affairs than in the United States. We are also told that proof of our ignorance is to be found in the contempt that we express with respect to England's idle class. It is this idle class, says our British contemporary, which has given England its pure and gratuitous system of self-government. And it asks: "What would the Americans not give to exchange the London County Council for Tammany Hall; or our justices of the peace for the saloon keepers' judge?" Though the Saturday Review is not an unprejudiced critic of Americans, in this discussion of Mr. Croly's book there is more sincerity than spleen. It has a pretty accurate conception of our failings and the remedies which it suggests are better than Mr. Croly's. For example: "The first thing the Americans have to do is to purify the administration of justice, and this can be done by making all judges, down to the police magistrate, independent of popular election." Again: "There is another thing which ought to be done if it is wished to attract sound and able citizens into American politics—the law of libel ought to be enforced against newspapers and the law of slander against political speakers." Unfortunately though it is clear enough to most of us that there is need of the reforms suggested there is no likelihood of their being adopted. We are now a press-ridden country, and the press is clamoring for the further perversion of the administration of justice. The masses are told every day that the courts are too independent and that they should be brought in closer touch with the mob.

The Roosevelt Despotism

According to Colonel Henry Watterson the people seem to be inclined to welcome Theodore Roosevelt on his return as "a benevolent despot." The Colonel is probably right. A very large percentage of the people would be willing to put Mr. Roosevelt in power with the privilege of going as far as he likes. Mr. Roosevelt has a firm hold on the imagination of the people. Through processes directed by the Cleons of journalism and politics Mr. Roosevelt has come to be regarded as an ideal ruler much to be preferred to the Constitution. Mr. Roosevelt himself has not neglected opportunities to foster this idea. Often has he flouted the Constitution. Many are the imperfections that he has found in it. Never has he hesitated to censure the handiwork of the founders of this republic. Deftly has he propagated the sentiment that what this country needs is a strong man as its ruler, one who will not be constrained by tradition or old-fashioned principle, who will take the situation in hand regardless of consequences, imbued with the one beneficent purpose of building "this cracking, groaning, bad assembled world into a noble civic harmony" by the magic touch of his high statecraft. Great is the encouragement he has given to those who are impatient of slow remedy and would set all things topsy-turvy and create chaos that order might be evolved therefrom. It is because of Mr. Roosevelt's subtle persuasions that men who know the danger of rashly disturbing the conserving forces of fundamental laws are disposed to question his patriotism and suspect him of sinister designs. In their opinion an unerring index to his character is the circumstance of his having made himself acceptable as a "benevolent despot" to his vast army of admirers. There would be no need of warning the people against a benevolent despotism with its inevitable consequences had not Mr. Roosevelt by cunning arts and shrewd devices undermined public confidence in the institutions of his country. Mr. Roosevelt has brought about a situation similar to that which existed in Rome when Julius Caesar seized the opportunity for establishing his benevolent despotism. And despite the boasted enlightenment of the people of this country the author of the current state of the public mind is revered as the greatest patriot of his generation. The people love him for his lawlessness. They worship him for the precedents he has established, giving no thought to the possibility of those precedents serving in another generation to justify the acts of somebody with no desire to earn a reputation for benevolence.

Candidates for Governor

So far in the development of the masque of politics that now holds the stage in this State the Hon. Hiram Johnson and the Hon. Charles F. Curry have enjoyed a monopoly of public attention. As candidates for the highest place on the Republican ticket they have had the field to themselves. The Democrats have not yet succeeded in organizing a distraction. The only competitor who has shown signs of activity is the Hon. Phil Stanton, but as he acknowledges that he is only the candidate of a county he has not been able to make any stir beyond the confines of it. A fourth candidate, Mr. Alden Anderson, though he is recognized as the choice of a powerful element, has not yet given publicity to his claims on the confidence of the people. In the circumstances it is natural that Mr. Johnson and Mr. Curry should seem to be engrossing public attention. They are making all the noise and doing all the gladhanding. Each has a hustling campaign establishment, an active and vociferous press bureau and a large retinue of boomers animated by the hope of finding the pie-counter accessible in the event of a glorious triumph at the polls. All these are factors that give verisimilitude to the loud pretensions, the bluff and assurance of an industrious candidate. But the campaign is young yet. It has not taken on the complexion of maturity. So far the people have been entertained only with appeals either to their passions or to their sentimentality. On the one hand they have been confronted by Mr. Johnson, a lawyer of facile plausibility, who has been diverting them with much sound and fury signifying nothing. What they have been hearing from his lips about the urgent desirability of extinguishing the political power of the Southern Pacific is the same folderol which they have been listening to for forty years. If the good people of the interior, where all the virtue of the State is concentrated, are ever inclined to cynicism it must be on occasions when they are called upon by a job-chaser to listen to the kind of rot and rigmarole which the Lincoln-Roosevelt League's expounder of thingumbob is now dinning into their ears. Disposed as we are to pay tribute to their intelligence it is our opinion that Mr. Johnson's candidacy is less agreeable to them than Mr. Curry's. For there is one thing to be said of our distinguished Secretary of State: he is frankly a politician with that side of his heart which yearns for public office uppermost on his sleeve; and whatever of affectation there may be in his conduct it cannot be said of him as of the Johnson brand of reformer that he postulates a consuming love of virtue in himself by simulating horror at the vices of others. Mr. Curry is distinctly a good-fellow candidate. He is overflowing with amiability, he has a large assortment of the qualities that constitute a certain order of merit in the eyes of the man in the street, and that win popularity. These qualities have enabled him to hold office sixteen successive years. Had not vaulting ambition plunged him into the race for Governor he might have held office sixteen years longer. But that he will prove a strong candidate for Governor may well be doubted. The very qualities that commend him to the fickle favor of the multitude are such as will handicap him in his race for the Executive office. The people's ideal Governor is not a "good mixer." There is a popular impression that the Governor of a State should be a man of certain graces of mind and heart that constitute true dignity and that are incompatible with the genial traits characteristic of the easy-going, frolic-loving, professional politician who believes that the best policy for maintaining the cordial relations that should always exist between the public and their servants is that of extending an invitation to the general to call and put their feet on the table. Now with Mr. Johnson running for Governor on the strength of what he proclaims to be his proclivities as a reformer, and Mr. Curry running for Governor on his reputation for camaraderie, in our judgment the outlook for Mr. Anderson is decidedly encouraging. We are told that Mr. Anderson is the machine candidate. If this be true it is decidedly to the credit of the machine. Mr. Anderson's public record justifies the belief that if elected Governor of the State he would be as little hampered by his obligations to the machine as Governor Gillett has been. Assuredly, at any rate, it can be more safely predicated of him than of the pliable and thrifty Mr. Johnson that as Governor he would be amenable to the dictates of decency. Mr. Anderson, in addition to self-respect, has qualities that fit him for the office to which he aspires. His business ability has been vindicated by his success in handling the most important of our industries. As a banker he enjoys the confidence of the financial interests of the State. His efficiency as a public official has been demonstrated in active service. He knows the needs of the State, and personally he is deeply interested in the development of the State. Few men have more reason to be desirous of the prudent management of the government of the State. Certainly if common sense is to play any part in the coming political contest so far as Johnson, Curry and Anderson are concerned, sober-minded people will have no hesitation in making their choice.

One tragic phase man bravely must endure—
As a success he's oft a failure—sure;
But, even then, 'tis comic, more or less,
That, as a failure, he's a great success.

Perspective Impressions

Reformers are hard to please. Some of them object even to Governor Hughes because he is not in favor of arming the mob for self-destruction.

If we had no troubles of our own it would not be so hard to understand the eagerness of our patriots to bear the weight of the future.

Mr. Roosevelt's latest sermon on the desirability of propagating the species suggests a solution of the vexed question, What shall we do with our ex-President? The Chair of Obstetrics in the Carnegie Institute for him.

There is joy among the muckrakers over the announcement of the intended retirement from the Senate of the two ablest members of that body. Now if they could be assured that Aldrich and Hale would be succeeded by two E. P. E. Troys their cup of joy would overflow.

Judge Lawlor suspects District Attorney Fickert of collusion with Calhoun, but he has no suspicion of his own collusion with the mob at which he winked audibly when he put the case over till the primary election.

Judge Lawlor's announcement of his candidacy for Justice of the Supreme Court bears out the prediction made in these columns some months ago that Mr. Rudolph Spreckels who has some important litigation on hand would run one or both of his personally conducted judges for a seat in the State's highest tribunal.

Mr. Hearst gleefully reproduces in his papers an editorial from the Washington Post calling attention to the fact that despite his political past he is treated with respectful consideration by men in high station. It is hard to appreciate the temperament of a man who is pleased to promote discussion of the question of his own intolerability.

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(Fourth Instalment)

We cantered gaily along the road with nothing of interest occurring except an ineffectual attempt to purchase some brandy for my guide, at a ranch which he told me belonged to Senor Ignatio Ortega, till we came in sight of the Dos Pueblos, the residence of Dr. Nicholas A. Den, an Irish gentleman, who has resided in California a great number of years, and is one of the wealthiest, as well as one of the noblest men in the State. Of him, to whom I have done myself the honor to dedicate this poor narrative, I shall have more to say hereafter. The guide stopped to have a little chat with an amigo, the mayor domo of the establishment, while I rode on, not caring to be identified by any Americans who might be about the place. The guide soon overtook me, and informed me that the Doctor was not at home. I had been introduced to him by an acquaintance, the winter previous, in Sacramento; but at this time, not knowing his feelings in relation to the Committee, (God forgive me for such injustice!) I preferred not to meet him. It was seventeen miles further to the city. We met no one on the road until within a few miles of our destination.

I remained about the outskirts of the town some time waiting for Dennison and Ramon to come out and meet me, but they did not come. I tried to make my guide understand that I wanted him to go into the city and find them, and tell them that I was waiting for them outside, but he either did not or would not comprehend me, and I at length, very foolishly, resolved to go at once into the town, and find them myself.

I rode up to a hotel and restaurant kept by a Frenchman, and before I dismounted, saw that I was recognized by one Albert Packard, formerly a shoe-maker. He had resided a long time in Santa Barbara, had married a native California lady and turned lawyer. My object in going to this place was to find Dennison; as it appeared to be the only hotel of note in the town, and I thought it most likely I should find him there. Packard was sitting on the porch, and finding I was recognized, I thought it best to put on a bold front; accordingly I dismounted, and took a seat beside him. We entered into conversation and talked over pretty much all the topics of the day, including the Vigilance Committee, politics, etc. He told me that he was in favor of Col. Fremont for the Presidency. I tried very hard to sound him as to his connection or sympathy with the Vigilance Committee, but he very adroitly foiled me, and I could not judge from anything he let fall whether he was for them or against them. Fool that I was! Why did not common sense whisper in my ear that he was engaging me in conversation merely to give time to the bloodhounds of Santa Barbara to organize and arrest me, and that while I sat there, I was perhaps talking my life away? I asked him to take a glass of something with me, thinking that a drink might make him communicative, but he replied that he seldom took anything before dinner. I had heard that he was a hunter up of fraudulent land claims, and a standing witness about the Land Commission, I knew that he was a humbug and a libel on his adopted profession, he had told me that he was a Black Republican, and I might have known that he was a Vigilante. The fellow afterward wrote a letter to the San Francisco Bulletin, in which he gave an account of this interview, and made it appear that I did not think he recognized me. He knew very well that I knew he recognized me all the time. What his object was in telling so foolish and harmless a lie I do not know, I suppose, however, it was a cheap opportunity to gratify a natural inclination.*

While we were conversing, a large sized, well dressed man approached, and after regarding me intently for a moment walked away. I asked Packard who he was, and he informed me that his name was George Parkinson, and that he had been, until recently, employed in the lighthouse at Point Conception. Packard expressed his surprise that I did not know him; I told him I had no recollection of ever having seen him before, and it was the truth. It was evident, however, that he doubted my statement. In a few moments three other persons approached and looked at me very closely. One of them I had known for a long time. His name was A. F. Hinchman, he had called himself a lawyer in San Francisco in 1850, and had tried several cases before me, when I held court in the old Plaza Building. He was there only a short time, however, for so soon as men who were really lawyers began to be numerous in San Francisco he found his level and migrated to Santa Barbara, which county he represented in the Assembly, in the year 1852, and there distinguished himself by being the only Member of the House who voted in favor of considering a foolish and somewhat insolent negro petition. He had married a native California lady, in order, it is said, to get a comfortable livelihood. He gave me a nod as he approached, but I did not return it, not being sure that he recognized me in the dress I wore. I was afraid of him, for his antecedents were such as to entitle him to full membership with the "purest and best," and I felt quite certain that he at least sympathized with them. Beside, he was opposed to me politically, and I had by this time come to the conclusion that politics had much to do with the crusade against me. Of the two others, Packard told me that the larger one was Russel Heath, Esq., the Sheriff of the County. I afterward learned that these fellows had instigated this gentleman to arrest me and hand me over to the Committee. The smaller one was a red headed, sneaking looking cur, named Harvey Benjamin Blake—a mischief-making, nose-poking busy-body, who had earned for himself by his peculiar gifts, the soubriquet of "Cochi Gueri" or white pig. I at once identified him as the former sweeper out of Everett's hatter's shop in Clay street, San Francisco. He too had, in some unaccountable manner, made himself acceptable to a wealthy California lady, and is now one of the so-called merchant princes of the State. He was a tool and sympathizer of the Vigilance Committee, and he and Hinchman were partners in the firm of Burton, Blake and Hinchman. The principal of the firm, Mr. Lewis Burton, is said to be a gentleman. It must be admitted, however, that he has the misfortune to be in horribly suspicious company.

Strange to say, I did not even yet suspect that any-

* The following letter from Packard appeared in the San Francisco Evening Bulletin:

Santa Barbara, July 6, '56.

The usual tranquility of our town has been disturbed today by the arrival of McGowan. The gent. alighted at the Fonda at about midday from a very tired horse, in company with a Mexican. McGowan straightway entered into a conversation with me, representing himself to be a cattle drover, and in fact he somewhat resembled one, although I recognized him at once. But, as he wished apparently to preserve an incognito, of course I did not interfere with his plan, and was very much amused with his views of matters and things in general. I could not help giving him the items of news as to what would probably be the fate of Judge McGowan if he should be taken to San Francisco. This caused him to give certain spasmodic jerks not very peculiar to cattle drovers in general. He privately assured me that the great Democratic party would right all the trouble in San Francisco, and in the course of a few months all things would be in their old position. He allowed that Howard made a blunder in taking the stump through the country. He was recognized by several people while he was conversing with me, and he appeared to be very nervous and uneasy. He complained bitterly about the hardships he had experienced since he had left San Francisco—that the whisky was very bad on the road. The beds at ranches he voted as great nuisances, and said that the people would hardly be worth selling in Georgia. In fact, the old scamp appeared to be completely used up in both mind and body.

thing was wrong, and when they went away without making any attempt to arrest me, I attributed their close scrutiny of me to a mere curiosity to see the "ubiquitous Ned," as the papers called me. I did not then know that they had been apprised of my coming, and were raising a larger party preparatory to making a demonstration. Gallant heroes! Four stalwart men did not dare to attempt the arrest of one old man, broken down by a ride of five hundred miles, and scarcely able to walk!

I afterwards learned that one Doctor S. B. Brinkerhoff, one of the "purifiers," had asked the Hon. Pablo De la Guerra if he could identify me. He told him that he could, if I was in the city, but he did not think I was there, not having seen me. The fact was that, being under indictment for murder, I did not choose to call on any of my friends and run the risk of compromising them, but was only desirous of getting on to Mexico, and would have continued on my journey at once if I had only been able to find Dennison and Ramon.

When the above mentioned parties had left, Packard stepped into the house to dinner. I entered also and was at once recognized by Capt. Bache of the coast survey, who was attached to the surveying schooner then lying in the harbor. He looked at me and smiled. I inquired for the room occupied by Dennison and Ramon. It was shown me, and I threw myself on the bed, and notwithstanding I did not feel altogether easy, could scarcely keep awake. I fell into several "cat naps," but suddenly, something within me told me not to sleep. A sudden presentiment of danger took possession of me, and I became thoroughly alarmed. I rapidly ran over in my mind the conversation with Packard, and recalled the looks of the men who had stared at me so on the porch and was thunderstruck at my stupidity in not having suspected my danger before.

Wondering why Dennison did not come to me—for he must have heard of my arrival—I took my knife and one of my pistols and laid them on the bed beside me. Presently I saw a man enter, and fasten, on the inside, the door that led into the street. I grasped my pistol, determined, if he attempted to molest me, to shoot him. I said to him, "What are you doing?" and he, "They are going to arrest you." "For what?" said I. He replied, "Jem"—meaning Dennison—"has told me all." I asked him where Dennison was, stating that I had been an hour and a half in town, and he had not come near me. He replied, "He will be here soon."

I now recognized in my companion the large well dressed man I had observed on the porch. He told me his name was George Parkinson, that he was formerly a partner of James Cusick, one of the expatriated, and that he would befriend me. He was an Irishman and I thought I could trust him. In a moment more Dennison entered. "Come," said he, "there is no time to lose." Parkinson took one of my Derringer pistols out of my belt, saying that we would go to his room where he would give me another six shooter, and we stepped into the street. The place was by this time alive with people running to and fro. We walked about two hundred yards before we reached

The Physician at the Supper Table---II.

By the Sybarite

"I have told you half a dozen times that you had no insomnia," responded the physician, as the two California clubmen sat on either side of a pint of Clos-Vougeot and a three-pound canvas-back that had been roasted twenty minutes, some fried hominy and a platter of crisp celery stalks and other relishes. "Your insomnia, so-called, is merely sleeplessness; and if you attend to what I have many times said to you, and which there is no need of repeating, you will get over your complaint without drugs and professional bills."

"Your utter sang froid makes me a bit tired. Two or three hours sleep out of eight or ten you call sleeplessness, and you—"

"This is a delicious wine, and properly warmed."

"Do you prefer it warmed?"

"Have you ever heard of any one liking it otherwise?"

"I like my claret iced on a hot day."

"But this is not claret, and the weather is not even warm."

"Well, what has that to do with my insomnia?"

"When carefully and properly made and aged and bottled and warmed it carries blissfulness to the stomach and transport to the brain. It is at once delicate and powerful, rich and stimulating. It is sensuous and fragrant, voluptuous and grand. It is full of dreamy delights and invigorating qualities. It possesses exquisite aroma, suavity of taste, and ravishing savor. It was the Canon Mancroix of Rheims, who died in 1708, who said:

"'In the wine of Burgundy there is more strength than vigor; it does not play with its man so much; it overthrows him more suddenly—that is Demosthenes. The wine of Champagne is subtler and more delicate; it amuses him, and for a longer time; but, in the end, it does not produce less effect—that is Cicero.'

"Well, I'll be teetotally switched. Here I am talking about my malady, and there you are going to pieces over a glass of wine."

"I once joined a friend in Paris over a bottle of Romanee Conti. You must know that none or little of this particular brand has ever been brought to the United States. Next to Romanee Conti is Clos-Vougeot, a favorite all over the world. One hundred times as much as is produced from the original vineyards is consumed—which does not really mean that ninety-nine per cent of the Clos-Vougeot we drink is spurious, however, for much of it is an honest wine, though made from grapes grown hundreds of miles distant from the district of Cote d'Or. The next best are Chambertin and Volnay, the former being the favorite wine of the great Napoleon and the latter of Dumas and Sue. There are many who place Chambertin at the head because of its fullness, fragrance, and excellent keeping qualities. It comes from Upper Burgundy and is famous wherever it is well known. All of these wines are heady and heating, and should only be taken with moderation and always with luscious food.

"Burgundy is the goutiest of all wines and is an insidious boomerang to the intemperate drinker, and especially if he be a gourmand who takes it daily with equal quantities of champagne, sherry, or port. Burgundy need not be sipped, but it should be taken in small quantities and allowed to linger along the tongue and palate and pass slowly down the throat. Or it may be held in action in the mouth until a most delicious sensation of the brain is produced. A pint or half pint of honest Burgundy, drank properly, will go further than a like quantity of any other strictly table wine. Under no circumstances should it be cooled or gulped down like beer or water. Really, none of these beverages should be gulped down, not even claret or champagne, although it is difficult to restrain one's self from rapidly emptying at least the first glass of nicely chilled Monopole or Mumm, when one is awfully thirsty. But there is no plausible excuse for rapidly swallowing the divine nectar from the golden hillsides of La Belle France, for the more slowly it is taken the more delicious the fragrance and savor.

"Burgundy—that is, red Burgundy—should be artistically warmed. There are many ways of doing this. The best is to hang it so that the sun may shine upon it all day. This is much better than placing it near a fire or in hot water. If there is no sunshine place the bottle in water of 65 degrees or 70 degrees and increase it to 80 degrees or 85 degrees gradually. If warmed properly and drank properly its effect is heavenly. It carries fascination into stomach and brain. It is an elixir to muscle and nerve. It thrills the tiniest vein and tingles every part of the body. It elevates human kind more than any other wine."

"But what has that to do with my insomnia?"

"Have you followed the advice I gave you the other evening?"

"O, there you are with your crackers again. Furthermore, I do not feel like eating just before crawling into bed. And I don't believe a few crackers or even a half dozen of oysters or a lamb chop would drive away my insomnia."

"Did it ever occur to you that man is the only animal that can be taught to sleep quietly on an empty stomach? The brute creation resent all efforts to coax them to such a violation of the laws of nature. The lion roars in the forest until he has found his prey, and when he has devoured it he falls asleep and sleeps until he needs another meal. The horse will bay all night in the stable, and the pig will squeal in the pen, refusing all rest or sleep until they are fed. The animals which chew the cud have their own provisions for a late meal just before dropping off to their night slumbers.

"Man can train himself to the habit of sleeping without a preceding meal, but only after long years of practice. As he comes into the world nature is too strong for him, and he must be fed before he will sleep. A child's stomach is small, and when perfectly filled, if no sickness disturbs it, sleep follows naturally and inevitably. As digestion goes on, the stomach begins to empty. A single fold in it will make the little sleeper restless; two will awaken it, and if it is hushed again to repose the nap is short, and three folds put an end to the slumber. Paregoric or other narcotic may close its eyes again, but without either food or some stupefying drug it will not sleep, no matter how healthy it may be. Not even an angel who learned the art of minstrelsy in a celestial choir can sing a babe to sleep on an empty stomach.

"We use the oft-quoted illustration, sleeping as sweetly as an infant, because this slumber of a child follows immediately after its stomach is completely filled with wholesome food. This sleep, which comes to adults long hours after partaking of food, and when the stomach is nearly or quite empty, is not after the type of infantile repose. There is all the difference in the world between the sleep of refreshment and the sleep of exhaustion.

"To sleep well, the blood that swells the veins in the head during our busy hours must flow back, leaving a greatly diminished volume behind the brow that lately throbbed with such vehemence. To digest well, this blood is needed at the stomach and near the fountains of life. It is a fact established beyond the possibility of contradiction that sleep aids digestion, and that the process of digestion is conducive to refreshing sleep. It needs no argument to convince us of this mutual relation. The drownsiness which always follows a well-ordered meal is itself a testimony of nature to this interdependence.

"The waste of human life by the neglect of the lesson is very great. The daily wear and tear of the body might be restored more fully than it usually is if this simple rule was not systematically violated. Sleep is wonderfully recuperative, but it may be shorn of half its benefits by unfavorable conditions. Foul air in the bedchamber leaves the sleeper almost exhausted in the morning as, when weary with the day's labor, he sank upon the bed. A gnawing stomach, empty of food, takes out of the nightly sleep that refreshing sense of comfort which properly belongs to it. It leaves the blood to throb in the heated brow, and haunts the sleep with an ever-present source of disquiet. It is like the sleep which the mother takes while her sick child is under the care of watchers in another room. An uneasy stomach is just like an aching heart in its effect upon the nightly repose.

"A healthy person who goes to bed on a full stomach will always wake in the morning with a better appetite for his breakfast. If dinner is eaten in the middle of the day and a light supper is served at six in the afternoon, a hearty luncheon should be provided at ten in the evening, or just before the hour of retiring. The rule should be to eat at the last moment before going to bed, whatever that hour may be.

"The sinking sensation in sleeplessness is a call for food. Wakefulness is merely a symptom of hunger. Gratify the desire and you will fall asleep. Not long ago I was called at two in the morning by a lady you know, who assured me she was dying. The body was warm, the heart doing honest work. To her indignation, I ordered buttered bread, (hot milk or beef-tea were better) to be eaten at once. Obeying, the moribund lady was soon surprised by a return of life and a desire to sleep; and she was sound asleep when I left her house an hour afterward.

"Recently, the dangerous and lamentable habit of promiscuously taking sleeping draughts has unfortunately become very prevalent, entailing misery and ill-health to a terrible degree. Most persons addicted to this destructive practice erroneously think that it is better to take a sleeping draught than lie awake. A greater mistake could hardly exist. All opiates more or less occasion mischief, and even the state of stupefaction they induce utterly fails to bring about the revitalization resulting from natural sleep. The physiological effects of hypnotics, of sleeping draughts, upon the system, is briefly as follows: (1) They paralyze the nerve centers and disorder the stomach, rendering it unfit for its duties; witness the sickness and loss of appetite consequent upon a debauch. Chloral, chloroform, opium, etc., act upon the system much in the same way as inebriation. (2) One and all anaesthetics introduced into the body have life-destroying properties in a low degree—proved by an over-dose being fatal. (3) The condition they produce is not sleep, but a counterfeit state of unconsciousness. (4) They directly poison the blood, consequent upon its carbonization, resulting from their action. While speaking of sedatives, I cannot omit drawing special attention to chloral. This powerful drug is popularly supposed to give a quiet night's rest without any of the after effects (headache, etc.), produced by various preparations of morphia. Now, chloral is what is termed cumulative in its action, which implies that even the same dose persisted in for a certain length of time may cause death. Of all hypnotics, chloral is by far the most deadly, and should never, under any circumstances, be taken except under medical supervision. To be sure, if a person be suffering from great pain—"

Being a Brief Chronicle of Significant Events the Wide World Over

Investigating High Prices

The proposal to appropriate $65,000 for the employment of experts to continue the investigation of the high cost of living after the Congress adjourns has divided the Senate on political lines. Senator Lodge, the chairman of the High Cost of Living Committee, thinks that this measure will be necessary in order to ascertain present prices and compare them with the prices of the past, but Senators Clapp and Overman object strenuously to the use of the public funds to "furnish material for campaign text books" and to "tell the people how much they are paying a yard for calico and a dozen for eggs." The democrats are all opposed to the proposal and the republicans who voted against the tariff bill are lined up on the same side.

An Increased Pacific Fleet

Two new armored cruisers will be attached to the Pacific fleet next fall. These are the North Carolina and the Montana, both of them at present in the Atlantic. The two cruisers, after completing other special service, will meet the Tennessee and South Dakota in South American waters and the four vessels will visit Buenos Ayres and Santiago during the celebrations projected in those cities. On the completion of this duty all four cruisers will proceed to this city and will be attached to the Pacific fleet. The armored cruiser will come to the Pacific by way of Suez to become the flagship of the Asiastic squadron. Pacific Coast representatives in Congress have petitioned to have battleships sent to the Pacific, but this is not in line with the present policy of the navy department. The Atlantic fleet contains only sixteen battleships none of which can be spared. The time is approaching, however, when the department will be able to organize a fleet of battleships for the Pacific without decreasing the strength of the Atlantic fleet. There are twelve battleships in the Atlantic which are not attached to the fleet. Six of these are on special service and six are undergoing repairs. In addition there are four battleships under construction. When these are placed in commission the navy will have sixteen battleships which can be despatched to this side of the world.

Government by Fives

Citizens of Buffalo are endeavoring through a bill introduced in the New York legislature to inaugurate the system of municipal government which obtains in Des Moines and Galveston; that is to say, government by commission. These Buffalonians would revolutionize their municipal polity by substituting for all the elective officials a council of five consisting of a mayor and four councilmen who will preside over (1) Public Affairs, (2) Accounts and Finances, (3) Public Safety, (4) Streets and Public Inmprovements, and (5) Parks and Public Property. All subordinate officers are to be chosen by the Five. All the executive, legislative and administrative functions of local self-government are to reside in the Five. In the election of the Five the so-called preferential system is to be followed; the elector indicating a first, second and third choice. The referendum and recall are features of the new system. So far both the senate and assembly bills embodying this project have remained dormant in the legislature.

The Wax Bust of Flora

Although the German government has put the stamp of authority upon the action of Dr. Bode, curator of the Kaiser Friedrich Museum, in paying $40,000 for a wax bust supposed to be the work of Leonardo da Vinci by appropriating the sum for his reimbursement, evidence of a very convincing kind is at hand to show that the bust is a fake. The wax of the bust has been submitted to a careful chemical examination by Dr. Georg Pinkus, an eminent German chemist. Dr. Pinkus not only analysed the wax of the Flora bust but also a bit of wax from a bust known to have been made by Lucas, considered by experts other than Dr. Bode the maker of the Flora. The examination revealed a striking similarity between the Lucas wax and the Flora wax and a slight variation in each case from beeswax. This was found to be due to the presence of spermaceti, a substance which was not used in the making of wax in da Vinci's time. When a piece of wax was extracted from the interior of the supposed antique bust, bits of English newspaper adhered to it. It looks as though Dr. Bode has been "sold."

The Empress of Abyssinia

News filters slowly to the world from the African kingdom of Abyssinia but now that the death of King Menelik, the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah," has been measurably authenticated, it is feared that his widow will endeavor to make trouble. Fearing the power of his wife, the Empress Taitu, a woman of great determination and ability, Menelik imprisoned her and had his fourteen year old grandchild proclaimed Heir Apparent. The Empress is supposed to be still in durance. She was once a woman of great beauty and was married four times before she became the wife of Menelik. Her first husband was one of King Theobald's generals, her second she divorced, her third was killed by King John and her fourth was "removed," as it is euphemistically expressed in Abyssinia. She married Menelik in 1883. Like members of the ancient Judean line from which he claimed descent Menelik was extremely suspicious of feminine guile; hence the long imprisonment of his spouse.

No "Civil Sanctuary" for Cars

The Supreme Court of the United States has just settled a question which has been variously adjudicated in the highest tribunals of many States after many hard-fought legal battles. It has decided that railroad cars belonging to an interstate railroad corporation and being used for purposes of interstate commerce are subject to seizure under an attachment issued out of a State court. Railroad corporations have contended that their cars could not be lawfully attached except in the State in which the corporations were organized. A railroad corporation organized in Indiana resisted seizure of its cars in Iowa claiming that all instrumentalities of interstate commerce are free from judicial process. This sweeping assertion of privilege the Supreme Court has denied because, in the language of Mr. Justice McKenna, it would put all the property of an interstate railway company "in a kind of civil sanctuary."

Keil's Persistent Reticence

Once more has the public been reminded of the mysterious death of William J. Biggy. At a meeting of the police commissioners the other night Hugo D. Keil, formerly a member of that commission, appointed thereto by Mayor Taylor, was called upon to give testimony with reference to an interview with Biggy which took place just before that unfortunate individual went to his death in the waters of the bay. Mr. Keil refused to testify. Though he once made an official report of what was said at that interview that report has never been made public, and Keil's lips have been sealed ever since. Now why should this matter be kept from the public? Is it not remarkable that the one man who is able to shed light on the Biggy tragedy, the circumstances of which have inspired a suspicion of foul play, should be permitted to withhold the valuable information that he possesses? This is one of the many curious, unprecedented things that marked the administration of our municipal affairs when the machinery was under the control of Rudolph Spreckels and James D. Phelan. Of course Mr. Keil has not kept his great secret inviolate. So much weight on his bosom was more than he could bear. He unloaded in private, but so far as the public records are concerned there is an absolute blank where there should be the sworn testimony of the one public official who possessed information of value to the constituted authorities.

Biggy's Enemies

As I have said Mr. Keil once made an official report of his interview with Biggy. That report was in writing and was handed to Mayor Taylor, who, after reading it, quickly handed it back for the reason, the supposition is, that being eager to protect his friends of the graft prosecution from scandal he deemed it advisable to treat the report as a private communication. Whatever his purpose, it is certain that the good poet never permitted the report to cumber the public records; yet affecting a desire while in office to have the graft prosecution investigated he appointed a committee of puppets for that purpose. Now in my opinion nothing could have been more pertinent to the subject matter of that investigation than the Keil report. And as I know some of the things that were recited in that report my opinion in this instance is deserving perhaps of more than flippant consideration. I know, for example, that Mr. Keil reported how bitterly Biggy complained to him of the manner in which he was being hounded by his enemies, and of the causes of their dissatisfaction with his conduct. Keil reported among other things a significant harmony of sentiment between Judge Dunne and Rudolph Spreckels with respect to the attitude that Biggy should have assumed toward Maurice Haas, the frenzied ex-convict who shot Francis J. Heney. Biggy told Keil that Judge Dunne summoned him to his chambers one day and berated him for not assuming that Haas was instigated by the higher-ups; also that Rudolph Spreckels censured him for precisely the same reason. Among others mentioned in the Keil report was that chaste moralist, Mr. Fremont Older. Biggy told Keil the story of the origin of Older's hostility. It was to the effect that this indefatigable nemesis of fallen women was eager to guarantee protection to a brothel which some distinguished citizens were about to open. Biggy refused to give his assent and Older was shocked and furious at his ingratitude. Another of the enemies that Biggy made, according to Keil's report, was William J. Burns, the detective. He fell out with Biggy because the latter would not consent to make Alex Greggains a sergeant of police. From all of which it is evident that Mr. Biggy was a most undesirable functionary.

"Old Grabber ought to be satisfied with the money he has."
"He is satisfied—so much so that he wants a lot more of exactly the same kind."

When Twain Left Journalism

Like a great many other literary men of abundant achievement Mark Twain was a failure as a newspaperman. He was on the Call in the early sixties and had the reputation of being a shirker. One night the city editor found him asleep on the stairs leading up to the local room. "I don't think you'll ever make a newspaperman," said the city editor. "I don't think so either," was the rejoinder," and I think I'll quit trying right now." And Mark Twain threw up his job on the spot. As a matter of fact Twain's sense of humor had sadly interfered with his reportorial work. One morning he was assigned to the task of writing up the mysterious murder of a fallen woman in the Latin quarter. He wrote a tale that was thrillingly yellow. He stated that he had been the first to view the corpse and told of a theory that the murderer is sometimes reflected in the eyes of the victim for a brief period and gradually fades away. He solemnly declared that he had examined the eyes of the dead woman and saw reflected therein the image of a reporter on a morning contemporary.

One of His Experiences

At a dinner in New York about ten years ago Mark Twain discoursed of his newspaper experience as follows: "I was a reporter in San Francisco years ago. I was willing to be again, but somehow other people didn't seem to take the same amount of interest in it that I did. The pawnbrokers had charge of nearly all of my portable property. I met another literary character there in the same situation. He was a poet. He was out of a job. I believe there was some little love romance about it, too. But I think I will spare your feelings about that part of it. Well, the poet came to me one day and said he thought his life was a failure, and asked me what I thought about it. I told him I thought it was. He spoke about suicide, and thought probably it was the best thing he could do. Now I knew that if I could get what the newspapers call a 'scoop," I could probably get something to do. I did not discourage him in his suicide proposition. I kept it in his mind. He had his preference about the way suicide should be done. Most people have their preferences in suicide. I have.

The Difficulty of Suicide

"The poet wanted to shoot himself. But this meant a pistol. Now we could not afford a pistol. I told him we should always exercise a proper economy in all things, and that drowning would be economical. I kept close to him all these days. The drowning method seemed to have some attraction for him. But there was one drawback. He was a splendid swimmer. We thought however that if he got out into the sea far enough we could manage that. So we went down to the shore. And as he stood there on the beach there came rolling in something from the broad Pacific. It was something that was on an errand. It may have been traveling on that errand for three thousand miles. But it got there and it arrived on time, landing right at the poet's feet. It was a life preserver.

A Dicker for Death

"Of course he could live three weeks on a life preserver if he had capital enough to provision himself for such a long cruise. Then we had an idea, which was unusual. It was I who had the idea. The poet never had any ideas. This applied particularly when he was writing poetry. But I had an idea and it was that the life preserver suggested a way to having a land suicide. We might pawn the life preserver and get a pistol. So we took it to a pawnshop. It was not a very good life preserver. It had been traveling a good while and showed the wear and tear. But we dickered with the pawnbroker and got a pistol for it. But just before he gave the pistol the pawnbroker said to me: 'But say, what does he want a pistol for?' I took the pawnbroker into the back room and told him how things stood. As man to man I told him my situation and the advantages that would accrue to me from a scoop. Then I said to him plainly: 'That man out there is a poet and he wants to commit suicide.'

He Blew His Brains Out

"The pawnbroker fell in with my view that it would be a good thing, and we got the pistol. It was a derringer pistol—a single barrel affair. It carried a bullet about the size of a hickory nut—not one of the largest hickory nuts, but one that would make a good, big, honest hole and cause a lot of trouble. The poet wanted me to go and see him commit suicide, but I argued with him that it hardly seemed right for me to assist in a suicide in which I had a selfish business interest. I told him that, on the contrary, I ought properly to dissuade. I argued with him in this way until I found that I was unsettling him, and then I told him that I would stick to him as a friend should, and go and see him get the thing through and off his hands. So he went out and put the pistol to his head, and, oh, what awful moments those were as he stood there pressing the muzzle to his temple! It seemed as though my heart beat and thumped until it could do so no more, and that then it stopped and that there was a vacuum where the heart ought to be. Finally my emotions could be controlled no longer, and I cried out to him: 'Why don't you pull the trigger?' Then he did pull the trigger. The ball went straight through his head and took all the gray matter with it. It made a new man of him. The bullet hit his poetic faculty square in the center and dragged it out the back door. And I am glad to say that that man is alive to this day, and that ever since that pistol shot he has lived an upright, respectable and useful life."

He Resented Correction

Oldtimers well remember the fashionable Cosmopolitan Hotel of other days. A prominent lady living there gave an entertainment one evening and Mark Twain was among her guests. He was telling a story in his droll hesitating way when a young woman who was then aspiring for literary honors which she afterwards attained, sought to help him out with a word for which she thought he was groping. He paused and gave her a look of severity and drawled out: "No, that was not what I was going to say. I prefer to tell this story in my own way." Needless to say the young woman felt the rebuke, but she realized her conceit and years afterwards when she had become an eloquent listener used to tell the story on herself.

"They seem to be in love."

"Yes; I really believe those two think as much of each other as they do of themselves."

Admiral Sebree's Sensation

When Admiral Sebree was banqueted at the Palace Hotel a short time ago somebody went to the trouble to report the old seadog's speech verbatim. Sailors are noted for their bluntness and perhaps there is no sailor quite so blunt as a retired admiral, but even taking all this into consideration, it must be admitted that Admiral Sebree made an unusual sensation by his remarks on that occasion. Not only did the admiral astonish the naval officers who were present, but he has also excited a buzz of gossip in eastern naval circles, for the sensational part of his speech has been published in the eastern papers which men of the navy are in the habit of reading. Here is the portion of Admiral Sebree's speech which has excited comment:

When I retired on February 20 I hauled down my flag without the least feeling of bitterness. I felt that I had done my work and I reached the top of the lid. There was nothing more that I could do. My only regret was that I was so old. Though I am to all intents and purposes a dead one at the present time, I shall naturally take a keen interest in the navy. It remains for the young officers to improve the service. If they fail to do so I shall feel that we older ones have been remiss in our duty to our country in not training them in the right manner. On one occasion I was Governor of Samoa and had great difficulty in filling the position. I received no orders from Washington and realized after a couple of months that my interpreters were not interpreting correctly. I heard neither approval nor disapproval from the natives and I was somewhat bothered as to whether I was doing right. In the midst of my trouble Sir Harry Rawlston, a famous English admiral, visited the island for a few hours, and I placed my dilemma before him. "When I am in a position like yours," said the admiral, "my plan is to d——n the admiralty office and go ahead." I followed his advice and believe I had the most absolute monarchy that ever existed. I believe such advice must have been given to Lord Kitchener when he was a small boy, and my advice to young officers who find themselves in tight places without orders is to don't give a d——n as to what they say in Washington and use common sense. You will do your duty better.

Our Chinese Editor

Ng Poon Chew who is the editor of the first Chinese daily paper published in this city, was in New York recently and told the reporters some very interesting facts which San Franciscans ought to know but don't. He told them, for instance, that when he first established his paper here his Chinese friends put up money for it with the expectation that they would never get it back. The first year the paper paid a dividend of ten per cent; the second year, thirty per cent; another year, seventy-five per cent. In the first ten years the stockholders got back four hundred per cent on their investment. The paper has a circulation of 3600 and goes all over the United States. No effort is made to make it sensational, murders and other crimes being simply mentioned. In connection with the newspaper enterprise Mr. Chew conducts a book department, importing from China all sorts of literature. He says that there is quite a demand for Chinese translations of Shakespeare, Darwin, Spencer and other philosophical writers and that fiction, beginning with Robinson Crusoe, is extremely popular.

The Chinese in California

Mr. Chew states that there are only 65,000 Chinese in America and that the Chinese population of this State is only half of what it used to be. He says that there used to be 30,000 Chinese in this city but that the number has dwindled to 7,000. "Twenty years from now," he says, "you will have to go to a museum to find a Chinaman in this country." One thousand of the Chinese in this city, he estimates, are Christians and for these there are five churches, Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist and Salvation Army. Of the Americanized Chinese as found here Mr. Chew says: "Since the earthquake and fire the character of the Chinese in San Francisco has changed altogether. Most of the clubs and societies like the Six Companies before the fire had religious observances and kept idols and altars in their meeting places. Now the idols have been removed and their place taken by lecture platforms, and each hall now has maps on the walls and a library and reading room containing papers both American and Chinese. Before the fire every Chinese merchant had in his store an altar and an idol of the god of wealth. Now they have thrust out the idols and the altars and are trusting to themselves. Chinatown is now a very substantial section of the city."

A "Shoestring" Harbor

Los Angeles "harbor" as it is called is thirteen miles south of the point where Spring street ceases to be a city street and merges into what Secretary Zeehandler of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association calls "a municipal highway," but which others less inclined to the euphemism of the South Californian booster would call "a county road." Originally this "harbor" was a slough, but when the scarbina fishers began to make it their landing place it was marked on the maps as San Pedro bay. It became a "harbor" when Los Angeles "annexed" it by the "shoestring" process. This "right of way" between Los Angeles and its "harbor" is half a mile wide, which is about equal to an ordinary right of way for a suburban railway. The Los Angeles boosters, however, probably consider it amply wide enough to accommodate all the traffic that will ebb and flow between their city and their harbor. Disinterested outside opinion may infer from the belated action of Los Angeles that the necessity of being a seaport was an afterthought, and that it is also a tacit acknowledgment on their part tnat they built their city in the wrong place. In truth, when Los Angeles was rehabilitated from a Spanish pueblo into a modern American city there was no intention beyond establishing a convenient health resort for wasted lungs and tired livers. It was the real estate speculator who first broached the possibility of a real city, and it is the real estate speculator who has since kept that notion in the minds of the permanent residents of Los Angeles. These permanent residents of Los Angeles, it may be added, are cannibals whose favorite food is the fatted tourist in his season.

Guy Barham's Subtle Jest

When President Taft was in Los Angeles he was "shown around" by the boosters and among other things the "harbor" was presented for his consideration with a modest request that he use his influence with Congress to obtain an appropriation of 'steen millions for its "improvement," meaning, of course, that the President should assist the Angelenos in compelling a harbor where only a mud flat now exists. When the President's launch returned from the tour of observation it grounded on one of the flats. This incident seemed to appeal to the sense of humor of the newspaper correspondents accompanying the presidential party and they were caught by Guy Barham in the act of laughing uproariously.

"What are you laughing at, boys?" he asked.

"We're laughing at your harbor out there in the offing," answered one of the newspapermen.

"Well," said Guy meditatively, "I must admit that it does lack one essential of a harbor."

"And what is that?" asked another.

"Irrigation," was the honest confession.

"Are you in favor of the repeal of the blasphemy laws?" asked an excited old lady at the political meeting.

"Madam," replied the candidate gravely, "I am a golfer."

Entertaining the Hotel Men

There was diplomacy of the most fruitful sort in the lavish entertainments prepared for the hotel men who sojourned in this city last week. Wherever they go the men of the country's big caravanserai are sure of hearty welcome; they are the professional dispensers of hospitality and it is meet that they should be accorded some part of the pleasure which they prepare for others. So the annual conventions of the hotel men are always unusually jolly affairs. Cities outdo one another in doing them honor. But San Francisco has set a new mark in their entertainment. Never before has so much originality, so much genuine hospitality, such lavish expenditure contributed to the joys of their stay in any city. Experienced bonifaces who think they know what's what in the purveying of good cheer went away from here astonished by the reception which they had received. It seemed strange to them that they should have to travel to the western edge of the continent before exhausting the possibilities of entertainment.

The Gambling Feature

Much mystery was made by the daily papers as to the gambling which was a feature of the forty-nine mining camp entertainment at the St. Francis. Yet there was no mystery about it. The money used was real money; there was the genuine rustle to every bill, the genuine ring to every double eagle. Quite a formidable number of thousands changed ownership that night. The easterners, it must be said, had to learn the etiquette of the occasion, but once instructed they showed themselves good sports. Their first timid bets of half dollars and dollars were succeeded by bets of tens and twenties and losses were taken as nonchalanatly as you would please. Still I don't think the visitors lost very heavily, because after all they gambled gamely but did not plunge like some of our local sports. One of our State senators, I think, dropped $450 and a prominent retail merchant parted with $1500. As in most games of chance the gamekeepers had most of the money when the night was done. Jimmy Coffroth, Frank Daroux and some of the men from the Northern in San Mateo County netted very respectable sums out of their contribution to the evening's entertainment.

The Chinese Decorations

One aspect of the hotel men's entertainment could not but appeal forcibly to a San Franciscan. That was the continual use of the Chinese motive in the decorations. The official souvenir book of the affair is done in Chinese colors and teems with Chinese pictures and drawings. The banquet room at the Palace was decorated in the Chinese manner and there were many who said that they had never seen a more beautifully prepared room. Little Chinese boys and girls in gala dress sang the patriotic songs which they have learned in our public schools. Of course it was a wise thing to insist on the oriental side of San Francisco life. While there are Chinese in other cities there is nowhere else a Chinatown like ours with wealthy merchants, fine women and Americanized children. To travelers nothing is more attractive, nothing lingers so long in memory as the oriental riot of colors, the strange oriental type of beauty and the effective oriental schemes of decoration. The Chinese are a great asset in our city life and it seems strange that they should not have been appreciated until quite recently. On good authority I have been informed that to Mr. Alexander of the St. Francis Hotel, an Eastern man, is due more than to any other the popularity of the Chinese and their characteristic decorations in local entertainments.

The Worth of It All

The shortsighted may be inclined to think that the prodigality with which the visiting hotel men were entertained surpassed the demands of the occasion, but they are decidedly in the wrong. Every city makes special efforts to entertain the bonifaces and in the case of San Francisco there were particularly cogent reasons why their good will should be captured. If we are to have an exposition in this city in 1915 we need the assistance of the hotel men throughout the country in persuading people to come here. The hotel men do not control the course of travel but they do more than any other set of men to enlarge its stream. If they are well disposed toward San Francisco and San Francisco's fair they will send thousands to us and put many a penny in our purse in exchange for the pennies which have been spent in entertaining them. It was very good business policy to give them the time of their lives.

Jack Johnson's Admirers

In the olden times of Roman glory women vied with men in doing honor to the gladiators who bested their opponents in the arena and there were no carping critics to suggest unworthy motives for their enthusiasm. Times have changed since then; witness the exclusion of women from pugilistic encounters. And yet there is no doubt that women admire the exponents of the manly art of self-defense, admire them with an admiration that does not yield the palm to the matrons of ancient Rome. I have received striking proof of this fact in a circumstance told anent the coming of Jack Johnson, the ebony fighter who is to do battle with Jeffries at Emeryville. Johnson, I am informed, is now on his way to this city and as becomes one of the foremost men of the world of sport, he is traveling in regal Pullman splendor. With him, I have been given to understand, are traveling three white women who are so keenly interested in his personality and prowess that they have accorded him the honor of their company for the dull trip across the continent. That Johnson appreciates the honor which these three white women are conferring on him I make no doubt, for everything that I have heard of him indicates that he is the soul of devotion in his relations with the weaker sex.

A Millionaire's Tip

J. Parker Whitney, sportsman and litterateur, came down from his beautiful country home at Rocklin a few days ago and registered at the Palace Hotel. As he entered the hotel, suit case in hand, one bellboy remarked to another: "Gee, if you had his money you wouldn't have to work." Taking the hint the bellboy rushed over to Mr. Whitney, seized his bag and overcoat and accompanied him to the desk. As he deposited the bag by the traveler's side he saluted politely and started away. "One minute," said Mr. Whitney. The boy turned back expectantly. "Take this," said Mr. Whitney. The boy extended his hand, but Mr. Whitney fumbled and there tinkled on the tiled floor a ten cent piece.

A Critic on Oscar Wilde

One of the local critics was moved to the expression of some general thoughts on Oscar Wilde when he was writing his estimate of Miss Maud Allan's "Salome" dance. His generalities proved reasonable and pleasing until he referred to "the modern and pervading, although happily waning influence of Oscar Wilde." That gave me pause, for the simple reason that I believed and still believe that the influence of Oscar Wilde, instead of waning, is waxing. This seems to me to be proved by the various costly and cheap editions of his complete works which are now to be found on the shelves of the booksellers, as well as by the increasingly respectful attitude of critics towards his literary achievement. It is also proved by the persistence with which his ideas are imitated and stolen by poets, playwrights and essayists. To speak of the "happily waning influence of Wilde" is to convey the impression that the Wilde influence is a bad influence, an influence which all good men should rejoice to see destroyed. That must be the critic's state of mind. I am surprised and disappointed, because I thought that this particular critic was more than ordinarily enlightened and that he appreciated fully the refining influence which the fastidious art of Wilde has had on the crude literary strivers of today. By the way, this critic errs in stating that Aubrey Beardsley destroyed some of the "Salome" plates before he died. The plates which he destroyed were not made for the illustration of Wilde's "Salome." They were certain plates which few had seen at the time when they were broken.

Reproving an Editor

As a means of expressing disapproval of editorial policies and pronouncements the expedient of ducking the editor in a pond arrests attention for the nonce but does not appeal to reason. There are times of course when personal chastisement seems to be the only adequate way to punish an editor for overstepping the bounds of journalistic propriety and there are on record many instances where a smart twigging has produced a salutary change in the character of editorial criticism. But after all the argumentum ad hominem, the logic of muscle, should be kept as the very last persuader of recalcitrant moulders of public opinion. It does not seems as though its use could ever be justifiable in college journalism. It is true that among the young spirits of a university the resort to force is merely obedience to an instinct of the healthy animal, but just on that account it should not be made. Animal instincts should be curbed and not encouraged at college. There is no part of collegiate training more important than this; no part, unfortunately, which is more neglected. As to the merits of the controversy at Stanford no outsider, it would seem, is competent to speak positively. It is altogether an intramural dispute which may safely be left to the adjudication of the proper university authorities. But that the editorial course of Mr. Leaf warranted those whose withers were wrung in throwing him into Lagunitas Lake, I do not believe. If these young men are so sensitive to newspaper criticism at college, with what more dangerous methods will they show their resentment of it when they have graduated into the real world of affairs? If in the green wood they duck an editor what will they do in the dry? It is a case in which all editors should stand together, not merely to save their skins from a chill and their dress suits from ruin (few editors possess dress suits, by the way), but also for the honor of their professional function. The cold water of a pond makes no fair answer to the argument of printer's ink.

northwest corner of Sutter and Sansome streets last Monday morning, one of the finest and most complete banking rooms in the whole country, and a vast number of friends and clients thronged the premises all day admiring the building and its unsurpassed equipments. The building occupies a site 122:6 on Sutter street and 46:10 on Sansome street. The exterior is of white granite; the Sutter-street front consists of an arcaded colonnade, and the Sansome-street front has one large arch entrance, flanked on each side by two detached columns of the Doric order. The banking-room occupies the entire first floor, is thirty-six feet high, with vaulted sides and paneled ceiling. Two large vaults occupy the rear of the banking-room. The city collections, clearing-house department, telephone and pneumatic service are on the mezzanine floor. The large safe deposit vault contains 5000 boxes. Neither care, attention nor expense has been spared to make it one of the most handsome, substantial and commodious banking establishments in the country. An impressive feature of the banking-room is the monumental and yet exquisitely molded bronze work of the lighting fixtures in the Italian Renaissance style. These of themselves will repay a visit to the bank by lovers of the fine arts, for no such bronze work is to be seen elsewhere in Western America. They were designed and executed by the local firm of Adams & Hollopeter. While the main chandeliers are of heroic size, being eighteen feet in length, four feet in diameter and each weighing nearly half a ton, they are so admirably proportioned that their size is not realized. The motif of the traditional Italian lamp is carried throughout the entire lighting scheme, not only of the main room but of the mezzanine floor, directors' room and even to the portables on the desks, all the smaller fixtures being adaptations of the same thought, which harmonizes perfectly with the other decorative effects of the interior. The brackets are fashioned like the four main chandeliers, simplified but enhanced in hanging quality by being pendant from a huge bracket scroll, a replica of the famous Venetion Flagstaff bracket. This poise of scale, form, and hanging makes a bold effect and its striking success gives clear evidence of a mastery in design and execution. It also solves the problem of having the zone of light both as regards chandeliers and brackets in one plane, at the same time making the ornament center properly in the wall panel. The outlets are twenty-two feet from the floor, a most unusual height. All the remaining fixtures are the same in general line and detail, simplified or elaborated to meet practical requirements. Altogether the fixtures are a credit to the ability of the local manufacturers. This bank, one of the strongest in the West, is the consolidation of the London Paris and American Bank, founded by Lazard Freres, and the Anglo-Californian, founded by the Seligmans, both international bankers ranking with the leading financiers of the world. Since the consolidation, one year ago, the deposits have grown from $17,000,000 to $24,000,000. Its management is known to be conservative and progressive, and the bank ranks among the strongest financial institutions in the United States.

EXCURSION TO UKIAH

THE NORTHWESTERN PACIFIC announces an excursion to Ukiah on Sunday May 1st. This is the most popular excursion run by any railroad in the State. The ride is through Marin, Santa Rosa, Russian River and Ukiah Valleys, and at this time of the year it is a most beautiful trip owing to the fruit trees being in blossom and the wild flowers in full bloom. The trains pass through a veritable bed of wild flowers. The trip can be taken in absolute comfort as each ticket insures a seat, there being no more tickets sold than there are seats provided. The fare for the round trip is only $2.50 and the tickets are now on sale at the City Ticket Office, 874 Market street, and at the ferry. The leaving time from San Francisco is 8:45 a. m., and from Ukiah 5:00 p. m.

A Vanderbilt Reconciliation

Many are the rumors which have flown abroad anent the sudden departure for the East of Mrs. Willie Vanderbilt, and quite naturally, it has been surmised that her swift change of plans has had some bearing on the whispered stories of an estrangement between herself and her husband. Herein, it seems to me, rumor shows a shrewd ability to guess the truth. Mrs. Vanderbilt came to California with every intention of making an extended visit with her friends of San Francisco and Burlingame and it could only have been a weighty consideration which induced her to change her plans. In this connection the departure of Lina Cavalieri, the Italian singer, for vacation in Europe after her more or less arduous operatic season in New York takes on considerable importance. The attention of Willie Vanderbilt to this ravishing beauty is regarded by many as the cause of the disagreement which has alienated Mrs. Willie from her erstwhile adoring husband. That attention, I am told, will henceforth be discontinued. The Cavalieri, it seems, has been induced to realize that it would be the course of unwisdom any longer to exercise the power of her charms over Birdie Fair's husband. The arguments by which she was brought to this state of mind, I am told, were supplied by members of the Vanderbilt family and proved so cogent that the Cavalieri saw their force without much difficulty and forthwith departed for Europe. Mrs. Vanderbilt's next meeting with her husband will take on the character of a reconciliation.

The Pierpont Morgan Family

While Mrs. Pierpont Morgan and her daughter are in San Francisco the head of the family is in another part of the world, appraising and buying masterpieces of art for his splendid collection. Which serves to remind me that Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont Morgan are seldom together. Their tastes, it seems, are very different. The friends whom Mr. Morgan cultivates are not the friends whom Mrs. Morgan shows a predilection for. One of the friends of whom Mr. Morgan was particularly fond not so long ago was Miss Maxine Elliott and yet I have never been given to understand that Mrs. Morgan improved the opportunity of becoming an intimate of the beautiful actress. Mr. Morgan's friendship for the Junoesque Maxine must be set down to two considerations, his inevitable financial instinct and his great love of art. Maxine's artistic temperament made a great hit with Mr. Morgan and he saw quickly the benefits which would accrue to him if he gave her a theater of her own. That it was a good investment nobody familiar with the case has ever denied. And yet it seems that Mr. Morgan has been succeeded by another "angel." One of the Gould brothers, it is reported, has waxed equally enthusiastic over the art of Maxine and is now backing her theatrical enterprises. There can be no doubt that her association with great financiers has taught Maxine a great many things about business usually unknown to actresses.

The Riot Over Marjorie

Some of our illogical editors have seen fit to visit their weighty censure upon the heads of the women who mobbed the very fashionable church in New York where Miss Marjorie Gould was married to young Anthony Drexel. They are disgusted because the curious crowd mastered the sexton's assistants and engaged in a scrimmage with the police, for all the world like a company of militant suffragettes. They glimpse the degeneration of the glorious American femininity in the fact that hundreds stood for hours in the pelting rain to catch a glimpse of the bride. I repeat that these editors are illogical.. If our editors are not responsible for the riot in front of the very fashionable church, pray who is? Have not the editors shunted real news onto the back pages to make room for glowing accounts of the engagement presents and the dresses of the bridesmaids and the visit of the affianced couple to the license office? Have they not made it clear to the dullest intelligence that Miss Marjorie Gould, being the daughter of millions, is composed of some different kind of flesh and blood from that which does duty for ordinary men and women? Have they not pointed out that Miss Gould, in marrying a mere untitled American, was showing a courage, an originality, a self-sacrifice, if you please, worthy of commemoration in some hall of fame? Have they not, in a word, made a little tin goddess of Miss Gould? Then why should not the women of New York riot for a glimpse of this "dea certe"? Is it not commendable to stand in the rain for a look at a heroine? Having created the legend of Miss Marjorie Gould almost overnight it is rather shabby of the editors to take their readers to task for accepting it. Would they have use believe now that she is a mere mortal woman? 'Tis too great a strain upon credulity. Having faith in our editors we accept their first delineation and feel very peevish over the scolding which they have so virtuously administered after leading us into mischief.

She is Making a Hit in Paris

The latest San Francisco girl to make a decided hit in Paris is Miss Elsa Matthews who is regarded by competent Parisian critics as a musical prodigy. Miss Matthews is associated with Miss Dorothy Toye of Minneapolis, a singer with a voice of two distinct qualities, tenor and soprano. With no musical training, little experience and indifferent looks, Miss Toye has conquered the Paris music halls. She is singing at the Boite a Fursy, a tiny theatre in Montmartre where the prices are higher than anywhere else in Paris and where it is regarded as particularly "chic" to spend an evening. Miss Toye's salary for an engagement of six months is said to be $1200 a month. Miss Matthews is quite as remarkable as Miss Toye. She has composed songs for Miss Toye to sing and accompanies her on the piano. She knows nothing about the technique of music, yet during the past eight months she has published twenty-five songs, all of which have succeeded. Miss Matthews fears to take music lessons lest she lose the gift of spontaneous composition. The two young ladies have an apartment together and will remain in Paris indefinitely. Miss Matthews is collaborating in an opera with a French composer and is also writing one of the musical reviews which will be produced in the fall.

A Great Old Nurse

Approaching the Fairmont a few days ago I saw old Henrietta, considered by many the best colored nurse in San Francisco. I did not know that she was still in active service till I caught sight of her smiling and wheeling a baby carriage before her. They say that Henrietta weighed 100 pounds when she was nineteen years old and was engaged as the first colored maid at the old Palace. She must be about 55 years old now and she has grown very big and heavy. But she is not too old, too bulky or too heavy to take care of children and she is now engaged by Mr. Robert Hayes Smith, the oil man, to look after the first born of the family. Old Henrietta was tending the little Smith boy when I saw her the other day. For several years Henrietta was employed by Mr. Samuel M. Shortridge and some very tempting offers were made to her by families with little children but she liked the two Shortridge youngsters and stayed with them till they had outgrown the need of a nurse. I recall that Jim Follis offered her $150 a month when his first boy was born, but Henrietta was never mercenary and the dazzling salary was not even a temptation to her.

Testimonial Concert for Wanrell

The friends of Senor Joaquin Wanrell have arranged to give him a testimonial concert on Wednesday evening, May 4, at Kohler and Chase Hall. Wanrell lost all his material possessions in the fire which gutted the old Tait restaurant in Van Ness avenue recently and he has so often lent his valuable services to charity that his friends feel the obligation of reciprocating in the time of his misfortune. That it will be an obligation generously and abundantly fulfilled there can be no doubt for Wanrell has a host of friends and admirers in this city. In the concert of next Wednesday he will sing some of his finest numbers and will be assisted by a number of fine artists including Nat Landsberger, Signor V. Arrillaga, Miss Fay Carranza, Miss Alice Dolan and Miss Grace Hanrish. Those who desire to take tickets may obtain them by communicating with Miss Fay Carranza, 1430 Hyde street, or with the Press Club.

really requires little more brains to master than polo patter and is not nearly as difficult as auction bridge. The aeronette, be it understood, is one of the interpretative dances of which one hears so much nowadays. It is an interpretation of the flying of an aeroplane, a most poetical subject for ball room treatment. A slow dreamy waltz suggests the starting of the machine. The time moves faster and faster, then stops to indicate the passing of the aeroplane from hearing. Then a languorous Viennese waltz which breaks into a galop indicates the highest point of ascent. Then the music gradually slows again. It will be seen that this treatment is suggestive of aviating to the most unimaginative. The dancing is as symbolical almost as the music. For the first movement the dancers stand side by side with arms outstretched and bodies bent slightly forward. Galoping six steps forward represents the movement of the aeroplane as it goes over the ground quickly, gaining speed for the ascent. Next in facing position the arms of the dancers are outstretched and raised first on one side, then on the other; at the same time the knees are bent and raised while taking two-steps. Following this come six turns of the Boston two-step, then the balance (with the arms upraised) two-step, and again six turns of the Boston. All this indicates the aeroplane as it balances lightly and soars off into the air, and is repeated to slow or quick time as the music determines. Then the last movement of the dance is taken with dancers side by side, body slightly forward and hands pointing toward the earth. Slow steps are taken, for this represents the descent of the aeroplane, and as the music finally stops the dancers find themselves back to back, with hands clasped and outstretched—the aeroplane safe and steady on the ground. Colonel Frank Johnson would be an invaluable instructor in the new dance.

Potter's Marriage

Formal announcements of Captain Ashton Potter's wedding at Colorado Springs are being received by friends in this city. He was wedded within a few hours of the signing of the final divorce decree, to Mrs. Grace Depew, herself a divorcee, her former husband having been Ganson Depew, said to be a nephew of the New York Senator. She was Miss Goodyear of Buffalo, and her first husband is a member of all the clubs there. Captain Potter, whose first wife's divorce was secured in New York, was a nephew of Bishop Potter, a fact which the newspapers are not permitted to forget when he figures in them, and yet the Bishop once said, in speaking of this division of the Potters: "Ye are the clay, we are the Potters." James Brown Potter is his uncle, and his father was one of the Howard Potters. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War Ashton Potter was having a rough time of it in the Klondike. He tried to get into the Rough Riders, and, being unsuccessful, enlisted with the First New York and went to Manila, where he switched to the regulars and became a second lieutenant in the Fourth Cavalry. In Yokohama, ten years ago, he married Miss Mary McNutt, whose father was a member of the police commission here. Since then he has stuck closely to the Pacific Coast. He is now in New York on his honeymoon.

The Flag Room a Palace Feature

When the Palace first adopted the pleasing custom of hoisting the national flag upon the arrival of foreign diplomats as its guests only a few flags were needed. But now the flag room of the Palace is almost as complete as that of a first class battleship and the official representative of almost any government in the world is sure to be welcomed with his own flag at the mast head. Last week, however, the Palace was almost caught napping, not in the matter of having the flags but in the question of finding a place for them. The Palace at present is equipped with three flag staffs. When His Excellency Ching Yang Tang arrived from Washington the dragon flag of China was hoisted. This took two of the masts, for on one the Stars and Stripes floats in every sort of weather. On Friday Prince Tsai Toa arrived and the pennant of the royal house was run up on the same staff as the flag of the Empire. That same night the Minister from Portugal, Viscount D'Arte who came from Washington to be present at the banquent given at the Palace to the Portuguese Admiral, arrived and the flag of Portugal was broken out on the third staff. A few minutes later word was received that a prominent member of the Japanese government was in the party which had just arrived and that he was coming to the Palace and the management was in a quandary where to hoist his flag. This was settled when he decided to go to the Fairmont and in a few minutes the white and red emblem of the Mikado was flying on that house. When President Taft was at the Fairmont last year his flag was flung from the highest mast and now the Palace has just added to its collection a new official flag that will be in frequent use. This is the pennant of the Governor. Few people realize that we have a Governor's flag and the Palace will be helping to teach State pride as well as showing a nice courtesy by displaying it when the chief executive is in the hotel.

In the Social Spotlight

Among the distinguished visitors at the Palace this week was Dr. Seward Webb and party of New York. Dr. Webb is one of the most important men in the affairs of the New York Central Railroad, a director in a dozen or more great enterprises and has been spending the winter at Del Monte as is his custom. In the party are Dr. and Mrs. Seward Webb, W. S. Webb Jr., H. Walter Webb, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence and Mr. and Mrs. James H. Purdy.

The broad cosmopolitanism of the Fairmont Hotel was aptly illustrated last week by the arrival of the party of prominent Japanese merchants and business men who came in on the Chiyo Maru and made the Fairmont their home while in this city. In the hotel at the same time were representatives of the richest and most fashionable families in the country. Among these were Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan and her daughter of New York and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt who was just preparing to return to the East. While the ladies of the Japanese party were being entertained at tea by Mrs. N. Nagai, wife of the consul general of San Francisco, the ladies of the Morgan party were also enjoying themselves in the Laurel Court.

Among the late arrivals at the Fairmont were Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Simpson and Miss Simpson who came up from Pasadena en route to their home in the East. Mr. Simpson is associated with D. R. Plumer, manager of the Hotel Green at Pasadena and also Briar Cliff Manor and other summer hotels in the East. Mr. Simpson is manager of the Hotel Edgemore at Greenwich, Connecticut. While in this city they were entertained by Mr. Charles Cooke with whom they have been close friends for a long time.

Although the scattering of the ships to the North and South has in a measure reduced the number of those in the "Service Set" at the Fairmont, the nucleus of that delightful coterie still remains and attracts the transient member of the service who comes to the city. Among the recent additions to the "Service Set" at the Fairmont are Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Glassford, U. S. N., Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Biello, U. S. N., Dr. Tucker Smith, U. S. N., Dr. and Mrs. C. P. Kindelberger, D. Kindelberger and wife, U. S. N.

The number of parties traveling to the coast in private cars has been greater this winter than ever before and the Fairmont has had the honor of entertaining a great many who travel in this luxurious manner. Among the late arrivals was the party of Mr. Thomas DeWitt Cuyler, a director in the Santa Fe railroad who has been making a leisurely journey about the coast in his private car. With Mr. Cuyler were Wallace W. Atterbury and Robert C. Drayton.

Over three hundred members of the Hotelmen's Mutual Benefit Association arrived at Del Mont Sunday evening on three special trains. Many of the members were accompanied by their wives, making a very jolly party. Monday they spent a happy morning on the scenic drives returning to Del Monte for luncheon and early in the afternoon the specials carried them on to the city.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado include Mrs. J. W. Goodwin, Miss Peterson, Miss Holton, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Holton, Mrs. B. Y. Kron, Hattie J. Thompson, Miss H. Lillis, De Putron Gliddon, G. Marshall Dill, M. C. Sloss, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. O'Hara, Mr. and Mrs. Kunan and the Misses Kunan.

Mrs. K. Simpkins, accompanied by her maid, arrived at The Peninsula last week for the summer.

Dr. Beverly MacMonagle, the note surgeon who has been ill for almost a month, is at Del Monte with Mrs. MacMonagle in search of rest and recreation.

Mrs. F. L. Birch of Los Angeles is at Del Monte with her maid.

G. Earl Henkell of the firm of Henkell and Company, wine merchants of Wiesbaden, Germany, is at Del Monte. He is on a tour of the United States.

Among the well known San Franciscans who spent the week-end at Del Monte were Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Selfridge, Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Nichols, Master Herman D. Nichols and Mr. Will B. Tubbs.

Mrs. John Coryell has taken apartments at Del Monte for herself and children and will be there for some time. Mr. Coryell plans to run down regularly for the week end. Last Sunday they all lunched en famille at Pebble Beach Inn.

Mr. J. R. Howell of the real estate firm of Baldwin & Howell, was a guest at The Peninsula last week.

Miss Bina Grow, a society girl of Oakland, is the guest of her grandparents, the C. A. Grows, at The Peninsula for the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Isley of Milwaukee are spending the week end at the Vendome.

WICKHAM HAVENS INCORPORATED, 1212 Broadway, Oakland, California

Mrs. F. F. Low and daughter, accompanied by their maid, were among the early arrivals at The Peninsula. The Lows will spend the entire summer at the hotel.

Mr. R. B. Lindsay joined Mrs. Lindsay at The Peninsula last week. The Lindsays will be all summer guests at San Mateo's fashionable hostelry.

Mrs. F. G. Atkinson entertained during the past week at a prettily appointed luncheon at the Hotel Victoria where she is a guest for several weeks.

Mrs. B. N. Rowley and Mrs. J. O. B. Gunn were among the week's dinner hostesses at the Hotel Victoria.

A party of Chicago visitors who are registered at the Hotel Victoria during a stay in San Francisco includes Mrs. W. E. Main, Miss Julia Main and Miss Violet Fraser.

Mrs. G. T. Easterday and Miss Easterday of Watsonville are in town for a few days, and are guests at the Hotel Victoria.

Dr. H. L. Benepe of Palo Alto is visiting his sister-in-law, Mrs. J. L. Benepe, at the Vendome.

Miss Carpentier and her father, Mr. A. Carpentier of San Francisco, are visiting from Mrs. Capt. Thos. Young at the Vendome.

Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Fritz with Miss Fritz and E. N. Fritz motored down to the Vendome from San Francisco for the week end.

Mrs. W. E. Shedd and Miss Alice Shedd of Danville, Ill., with Mrs. Rush Winslow of Appelton, Wis., are spending the month at the Vendome.

Recent arrivals at the Potter are A. Rattray, B. F. Gray and wife, G. McNelly, San Francisco; Jas. D. Bridges, Philadelphia; S. Back, New York; F. H. Montgomery, San Francisco; Mrs. T. W. Late letters from Miss Ethel Shorb announce her arrival in Paris after a delightful visit in Dresden. She will go to England with Mrs. E. C. Locke to spend several months. Miss Ann Wilson, aunt of Miss Ethel Shorb, will return to America by May 26 as her favorite nephew, Lieutenant George Patton, U. S. A., will be married to Miss Ayers at the country home of the Ayers near Boston on that date. Miss Ethel Shorb will continue her travels under the chaperonage of Mrs. Locke. Preston Locke, son of Mrs. Locke who graduated with high honors at Columbia College, will attend a course of lectures at Oxford.

Mrs. Edwin L. Griffiths of Ross Valley will leave in May for the East where she will attend the graduating exercises at Yale, her son being one of the graduates. Later they will sail for a tour abroad, expecting to be away several months.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCormick have returned from Los Angeles to their home in Gough street. Mrs. McCormick was formerly Florence Cole.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Kains entertained a bevy of young people all in their early teens at a card party last Saturday evening at their home in Francisco street. Pretty prizes and dainty refreshments closed an enjoyable evening.

Mrs. Robert N. Graves left last week for St. Helena accompanied by her two young grandsons. She will be away all summer. Mr. Graves has been very ill for the past four months. The physicians hold out little hope for his recovery.

Miss Harriet Pomery was hostess during the week at a delightful luncheon at the home of her parents in Clay street.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sullivan's home was visited by the stork last week. The little son is the fourth child in the family. Mrs. Sullivan was formerly pretty Kate Ivancovich. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have taken the Johnson house in Ross Valley for the summer.

A Boost for the Rabbi

Some time ago a young rabbi arrived in this city to take charge of one of our most fashionable synagogues. One of the gentlemen who were instrumental in bringing him here was formerly a distinguished wholesale merchant, but he is now retired from business. He has served the city well as a supervisor and also as a grand juryman. One day he was expatiating on the merits of the new rabbi to some of his friends in the bar of the swell hotel where he makes his home. The list of virtues which he attributed to the rabbi was as long as Homer's catalogue of the ships. Finally he capped the climax by saying: "And the best of it all is that he doesn't look a bit like a Jew."

Getting His Money's Worth

A well known lawyer who for years has been a thorn in the side of Public Administrator "Billy" Hynes on account of his success in digging up absent heirs was lunching one day in a cheap restaurant. The waiter had brought his order and our lawyer had nearly completed his meal. Suddenly he pounded violently on the table and roared for the waiter. The waiter hastened to the table. "Waiter," cried the lawyer, "bring me a fork. I'm entitled to it."

Saving the Italian Colony

There is a certain distinguished lawyer who usually figures in all the litigation of our wealthy Italian-Americans. Like a great many other successful lawyers he lives up to the last cent of his income and is frequently pinched for money. One day he took down the telephone receiver and called up a prominent Italian warehouseman. "Mr. F———," he said, "I would like to see you immediately at my office on a matter of the most vital concern to the entire Italian colony of San Francisco." The warehouseman was at the lawyer's office within fifteen minutes. "Mr. F———," blandly explained the lawyer, "it is most gratifying to me that you should respond so quickly. I wish that you would accommodate me with a loan of fifty dollars."

A Knotty Problem

A distinguished lawyer who is eloquet to his famous index finger tip was standing recently at the entrance to the ball room at the Fairmont, surveying the beautiful women who were waltzing to the strains of the "Merry Widow." Finally he removed his eyeglass the better to point his remark and turning to a friend at his side declared: "Whenever I gaze on a scene of beauty like this I am tempted to ask, Why did the Creator make woman so fair and man so frail?"

He Outdid Lincoln

One of our most promising young attorneys edited the college paper while he was at the University of California and as a veracious editor bestowed a great deal of praise upon an oration which he delivered at Berkeley one legal holiday. His brother who is also a lawyer was sceptical about that oration. "Speaking as a brother and not as an editor, Dick," he said, "did you really deliver a good speech?" "On the square, Tom," responded Dick, "it was a masterpiece. Why, it contained ten more words than Lincoln's Gettysburg address."

Kelcey and Shannon Up-to-Date

When last I saw Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon they were playing "The Idlers" at the Alcazar. "The Idlers" is an old-fashioned play by Haddon Chambers and Kelcey and Shannon attacked it in a thoroughly old-fashioned way. That seemed natural enough, since Kelcey and Shannon had come to be regarded as old-fashioned players, the relicts of an epoch that had passed into history. And now behold them back in our midst with the thoroughly up-to-date Bernstein drama of "The Thief." Kelcey and Shannon are so modern in "The Thief" that one wonders why they should ever have exposed themselves to the deadly accusation of being behind the times. Yet there used to be good reason for so regarding them. They did not seem to keep pace with the procession as John Drew and other old time favorites have done. But now they are abreast of the times, giving a modern play in the modern manner, modernity, mind you, being a matter of years and not of decades in theatrical chronology. "The Thief" is bound to conjure memories of Margaret Illington, even for those who did not see her in the role. Not having had that pleasure, I am happily free from the necessity of instituting a comparison between the retired star and Miss Effie Shannon. I did have the good fortune to see Miss Irene Vanbrugh in the part, but still I refrain. Miss Shannon is not the equal of Miss Vanbrugh any more than Mr. Kelcey is the peer of George Alexander who was the original English-speaking "Richard Voysin." Miss Shannon is a woman of great personal attractiveness and of fine dramatic ability, so she may be judged on her own merits. That her light has been for several years hidden behind a bushel of wornout plays may be blamed on her managers, for in "The Thief" she is surprisingly good. The second act of this play makes strenuous demand on the versatility of an emotional actress and I failed to see wherein Miss Shannon fell short. She sustained the burden of her role easily and sent the thrill of every development in the situation across the footlights with convincing forcefulness. Mr. Kelcey is not as good an actor as Miss Shannon; his temperament is rather phlegmatic and his method lacks elasticity. He is a capable actor of great experience and nothing more. Fortunately his part is subordinated to that of Miss Shannon, in accordance with the intention of the dramatist. The other members of the small cast are uniformly good, Arthur Lawrence as the detective supplying a particularly pleasing interpretation of his part.

—Edward F. O'Day.

Still After George Bernard Shaw

The London critics simply cannot let George Bernard Shaw alone. While affecting to despise his productions, they write reams of copy to prove that they are untrue to life. Pretending not to take anything he does seriously, they yet cannot affect a bantering manner in dealing with him. It looks as though the irritating Irishman has gotten on their nerves; even on the steady nerves of Max Beerbohm. Casting about for terms with which to describe Shaw's latest production called "Misalliance," Beerbohm uses "the keen and unremitting north-east wind" as a symbol of the Shavian brain and would have "the dust and other remnants" which the nor'-easter blows into one's eyes stand for "the staleness of the characters and ideas which Mr. Shaw fragmentarily reproduces from his past work." Surely this is going far afield for figures of a damnatory character. Is it clever? Is it convincing? Does it not give Mr. Shaw the right to despise the critics who affect to despise him? Mr. Beerbohm is out of patience with Shaw's picture of an intellectual but neurotic youth. It seems that an intellectual but neurotic youth in Shaw's latest says to the father of the girl he wishes to marry: You're very full of beef today, aren't you, old boy?" Mr. Beerbohm says he has never met an intellectual but neurotic youth who would say that. The intellectual but neurotic youths he knows have more manners. Perhaps Shaw might answer that they cannot be very neurotic. Mr. Beerbohm also takes exception to this youth's lovemaking. The youth tells his papa-in-law-to-be that he will marry the daughter if the settlement is satisfactory. Don't Englishmen talk like that to prospective papas-in-law? The Englishmen who come to America to capture heiresses do, if we may believe what we are told. There is a scene in the play which Mr. Beerbohm thinks Shaw must have thrown in without thinking. Imagine Shaw doing anything of the kind! He probably thought that it would irritate Mr. Beerbohm and other critics and constructed it with unusual thoughtfulness for that malign purpose. Certainly he has succeeded.

Grace George at the Columbia

Grace George will be seen at the Columbia for two weeks commencing on Monday night, with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The new comedy in which she is to appear is called "A Woman's Way" and its author is Thompson Buchanan, a young newspaper man who also has to his credit "The Intruder." Being "A Woman's Way" the play ought to be full of surprises to mere man; also it ought to be brimming over with comedy. It is a tale of a wife who wins back her husband after they have drifted apart. He fancies he has fallen in love with another, and when a man fancies such a thing it is apt to be serious. The "other one" is a rich and fascinating Southern widow, and while the two are automobiling they meet with an accident and the newspapers print full and detailed accounts of the affair. Every friend and relative is on tiptoe expecting a divorce, but the wife is not made of conventional clay and she proceeds to show her courage in facing the situation. Loving her husband she believes his infatuation for the "other one" to be nothing more than passing. Instead of leaving the field to her rival she refuses to budge from her hearth and home and takes the breath out of everyone else concerned by inviting the widow to her house. The widow comes, sees and the wife conquers. There

The Damrosch Symphony Concerts

The greatest season of orchestral concerts this city has ever enjoyed will be the eight to be given at the Garrick by the orchestra of the New York Symphony Society under the direction of Mr. Walter Damrosch. Four eminent vocal artists, Mme. Sara Anderson, Mme. Van deer Veer, Mr. Reed Miller and Mr. Marcus Kellerman accompany the organization and will be heard in some of the great works to be offered. The first program will be given Sunday afternoon, May 8, and will be entirely Wagnerian. On Mondady night, May 9, a Tschaikowsky program will be given under the auspices of the Elizabeth Murison School Association. On Tuesday night a symphony concert with Brahms and Beethoven offerings is the attraction. The program for Wednesday night, May 11, will be under the auspices of the American Music Society and novelties by American composers will form half the program, the other half being devoted to foreign novelties. Friday night, May 13, in addition to a symphony program the music of the last Bohemian Club Jinks by Wallace A. Sabin, entitled "St. Patrick at Tara," will be produced under the baton of the composer with the Loring Club of seventy voices assisting. Saturday, May 14, will be devoted to a symphony concert with Beethoven's "Eroica" and Richard Strauss' "Don Juan" in the afternoon and another Wagner Festival at night with an entirely new program. The farewell performance will be given Sunday afternoon, May 15.

Ade Comedy at the Alcazar

George Ade's successful comedy, "Just Out of College," will be given its first presentation west of Chicago next Monday evening and throughout the week in the Alcazar. Folk who have had opportunity to compare and are competent to judge pronounce this laugh-getter even more amusing than "The College Widow" by the same author and much funnier than any of his other contributions to the stage. Its story is quaintly conceived and coherently narrated, its characters are familiar American types and its situations are both complicated and ludicrous. In brief the play is reflective of Ade at his best. John Ince will be Edward Worthington Swinger, the promoter, and Evelyn Vaughan is cast for the role of Caroline Pickering, his sweetheart. Other prominent characters are Septimus Pickering, the girl's father, Mrs. Luella Jenkins Pickering, her club-loving mother, Bernice McCormick, a stenographer who manages everybody who permits her to do so.

Wullner Week

"Wullner week" will begin Sunday afternoon when the distinguished song interpreter will begin a series of re-greeted the great baritone upon his first visit. Dr. Wullner's first Valencia Theater concert will be sung this Sunday afternoon. The second will be given Friday night, May 6, and the third and last Sunday afternoon. May 8. The Greek Theater "Witch's Song" program will be given Tuesday afternoon, May 3. This Sunday's program will have as its feature Schumann's Dichterliebe Cycle never before given, in its entirety, in this city. It has been one of the sensations of Dr. Wullner's recent New York and Boston appearances. Many other numbers never before given in the west by Dr. Wullner will be included. All numbers on next Friday's night's program will be new to San Francisco and will include the "Four Serious Songs," by Brahms. Sixteen classics and Wildenbruch's tremendous "Das Hexenlied" will be given at the Greek Theatre.

Baseball Skit at the Orpheum

Next week at the Orpheum the great baseball comedy by Bezeman Bulger, "Swat Milligan," will be presented. "Swat Milligan" is known far and wide as the man "who knocks the ball a mile." In Bulger's famous stories of his exploits he has eclipsed Baron Munchausen. Swat never fails at the critical time and always contrives to make the hit of the bill. The Avon Comedy Four introduce the idea of surrounding a quartette of excellent singers with a novel and humorous farce idea. Messrs. Goodwin, Coleman, Smith and Dale who constitute the quartette, will present what they call "The New School Teacher" which abounds in ludicrous situations and pleasant melody. A recent Orpheum importation, The Three Sisters Klos who recently finished a highly successful engagement at the London Hippodrome, will appear. They are considered Europe's most graceful and daring lady aerial gymnasts. John McCloskey, a young American tenor with a remarkable voice, will be heard for the first time in this city. When he sang recently at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, the "Herald" proclaimed him "The American Caruso." Next week will be the last of Anna Laughlin, "The Toyland Prima Donna," The Five Juggling Normans, Marshall Montgomery and of Elita Proctor Otis in the amusing comedy, "Mrs. Bunner's Bun."

Damrosch at the Greek Theater

Under the auspices of the Music and Dramatic Committee of the University of California the New York Symphony Orchestra under Damrosch will give two concerts at the Greek Theater. The first will be given next Saturday night, May 7, and will consist of instrumental and vocal excerpts from the Wagner music dramas. On Thursday afternoon, May 12, a symphony concert will be given at three in the afternoon. The soloists will be Mme. Van der Veer who will sing the aria from Gounod's "Sappho" and Mr. Marcus Kellerman who will offer Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers" with orchestral setting.

Music at Idora

But one more week remains before the Ferullo band completes its engagement at Idora Park in Oakland and departs for the East to fulfill other bookings. Half a million music lovers will have heard Ferullo by the time his engagement comes to a close. On Sunday Signor Pasquale Feis, the noted tenor, will be heard in a number of selections. He will sing Neopolitan folk songs and selections from the popular operas.

In the Limelight

The last of the Burton Holmes Travelogues will be given by Wright Kramer at the Garrick this Saturdady and Sunday nights. "Berlin" will be the subject.

The second and last week of "The Thief" by Charles Frohman's special company starts at the Van Ness on Monday night.

The Lambardi Grand Opera Company will close its engagement at the Columbia tomorrow night with a Mascagni Night. The program will include the Intermezzo from "L'Amico Fritz" by the orchestra; the entire performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana"; Duet for Calvi and Nadal from "L'Amico Fritz"; Hymn to the Sun from "Iris" by chorus and orchestra; Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" by the orchestra; Prologue from "Pagliacci" by Angelo Antola; Estor Addaberto, Guiseppe Maggi and other artists in special numbers.

Maude Adams is coming to the Columbia Theater on Monday, May 16, with her brilliant success, "What Every Woman Knows."

Jack Standing, brother of the well known star Guy Standing, is a member of the company appearing in support of Grace George. Henry Miller Jr. is also in the cast of "A Woman's Way."

The Actor's Fund Benefit to be held at the Columbia Theater week after next will attract widespread attention as those in charge have arranged for the presentation of a great program.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—The feature of the recent week's security market has been the appearance of declines with a moderate rally in the final dealings. A variety of causes or factors seemed responsible for the setback in values and much manipulation attended the decline. Exaggerated rumors of a let up in the steel and iron industry seemed to be the chief factor in creating much bear sentiment in the speculative world. Such rumors and talk we believe to be unwarranted. A slight setback in steel activity is not unnatural at this period but with a brilliant crop outlook we expect to see a resumption of large orders during late spring and early summer and we might say that the same applies to every other industry that is experiencing a lagging tendency today. Gold exports have continued but in moderate amounts and these have not affected the money situation here and are not likely to. The change in political sentiment in recent congressional elections has been a factor used by the bear contingent here. We believe, however, that while this matter is somewhat disturbing it is a subject that is not to be reckoned with at present and might be temporarily ignored. We are of the belief that the security market will do much better later on as the crop season advances.

Wheat—With the exception of a considerable decrease in farmers' marketings of wheat during the past week, the only changes in the general situation have been technical. The market changes, however, have been considerable. There have been rallies of 4⅞ for May, 3⅞ for July and 4 cents for September since mid-week. It may be worth noting that the same concentration of interest that was centered in May delivery and was largely responsible for the high prices of a year ago is generally conceded to be responsible for the comparative strength in September now. The long continued decline culminating in mid-week was not brought to a close by any accession of demand for wheat and flour either at home or abroad, but by the buying to secure profits of the leading shorts. These, finding too many small eleventh hour followers on the short side, have continued the buying campaign longer than might otherwise have been expected. The recent severe weather following the phenomenally mild and early spring will undoubtedly be of considerable benefit to the wheat crop, although probably disastrous to the fruit and to early vegetation.

Corn—Some little improvement has been seen in the last week in the corn situation from the holders' standpoint. Eastern stocks have been worn down materially, marketings from the interior have decreased, owners of cash corn have changed May delivery hedges over to July or September, and there is not now the probability of the overwhelmingly large and unsupported deliveries of May contract that were such an important influence against corn values a short time ago.

Cotton—Influenced by unfavorable reports, in fact stories of great damage by a killing frost throughout Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas, the prices on the new month crop jumped forty points. To a great extent this was due to the report of the necessity for re-seeding and that seed was scarce. Such reports as these are usually exaggerated but the persistence with which they come in makes it advisable to use great caution in trading, especially as it seems that the crop was further advanced in the eastern belt than it has been for years. Naturally the worst effect of the alleged disastrous news was on the month of October, for, without some sort of a cataclysm the price of cotton for the new months has been too high. The trade and even the public realizing this was selling it short in great quantities, and in consequence it was most susceptible to an onslaught and was freely bought in. If we thought that the reports of damage done were literally true, and that it was the worst in forty-one years, we would feel warranted in taking another stand as to the market but as it is, we do not yet feel justified in giving any such advice until something very much more reliable and definite is learned in regard to the situation.

Copper—The amount of copper on hand in London on April 15 was a distinct disappointment in view of the large falling off of exports in this country. Reduction for April to that date was only 2,755,200 pounds, compared with a total of 246,870,400 pounds. It is significant that, notwithstanding the curtailment of the production by the Butte mines forced by the strikes, and the knowledge that the Calumet and Hecla and Phelps-Dodge interests have not been outputting their full capacity, the total surplus of copper in this country and Europe was only 12,520,469 pounds less on the first of April than on the first of January when the total reached 385,970,913 pounds, the largest total yet reported. It is stated that there has been a large decrease in the invisible surplus here and abroad in the meanwhile, but if this is so, it simply means that the situation has been worse than has been shown by the official statements issued by the Producers Association and the foreign warehouses. The trouble is not with consumption but that production has been maintained and shows no sign of falling off and the figures do not indicate that the promised, or agreed upon curtailment has been effective, though we doubt that any such move was lived up to.

Local Securities—The eyes of the investing world are again turning toward California and our local market is already feeling the effect of large outside buying orders on our more prominent "issues." Pacific Gas and Electric, common and preferred, by reason of the recent financial statement showing over ten per cent earnings on the common stock, have advanced a number of points and now comes the news of the application of the Associated Oil for listing on the New York Stock Exchange. It is said that the oil company is earning in the neighborhood of fifteen per cent and this impression will certainly put Associated Oil in high favor in the East. It is thought that local investors would do well to pick up some of the Pacific Gas and Electric common and Associated Oil at their present prices before the flood of outside orders puts these stocks where they intrinsically belong.

Fifty-Six Years Ago

SAN FRANCISCO was the first place in California, the first place in the whole western part of America, the first place among all the communities surrounding the Pacific Ocean to have a gas works.

February 11th, 1854, there was a banquet at the famous old Oriental Hotel to celebrate the fact that that night San Francisco's streets were first lighted by gas.

The system originally consisted of twelve miles of mains and of two holders with a combined capacity of 160,000 cubic feet of gas. Today this same company has 544 miles of mains, and its enormous storage capacity is about to be increased by the erection in the Potrero of a mammoth steel tank about the height and bigness of the St. Francis Hotel and having a capacity of 5,000,000 cubic feet of gas as a direct supply for the outlying residence districts.

The price of gas in this city at first was $15 a thousand. By 1866 it had come down to $6, by 1870 to $4.50, by 1872 to $3.40. Now it is down to $1, which is the same price charged in Atlanta, Baltimore, Buffalo, Louisville, Minneapolis, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Richmond, St. Louis, St. Paul, Washington City and Seattle, although many of these great cities are very near to cheap coal deposits and all of them pay much lower wages than maintain in San Francisco.

In Butte gas is $2.50, in Salt Lake and in Austin (Texas) $1.70, in Columbus (South Carolina) $1.60, in Newport (Kentucky) $1.52, in Burlington (Iowa), in Williamsport (Pennsylvania), in Pueblo (Colorado), in Spokane, in Jacksonville (Florida), and in Galveston (Texas), $1.50; in Utica and in Albany (New York) $1.30, in Portland (Maine), in Council Bluffs, in Dallas and in Tacoma, $1.25; in Lincoln (Nebraska) $1.20, and in Omaha (Nebraska) and in Hoboken (New Jersey) $1.10.

In February of 1906 San Francisco first began getting gas made from California petroleum. Tests have shown that this substance, treated by the very advanced gas-making methods now applied to it, produces a quality of gas superior to that made from coal, and that San Francisco as a city has gas of a higher candle-power and heat value than any of the great cities of the east.

Reports also show that in the year 1908 just twice as much gas was used in the United States for cooking and heating as was used in 1902. The day of wood-stoves and coal-stoves in the kitchen is rapidly passing.

LOOKING DOWN MARKET STREET IN CIVIL WAR TIMES FROM THE FOOT OF O'FARRELL.

Splitting kindling, lugging coal or wood, carrying out ashes, getting up a little earlier every morning or hurrying home a little earlier every afternoon to start the kitchen fire, and always having to endure the unneeded heat after the cooking is done, all these disagreeable kitchen features are gradually going out of the domestic life of American womanhood.

They are going out because they mean drudgery, unnecessary dirt and annoyance, and hundreds of hours of extra work in a woman's lifetime.

They are passing because the modern gas range, with its broilers and its bake ovens, and the modern instantaneous water heater save so many hours and days in a woman's life, so much wear and tear upon her nerves and health.

And they are passing because, like the telephone, gas saves time, and life is made up of time used or wasted.

They are going out because, when intelligently used and not needlessly wasted, gas at the price charged in San Francisco is the cheapest of all the fuels, both for cooking and for heating.

the place for which we had started, and I noticed with gloomy forbodings that I was the object on which all eyes were turned. We found the door of our place of refuge closed! I heard shouts in the distance, and despair began gradually to steal over me. At this moment, when I was about giving up all for lost, a horseman came dashing toward us at full speed mounted on a magnificent animal beautifully caparisoned. He reined up in front of us and springing to the ground said to those who were with me: "the party is made, and the hunt is up for him," pointing to me. I recognized the speaker at once. It was Jack Power. Bandit and Destroying Angel though he may be, he was my guardian angel then, and may Heaven which sent him to my succor be merciful to him in his hours of need. I had seen him in San Francisco in 1849 and he recognized me at once. "Judge," said he, "there is no time to be lost. Will you trust yourself to me? I will protect you as far as I am able."

Parkinson and Dennison did not want me to leave them, but I knew Power's desperate courage well, and would have chosen him out of the whole State for a partner in a hopeless fight. Something prompted me to at once assent to his proposal and I did so. In an instant we were gone, leaving my companions standing in the street, and in less than three minutes Dennison was arrested, but I had vanished. Jack ran with me about twenty yards up a street at right angles with the one in which he found us, passed me through the window of a house, rolled me up in about forty yards of carpeting he found lying on the floor, told the woman of the house in Spanish what he had done, cautioning her to say nothing and then rushed out and joined in the pursuit after me louder than the loudest; while the woman quietly took her seat in the doorway and commenced to sing. It was all done in less time than it has taken me to tell it. I had, in an instant as it were, been snatched from certain death!

The pack was now in full cry, and as I lay in the carpet, how wildly my heart beat as I heard them approach nearer and nearer, and how sweetly hope would whisper to me as the noise of the hunt receded! As I afterward learned, there were at least one hundred men in the pursuit; some mounted and some on foot, armed with guns, pistols and swords. All the idlers, loafers and scum of Santa Barbara had joined in the "hue and cry." But an instant and they thought their hands were on me, in another I had vanished like a dream, and none save two in all that city could say where. They could not realize when they picked up my coat and waistcoat which a moment before I had dropped in my flight that I was not in them. The din was terrible; the tramping of hoofs and yells of the mob as the chase swept pell mell up one street and down another; the men shouting, and the women (naturally prone to the side of the weak) bespattering them with most unsavory epithets whose bitterness can only be expressed in the Spanish tongue; now roaring past the very house in which I was lying, now dying away in the distance, all contributed to make up the most fiendish and unearthly howl that ever had rung in my ears. And there I lay with palpitating heart; they ransacked Santa Barbara but came not to me. Jack Power was leading them!

At length, as I afterward learned, the Hon. Pablo de la Guerra, whose inherent chivalry of nature could not permit him to sympathize with such fierce persecution of an old man not yet proven to be guilty of crime, fearing that, if this hot pursuit was continued much longer, I must be captured and delivered up to the mercies of a ruthless mob, started the report that a man had been seen running into the tules adjoining the garden of his house, and that I was probably the fugitive. The blood-hounds, biting at once at the bait surrounded the house and grounds, and set fire to the tules, the sheriff of the county himself applying the torch. Some one expostulated with the sheriff, pointing out to him that if I was really in there now that the tules were surrounded I could not escape, and by firing it he exposed me to the horrible death of being burned alive. The expostulation was of no avail, however; he did not stay his hand.

At least two hundred persons rushed into the garden to see my burned and blackened corpse taken from the fire, and more than one of them doubtless anxious to rob it. I had forgotten to mention that the miserable reptile called the "white pig," had circulated, in order to whet the fangs of my pursuers, the ridiculous story that the Vigilance Committee had offered ten thousand dollars for my body dead or alive, the Governor five thousand, and that I had five thousand about my person. The mob, in their anxiety to capture me, had done immense damage to Don Pablo's garden; breaking down fruit trees, and trampling the flowers under foot, and indeed at one time the premises of my friend were likely to be destroyed by fire. Finally, becoming convinced that they had been on the wrong scent, and reluctantly coming to the conclusion that I had got clear away from the town, they slunk back to their kennels, followed by a parting malediction from the women. All this time I of course was ignorant of what was going on, and from the glare and smoke which I could see in the sky through the breathing aperture of my carpet, I thought the town was on fire. I lay still though, preferring to be scorched a little and even burned rather than fall into the hands of that cruel mob. I had also been represented to them by the "white pig" as a desperado, a perfect demon; they only hunted me in fifties and hundreds, and I doubt not had they seen me, death would have been my portion on the instant. It sometimes seems to me unaccountable how such bitter malignity could have been so suddenly engendered in the hearts of men whom I had never wronged or injured; but the whole history of our race shows that a taste for cruelty and a delight in the misery of others are moral diseases easily contracted by minds not naturally ferocious, and, when once acquired, are as strong, if not stronger, than any of the propensities with which we are born.

I cannot say that I forgive that "white pig" and his associates their murderous persecution of me; that of course I will never do. But I will freely say that I rejoice from the bottom of my heart, on their account, that they have escaped the frightful responsibility to which they would have been held at the judgment bar of the Almighty, if on that day their myrmidons had found me.

But to return to my story. It was one of the hottest days I ever experienced. The heat of the carpet and the excitement nearly killed me. I was tormented, too, by myriads of fleas of which the carpet was full. I lay still, however, for I considered that to move was death. After I had laid there about an hour and a half, I heard footsteps in the room, and presently Jack's voice. I implored him in mercy to give me some brandy and water for I was nearly fainting with suffocation. He replied "lie still or directly you won't have a throat to drink with!" and immediately passed out again. I suffered on for another hour and a half, and by that time it was quite dark. The woman of the house lit a candle, and commenced washing her children and putting them to bed. Presently I heard voices at the door and could distinguish that of Power speaking in English. A party wanted to enter the house and search it. My protector told them there was no one there, and it was of no use to disturb the children. They said they had searched every other house without opposition, and they did not intend to make an exception of this. I now thought that my time had come, and, slipping out of the carpet, I silently cocked my pistol, grasped my knife and making a short prayer to Heaven, stationed myself just inside the door-post within two feet of the man who was asking admittance, determined to sell my life as dearly as possible. Power, however, as Providence would have it, managed to make such resistance to their entrance that they finally walked away.

I had forgotten that there was an open window behind me, and, as there was a light burning in the room, they had only to turn the corner of the house to see me standing against the door-post. The instant they had turned from Jack he turned his face to me and whispered, "under for your life!" I dropped and crawled under the bed and in the same moment they passed the open window. I again begged for water and he pushed to me with his foot the basin in which the children had been washed, and I plunged my face into it and drank it all, and never in my life before did I taste so refreshing a draught as that filthy water was to me.

As soon as the footsteps of my pursuers had died away, Jack assisted me to get out of the window, and getting out after me, ran with me some thirty yards, and laid me down on my face in a sort of garden, telling me that when the moon went down he would come and take me to a place of safety. When he left me it was about half past eight o'clock, and the moon was then two hours high. The town of Santa Barbara had gone back to its wonted quiet, and the excitement of the day had been forgotten in the general conviction that I had managed to escape from the trap into which I had that morning entered. Music and dancing were going on, and all the world seemed happy but me. There I lay, with trembling limbs and beating heart, almost unmanned. My escape from death seemed to me a dream which I could not realize, because I dare not believe that I would ultimately be spared from the dreadful perils that surrounded me.

And who shall describe the agony I underwent in that long, lonely watch? He who has not stood as it were in the full flush of life and gazed into his tomb—he who has not felt that a breath—a shadow—the cracking of a twig might open to his burning eye the mystery of his Hereafter—can form no idea, from mortal pen, of the weird phantoms that peopled those two dreadful hours!

It was a heavenly night. A cool breeze played gently round my throbbing temples, but it brought no balm to me. I could only feel in its freshness the icy hand of death; and mistook its fragrance for the odor of the charnel house. Flowers were springing round me, but, as they waved in the pale moonlight, I only saw funeral plumes. A little stream was trickling near me, and its gurgling ripple broke like a death rattle on my ear. I heard the guitar and tamborine in the distance, and, as the sighing night wind brought them down to me, accompanied with light-hearted beauty's laugh, I only heard a death-wail and a dirge. All around me spoke of death. So fearfully had my mind been wrought upon by the horrors of that day, that I really was, in fancy, on the confines of the spirit land; and, as is always the case, when the spirit either is, or fancies itself about to wing its flight from earth, the phantoms of the dim past floated before me as vividly as if but yesterday I had passed them on the stream of Time, instead of years and years ago. I saw my poor old mother (who died during this persecution of me) as I had seen her in my childhood; and so startlingly distinct was the vision, that but a day appeared to fill the gap which years had made. Wife, children, brothers, sisters, and all my kindred and long buried friends of other days, passed in bright review before me; and, as the clear, cold moon looked down into my very heart, every action, good or evil, of my past life seemed to be searched out from the rubbish closets of memory, and held up before me as vividly as though each one was but the event of yesterday. And, as I watched that weary moon sink gradually to its setting; that moon whose light had often seemed to me in youth so lovely, but for whose waning now my throbbing heart so longed; I could look it bravely in the face, and declare to the Being who placed it there, by all my youthful joys that moon had witnessed, and by the agony of soul which its departure would take from me that night, that I was, in heart and in deed, innocent of the crime for which I was persecuted.

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the Theatre, attending Receptions, when shopping, while traveling and on all occasions should carry in her prse a booklet of Gouraud's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes.

It removes dirt, soot and grease from the face, imparting a cool delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of Five Cents in stamps or coin. F. T. Hopkins, 37 Great Jones Street, New York.

At length that dreadful watch was over. The moon had sunk below the horizon, and under the pall of darkness which its setting left, I thanked a merciful God that he had guided no enemy to my place of concealment. It was not long before I heard footsteps, and presently Power appeared accompanied by two Spaniards. He told me, in a whisper, that for the present they would take me to a hiding place, and then, for a consideration in money, which I there agreed to pay them, they were to return for me at three o'clock in the morning and conduct me to a place of safety. I grasped Power by the hand and went with the Spaniards. They conducted me to a long, low adobe building with a balcony in front of it, on the outskirts of the town, and there left me, promising to return as had been agreed upon, at three o'clock. Not long after they had gone, I was joined by two others. They entered the house apparently as though they had a right there; and, indeed, the place looked as though it might be their den. It was a villainous looking hole, and if ever robber and assassin was written on the human countenance, it was written on the faces of these two men. They had a lamp with them, and by its light I saw that one of them had been drinking. They had apparently been informed of my being there, and after scrutinizing me very closely endeavored to enter into conversation with me. I could only reply to their questions by signs and here and there a word of broken Spanish. One of them at length espied a very pretty scarf about my neck (it was about the only piece of decent apparel I had left, and was the gift of a lady) and taking hold of it jerked it from me, saying: "V no quiere presente me este?" It was useless to remonstrate with the scoundrel for such a trifle, and of course I let him keep it. He then made me understand that he wanted to know if I was armed, whereupon I showed him that I was. He then wanted to know where my money was, and I told him that my amigo had it. He next proposed to exchange coats with me. Mine was a policeman's uniform buttoned up in front. He gave me to understand that his old coat, which was in rags, was a much better disguise for me. I would have given the rascal the coat rather than have a noisy difficulty with him just then; but in the breast pocket of it I had a purse of gold which I was determined he should not see; and of course to exchange coats without taking it out was out of the question. After considerable palaver he said to me: "V no quiere presente me uno peso?" I took gold pieces tied up for my current expenses—as I did not care to exhibit my purse on all occasions—and handed him a dollar. He let it fall on the floor either by accident or design and did not stoop to pick it up, saying: "Yo no quiere para plata, pero mucho para ora." I gave him a two dollar and a half piece, and then made him pick up the dollar, being fearful that if I did it myself he would stab me as I stooped, either in the back or neck, and then rob me. He at first refused to do it, but being determined to be trifled with no longer by the scoundrel, I covered him with my pistol and made him pick it up. I then gave him to understand that I wanted no more to say to him, and making him take what few old clothes he had hanging on a line in the building, I drove him into another room and fastened the door.

This fellow doubtless thought I was a robber or highwayman like himself, and that the object of that day's pursuit of me had been to deliver me up to justice for offences in that line, consequently that I was a legitimate subject to demand toll from, in the way of "hush money." Indeed, I am not astonished that the wretch should have taken that idea into his head, for the Santa Barbara mob had been taught to regard me as the fiend incarnate, guilty of every crime in the decalogue, and, instigated by the hope of reward had pursued me on "general principles," utterly ignorant of the real object of my persecutors.

It was now getting quite cold, and I sat myself down on the earth floor of the house, anxiously awaiting the coming of the Spaniard whom Power was to send to conduct me out of danger. Theis signal was to be three raps at a back window.

Three o'clock came, as nearly as I could judge, and yet no one rapped. I still anxiously waited, thinking that perhaps something had occurred to change Jack's plan, and that I should shortly hear from him. At length day began to break and I could see through a crack in the window shutter that it was very foggy. I now made up my mind to remain no longer where I was. From the treatment I had received since entering the house I knew that I was in bad hands and feared that if I waited there during the coming day the villains would betray me for money. I also knew that the steamer from San Diego would pass up that day, and was of course aware that, if captured, I should at once be sent to San Francisco, and delivered over to the Vigilance Committee. I considered therefore that I ought by all means, to get into the mountains at once, and remain there, at least until after the steamer had passed up, even if I then had to return to the town. By that means my friends would have time to sue out a habeas corpus as it would take at least a week or ten days to send down after me, which I knew would be done, now that they had got on my true track. They had been egregiously humbugged by all the other reports my friend had started as to my whereabouts; and, having spent many thousands of dollars in various "wild goose chases," I supposed that they felt sufficiently sore to be very anxious to lay hands upon me. Accordingly I went to the window and endeavored to open it, but found that I had not sufficient strength to do so. I then went into the apartment where the two Spaniards were sleeping, and my entrance awakened one of them. The one, however, who had attempted to rob me had not yet slept off the fumes of his drunkenness, and I of course took no pains to awaken him. I made the other one understand that I could not open my window and wanted his assistance. He came and opened it for me, and I waited till he had gone back to his bed and then I got out. I threw my boots out before me, and it was with the utmost difficulty that I could follow them.

I was so stiff and sore that I could scarcely walk. It was now day-break, and I could hear the musical bells of the Catholic church chiming for matins. The fog was so dense that I could not see twenty yards before me. I did not know the direction of the mountains, and was compelled to strike out at "hap hazard." Presently I found myself getting into soft clay, and saw looming through the fog, the binnacle light of the surveying schooner which was anchored abreast of the town. I knew from this that I was getting on to the beach, and fearing that if I continued along it my footprints would lead to my capture, I at once turned and groped in the opposite direction. After walking some time I reached the foot of the Coast Range to the eastward of the city and commenced ascending it. After I had gone up some distance I ensconced myself in some thick furze, determined before proceeding further to take some rest. The sun was now fully up, and as the mists melted before his rays it bid fair to be a beautiful day.

As I sat looking down from my eminence my eye fell on the cross on the little Catholic church at the lower end of the town, and I was reminded of a religious duty, too often neglected by me in bygone days of comfort and luxury. I had been instructed by my poor mother in the religion of the church, and falling on my knees, I made the sign of the cross and thanked God for His merciful kindness.

A Name that Stands for Something

LOZIER

THE LOZIER SELLS AT A HIGHER PRICE THAN ANY OTHER MOTOR CAR BUILT

The average price received for every Lozier car sold during the past two years was $5030 the highest average price obtained for any make of car built. In other words, the product of the Lozier factory has commanded a higher price per car than that of any other manufacturer.

The first Lozier model, built in 1904, sold at $5000 and the best Lozier car has since that time never been sold for less.

The Lozier Motor Car is surely worth the price obtained for it or it would not continue to command its price year after year. Other cars have been sold at Lozier prices, or higher, but only for a limited time; a fictitious list price must give way to the Law that inevitably forces values to seek their proper level. In spite of the fact that the Lozier car commands a higher average price than any other car built, the business of the Lozier Motor Company during the past two years has increased 167 per cent, a greater percentage of increase than shown by any of the seven leading manufacturers producing cars which sell at $3500 and over.

The value of the Lozier car has been fixed, and has been proven by this splendid increase in business at these prices. Continuous advertising has not done it, for every one of the seven leading manufacturers referred to has spent vastly more money in advertising in the past two years than has been expended by the Lozier Company. What is the conclusion? That the Lozier car continuing in demand at a higher average price than any other motor car, must logically be the best car. We hesitated to use this much abused term, but we sincerely believe that the LOZIER is the one car which proves to warrant the claim being made.

Auto Notes

After a strenuous week spent in arranging the details of handling the successful Shriner's Race Meet at Ingleside, W. L. Hughson, president of the Standard Motor Car Company, left a few days ago for Byron Springs, making the trip in a Ford car.

Joe Nikrent, well known in local auto circles, is in San Francisco resting after his strenuous driving in the Los Angeles Motordrome meet. Nikrent brings many laurels up from the southern metropolis with him. He succeeded in setting four new world's records in his Buick for stock cars of the Buick class. Out of ten starts he won five first and three second places and the two times that he failed to place was because of tire trouble. On the last day of the meet he beat the world renowned speed-kings, Oldfield and DePalma, in the 100 mile free for all.

S. S. Boothe of Los Angeles and party, including H. O. Harrison, the well known auto agent, recently completed a fast trip from the southern city in a "Little Six" Winton. The party made the run to Santa Barbara easily the first day, and continued the following morning to Del Monte. The roads along the coast route were in fine condition and at times the speedometer registered sixty miles an hour.

Seven years' service from one set of Diamond Tires is the experience of Tharp Bros. of Athene, Ore., on a 1903 Winton. This concern has just written The Diamond Tire Co. that the two rear tires and the right front tire have never been off the wheels for repairs in the seven years of their constant service, while the left front tire was only removed last year on account of cuts. They further write that all the tires still look good for many more miles of service. This is certainly an exceptionally long mileage.

The Pioneer Automobile Co. is in receipt of a telegram from the Chas. B. Shanks Company of Cleveland, Ohio, reading as follows: "We are in need of Chalmers-Detroit Thirties, having sold our entire allotment. If you have any of this model you are not apt to need, kindly let us hear from you at once and we will be glad to make satisfactory arrangements for same." The Pioneer Company people look upon this telegram as a joke, inasmuch as they have been offering for the last sixty days a premium of $100 on Thirties and $150 on Forties.

"I want to look at a Lozier car exactly like the one sold to Mr. Mathewson of The Diamond Rubber Co.," said a prominent Oakland man to one of the salesmen of the Pioneer Automobile Company. The car referred to was a 1910 "Briarcliff" model. He was told that a car of this kind could be furnished him within the next thirty days and he immediately placed his order for one of them with the written agreement that the car should be exactly like the one referred to, which he had seen at the Country Club in Oakland. Two carloads of Lozier cars have left the factory this week.

Mr. E. R. Thomas, president of the Thomas Motor Car Co., has recently returned to Buffalo after his long stay in Florida and Cuba. He will very shortly move to his new country home at Niagara on the lake where he and his friends will enjoy his newly acquired yacht.

No better evidence of the successful campaign that S. G. Chapman has instituted for Oakland and Hupmobile cars could be given than the fact that he is now in the East trying to arrange with the factories for additional allotments of both these makes. Not only will he try to secure more 1910 cars but he will also negotiate arrangements for an unprecedented 1911 allotment.

Mrs. Laura P. Fuller has just taken delivery of a new Chalmers "40" Limousine in New York. This is said to be one of the most luxurious limousines ever turned out in this country. The body was made by Mauer & Co. of New York, which firm is second to none in body building.

The White Gasoline Car has won popularity with marvelous rapidity since its introduction. It is one of the cars most frequently seen throughout California. Among the recent purchasers of this make is J. W. Hanner of Fresno.

H. E. Doty, Pacific Coast manager of the White Company, and C. A. Hawkins recently took a rather remarkable tour in a White Gasoline toy tonneau car. Accompanied by F. D. Hawkins, Francis M. Wright and R. B. Houston they started for a fishing trip in the Santa Cruz Mountains. At Wright they picked up two more passengers and thus loaded, their little four passenger machine topped the difficult Santa Cruz Mountains without a single miss. The fishermen put the car up at the Hotel Redwood and thence took the stream. They succeeded in landing a nice string of trout among which was a steel head of seven and one-half pounds. They left the hotel at 6 a. m. Monday and made record time to San Francisco, arriving at exactly 9:14 a. m., thus covering the whole distance in 3 hours and 15 minutes. Doty and C. A. Hawkins alternated at the wheel.

J. W. Leavitt of the J. W. Leavitt Company went touring last Sunday and declares that he hit upon the most beautiful, smoothest and in all most desirable touring route in this vicinity. The course as he recommends it runs through Redwood City to Millbrae, thence to the Spring Valley Lakes and along them to the intersection with the San Mateo road, out this road which Leavitt declares wide and hard and white, to Half-Moon Bay. Here a most desirable lunch can be purchased at the Musconi Hotel. After lunch run south to San Gregorio, then to the left up the La Honda Valley and over the hill to Woodside. Thence to Redwood City and on to San Francisco making a tour of 100 miles. Leavitt who is a most enthusiastic tourist states that the roads are shaping up fine and that the coloring of the hills is exquisite. This, he says, is the most beautiful season of the year for driving the auto out into the country districts.

The Pioneer Automobile Co. reports the sale of a Chalmers "30" to Mr. C. A. Belli of Sonora, Cal. Mr. Belli left on Friday to drive the car through to his destination.

Mr. William H. Langdon, former district attorney in this city, was in the city last Friday long enough to select a new Chalmers "40" Pony Tonneau which he took with him upon his return to Modesto the following day.

B. S. Morton's E. M. F. car was recently equipped with Morgan & Wright Nobby Tread Tires by Weinstock Nichols Co.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Charles H. Blow, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of plaintiff continuously for more than one (1) year last past; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of April, A. D. 1910.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 20,653.

MARY E. NORMAN, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY E. NORMAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

FIRST PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street, distant thereon seventy-five (75) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Sanchez Street, thence running Easterly and along said Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Southerly ninety (90) feet; thence at a right angle Westerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

SECOND PARCEL.—Commencing at the point of the intersection of the lines of the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, thence running along the South side of Twenty-fourth Street in an Easterly direction fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles in a Southerly direction parallel with Vicksburg Street ninety (90) feet; thence at right angles in a Westerly direction running parallel with Twenty-fourth Street fifty (50) feet; thence along Vicksburg Street Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement.

THIRD PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street, distant thereon ninety (90) feet Southerly from the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, and running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Vicksburg Street Twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Vicksburg Street twenty-four (24) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet to the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that the title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 17th day of March, A. D. 1910.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8071, Dept. No. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of MATILDA WOLFF, Deceased.

William Wolff, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of MATILDA WOLFF, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of all of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes and in the manner therein set forth.

It is therefore ordered by the Hon. Thos. F. Graham, Judge of Department No. 10 of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 16th day of May, 1910, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate—of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said William Wolff, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of MATILDA WOLFF, deceased, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased MATILDA WOLFF at either private or public sale and as prayed for in said petition as shall be necessary for the best interests of said estate.

And that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Dated, April 11th, A. D. 1910.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed April 11th, 1910. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By E. B. Gilson, Deputy Clerk.

English Hotel Fad

England is given to fads of all sorts, and at the present time the tendency of the "nobility and gentry" to turn an honest penny is prominently shown in the ownership and management of hotels. Besides Lord Leitrim, several well-known people have gone into business in this direction. Lady Aberdeen is president of the Green Lady Hotel at Littlehampton, Sussex. This is arranged for workers, who are charged ten shillings a week for board and lodging. Lady Burton has built and fitted out a splendid hotel at Aviemore, which commands a fine view of the Cairngorm Range in Invernesshire, and the widowed Lady Augusta Orr-Ewing has started a first-rate hotel with good golf links at Dunskey, her home near Stranraer in Wigtownshire. Lord Dunraven has built a hotel for golfers close to Adare Manor, his place in Limerick, and Lord Inchiquin is the owner of a hotel at Arranmore, Milltown Malbay, also in Ireland. Then Lord Claud Hamilton, who is chairman of the Great Eastern Railway, takes a keen interest in the Sandringham Hotel at Hunstanton in Norfolk, and Douglas Tollemache, great uncle to Lord Tollemache, is much concerned in the welfare of the Felix Hotel, Felixstowe, which was built after the design of Helmingham Hall, Lord Tollemache's place in Suffolk.

The Right Age for Marriage

The "silly season" correspondence in the London newspapers is always amusing, if for no other reason than that it gives the unsophisticated, uncontrolled view of the average man and woman on subjects of primary and general interest, and thus, at any rate, serves as an index to the average mind. Not the least interesting point is what sort of topic serves to attract the amateur newspaper contributor—it must be one of immediate and pressing interest to almost everybody, and one on which everybody has his own ideas, or the supply of readable, sensible "letters to the editor" will fail. This being so, it is amusing to observe that the only sure, certain, and permanent "draw" in the way of subjects, unfailingly so year after year, is something about the sex! Other topics may be started, but they are soon run to earth—for a good, long course across country, breathless in pace and instinct with interest, the magic topic is "Woman."

"What is the Right Age for Marriage?" is the topic of the season. It was started by a famous tennis player, who gave it as her personal decision that twenty-five is the right age for a woman. Many of the correspondents propose as much as ten years later as the right age for a man. Such statements would have amazed our ancestors. It is still the law of the land that a girl can legally marry at twelve years old, and a boy at fourteen! A monstrous proposition it seems to most of us now, but it was, in actual fact, the age at which many of the upper classes in past days were tied for life to a wedded partner. Many even of our Queens, and other famous "great ladies," usually heiresses, were married at absurdly low ages, and not a few boys also were so tied in their mid-'teens. Matilda, our first Queen-regnant, for instance, was married at twelve to a great German potenate; Margaret of Anjou became the wife of Henry VI. at fifteen; and Isabella of France (Valois) was married to Richard II. when she was but nine. The last-named was, however, only nominally that King's wife, and at the age of eighteen, as a maiden widow, she was married again to her cousin, who was a lad of only fifteen. Fourteen was the age of Arthur, Prince of Wales, when he was wedded to Catherine of Aragon, and Francis, King of France, had only passed his sixteenth birthday by a month when he married Mary Queen of Scots. There would be no difficulty in filling a page with other notorious instances of the absurdly early age at which both boys and girls were disposed of in marriage by their elders in the good old days. Property and social position were the considerations that generally dictated such premature espousals.

But even in early Victorian days, twenty-five would have been held to be exceedingly late for a woman to find a husband. In this great matter twenty-five is now where eighteen was half-a-century or so ago. The many other occupations now available for young women, both unpaid (university education, for example), and wage-earning ones, prevent them from eagerly desiring a very early marriage; while the increased luxury and love of show of our social life at the same time makes marriage more difficult for young men. From any rational point of view, thirty-five is far too old for a man to marry; and there is really much to be said in favor of quite early marriages for both men and women. There is Shakespeare's argument that a young wife will "wear to" the opinions and tastes of her husband best; and there is the moral consideration of the fixity of the fancy and the settlement of the temper to earnest effort that the responsibilities attached to marriage should bring. But there is much to consider on the contrary—the better knowledge of what one wants in a married partner that comes with a more mature judgment than in the teens; the desirability of gaining some place in life before accepting the difficult burdens of matrimony; the desire for a few years' freedom; the far greater danger to the wife (shown by statistics) if she enters upon the effort of woman's noblest sphere, motherhood, before her own growth is finished and her constitution consolidated; and these latter considerations give about twenty-five as the best age. But, after all, the best age is largely a question of when "the Hour and the Man"—or the woman—may arrive together.

—The Britisher.

Pays for Her Own Dresses

In France the husband, being the recognized chief of the family, is responsible for all his wife's debts. This, so the Paris courts have just decided, does not apply to an Englishwoman who buys dresses in Paris. She must pay for them herself. In a suit brought by a firm of dressmakers against an Englishwoman English laws have just been successfully invoked by the prosecution, the court deciding in its favor and sentencing the woman in question to pay the amount due.

"John," said Mrs. Spenders, "I've got lots of things I want to talk to you about."

"Glad to hear it," snapped her husband; "usually you want to talk to me about lots of things that you haven't got."

FISK

TIRES

YEARS ago, at the beginning of its business, the Fisk Rubber Company laid down a policy which has since been steadfastly adhered to. That policy was to tell the truth about its products.

WE might claim to operate the largest automobile tire manufactory in the world—but we do not. We might maintain that we produce more automobile tires than any other concern—but we do not. We might publish broadcast the fact that the Fisk Removable Rim is used on more cars than any other make—but it is not. We might mislead the public into believing that the temporary and ofttime gratuitous tire equipment of cars at automobile shows is a reflection of a permanent choice—but it is not.

WE Do Claim, and we can prove our statement, to make The Best tire on the market today, barring none. We know the Fisk Removable Rim is the safest, quickest and best obtainable, and the only rim which works equally well to muddy and freezing conditions. Years of high-class manufacturing experience, a knowledge of the materials that go into our products, and the comparison with the wearing qualities of other makes, are some of the reasons we know in stating these facts we tell the truth.

FISK Quality Tires are made in four styles—Bolted-on, Clincher, Q. D. Clincher and Dunlop. We have established branches in the principal cities, where the motorist may find at all times a full stock of different sizes and styles and an intelligent repair department in charge of experts.

We ask each and every automobile owner to give Fisk Tires a trial. If not a full set, try a single tire. You will then be able to judge for yourselves.

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

H-O The Nation's Breakfast

The great American Nation is representative of every country on the globe; consequently there is a variety of tastes and preferences; but everywhere you will find that the universal breakfast dish is Oatmeal porridge.

But when you ask for oatmeal—be sure to specify "H-O"—the only steamed-cooked oatmeal.

Breakfast is the prelude to the day, and you want a food—appetizing, tempting and nourishing—to put you on your mettle to cope with the strenuous emergencies. H-O oatmeal supplies muscle-making and brain-building material. It is a concentrated oat product, complete in nutriment.

If your health is below par and your digestion faulty, eat H-O oatmeal and increase your health dividends.

A dainty dish for the breakfast table!

Do not confuse H-O oatmeal with the ordinary raw oats sold under the name of "Rolled Oats" or "Crushed Oats." H-O oatmeal is never sold in bulk; it is free from dirt, germs and all impurities.

H-O oatmeal is manufactured from the highest grade of selected stock. After removing all foreign matter, the meat of the Oat is subjected to a very high temperature, and by our own patented process is cooked for several hours under heavy steam pressure. This steam-cooking dextrinizes the starch and renders the oats easily digestible.

H-O oatmeal is ready for the breakfast table after from ten to fifteen minutes' boiling, and provides an inviting dish of sweet, clean, separate, tender kernels in place of sticky, soggy, indigestible mass obtained in cooking the usual "Rolled Oats."

Possibly the "other" kind may be cheaper; but as soon as you have tested and appreciated the quality of H-O oatmeal, you will gladly pay the few cents difference.

Gaynor and Hearst

The discretion which restrains a man from opening his mouth incautiously appears to be lacking in Mayor Gaynor. It is most indiscreet for a man unprepared for retaliation to attack another. From what we have read so far of the controversy between Mayor Gaynor and William R. Hearst we infer that the truculent New York official was guilty of a grievous error of judgment when he precipitated discussion of the Cahalan check incident. Failing to do any damage to his enemy he exposed joints in his own harness through which his wounds are now visible. So long as Mayor Gaynor was resolved to attack Hearst at the banquet of the Newspaper Publishers' Association he should have trained his batteries on points that are vulnerable. It is easy enough to score on the great exponent of yellow journalism, the distinguished acrobat of the political arena. Furthermore with all Mr. Hearst's agility there is a limit to his capacity for sidestepping. But Mayor Gaynor instead of overwhelming him with just criticism gave him some fine pretexts for self-applause. The check incident about which nobody outside of New York had any knowledge until Gaynor poured out his diatribe is now a matter with which the whole country is familiar. The militant Mayor, whom the Democracy of the nation was beginning to regard as available Presidential timber, is now on the defensive with his reputation at stake, and Mr. Hearst is posing plausibly at the object of a malevolent politician's spleen. Of course it is not to be taken for granted that Mayor Gaynor has been guilty of malfeasance. There may be another side to the story but nobody has any further interest in the matter.

The Moral Uplift

The widespread demand for more goodness in the world is producing irritations that threaten calamitous reaction. Too much moral uplift is causing men who have been in sympathy with moral movements to resent the far-fetched regeneration schemes of fanatical reformers. They realize that the passion for idealism in all the affairs of life is running riot; that the proponents of modern austerity and asceticism are unconsciously interfering with the plans of the Creator, inasmuch as they would extinguish temptation and thus make virtue the offspring of necessity. Given their way the advocates of the sour ascetic life would compel us to drag out our existence along the weary rut of barren days. They would make resurrection in life impossible by leaving us no cardinal sins to bury in the grave of a dead past. These benighted Puritans have a conception of life at immeasurable variance with that of the Christian saints to whose example they look for inspiration. They have yet to learn that records for personal purity are made rather by self-repression and discipline than by rendering temptation innocuous. No eunuch was ever given credit for sexual chastity. It is forbearance which is the touchstone of our virtue. It is temptation that tries the mettle of a man's heart. The only way that the good become better is under the purification of trial. The crown of life, we are told on Scriptural authority, is won by the man that endureth temptation. The aim of our uplifters is to make it impossible for man to strive for the crown, for they would eliminate that which he should endure.

The Revolt Against Prohibition

Not altogether due to dissatisfaction with the Administration at Washington was the Democratic sweep in a strong Republican district in New York the other day. There was dissatisfaction also with puritanical legislation at Albany. There has been so much of this legislation that even the farmers have begun to protest. According to the New York Sun, "If one half of what has been heard is correct a lot of folks are wearied of the uplift movement." The Sun quotes an expression of this sentiment thus: "We are being uplifted out of sight. It gets on your nerves this constant uplift idea. Just let us be plain human beings for a change." Murmurings of the revolt against the uplift movement have been heard in several States which were swept by the Prohibition wave some time ago. The Prohibition wave is subsiding. It is becoming apparent that the cure is worse than the evil. Bishop Thomas Gailer of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Tennessee, addressing a meeting of the Christian Social Union last week declared that the Probition measure which was forced through the Legislature of that State had "led to civic degeneracy." These are pretty strong words for a churchman. They are no stronger, however, than the words that have been uttered by other clergymen on the same subject. A Catholic divine in St. Louis recently commented on the absurdity of prohibiting all men from taking alcoholic stimulants because some men get drunk. To approve this principle, he said, would be to favor the abolition of everything that may be carried to injurious excess. But this argument makes no impression on Prohibitionists who are too dull to perceive that it is better from the moral standpoint to cultivate temperance than to enforce total abstinence. And now as a consequence of their frenetic enthusiasm movements to backfire them are being organized not only in this country but also in England which is again passing through one of its periodical moral spasms with the result, as Sir Thomas Dewar has pointed out, that there is a deficit of £4,000,000 in the British Excise. Sir Thomas has taken to the public platform to express his views of the Puritans, Pecksniffs, he calls them, "who imagine they have a mortgage on all that is good" and that all "who differ from them are going headlong to perdition." He describes them as moralists "who hold up one hand in an indignant outburst of moral rectitude and with the other hold a richer abundance of vices than the most ordinary individual." How familiar is the picture!

Taft and His Epoch

Despite the lugubrious signs of the times, notwithstanding the discouraging tendencies that reveal themselves wherever an election is held, President Taft's optimism and good nature show no symptoms of impending diminution. Tumultuous as his administration is, subjected as he has been to criticism mordant and morbid there is a certain benign composure visible in his demeanor and conduct that we cannot but think bespeaks not only a sound and robust conscience but a placid state of mind. Yet for him the political situation is far from propitious. If we may judge of the state of the public mind from what seems to be a widespread sentiment and a coincidence of political phenomena Mr. Taft's ideals do not square with those of the multitude in its current infatuations. At this moment the minds of the public are filled with jealousies, hatreds and suspicions. There is a deep-lying struggle in the whole fabric of society. The oracles of the people tell us that a time of unmixed evil is come on us; that public principle is gone along with private honesty, and that nothing can save us short of a metamorphosis of our civic institutions and the most drastic reformation of governmental methods by certain patriots who have consecrated themselves to the redemption of their country. It seems as though we must yield to the prepossession that has taken hold of the public mind. Now obviously President Taft is not the man to gratify contemporary popular caprice. He is carrying out policies which the public have approved, but in doing so he reveals a temperament too mild to excite the enthusiasm of a populace in which the passion for red hot stuff and ground and lofty tumbling has been assiduously and incessantly cultivated for a period of several years. Mr. Taft has all the semblance of an anachronism in these hysterical days of crimination and recrimination made uproarious with the horrendous shouting of lusty tribunes. How little has he in common with the demagogues who are going up and down the land breathing fire and brimstone on the great corporate interests, denouncing as public enemies all who favor conservative action and advocating punitive and vindictive measure of regulation and control! Compared with the up-to-date statesman he is like a hackneyed figure out of an early Victorian drama. His methods are obsolete. He would cure without killing. He'd drive the rats from the barn without putting the torch to the shack and burning its precious wealth of grain. He is never on the qui vive for a head inviting, irresistibly attracting the attention of the big stick. He is too amiable to thrill. Like Lincoln he possesses his mind with a steadfast faith in the wisdom and generosity of the people, and persuades himself that Time and the hours will bring us back to sanity and repose; which of course they will, but is it not too much to expect within his term of office? We are on the rampage for iridescent reform and not until we have our bellyful of it shall we experience the emotion of satiety. Before the pendulum swings back the blatant ones must be given full swing. Beloved of the Lord we must expect to be chastened.

Lost Trade May be Regained

Captain Hibberd's address on the importance of a merchant marine, delivered before the Commonwealth Club, contains many suggestions that are worthy of serious attention. With facts and figures he makes it clear that it is to the interest of this State to make it possible for local shipowners to enter into competition with foreign shipowners at this port. Local steamship companies spend many millions of dollars in this city every year, and bring millions of dollars of trade to this port, whereas foreign companies spend their money for repairs and supplies in their home ports and have no interest in the development of our trade. As a result of the withdrawal of steamers formerly operated by local capital California's trade with Alaska and the Orient has dropped from over twenty millions to about one million dollars a year. It is estimated that a million dollars spent in subventions would enable us to regain all that we have lost. Such being the case it would certainly be good business policy on the part of the State to appropriate the money. Of course the Federal Government should subsidize American shipping, if not for commercial reasons for the manifest advantage that the navy would derive from a merchant marine, but there seems to be little hope of ever offsetting at Washington the powerful influence exerted there by the rich American stockholders of foreign steamship companies.

High Prices and the State of Business

Our economists and statesmen who have undertaken the task of accounting for the present high cost of living and the unsatisfactory state of business are far from coming to an agreement on this complex and puzzling subject. Their views are as divergent, as diverse and as conflicting as were those of the political economists of France who tried to disentangle that country from the fiscal complications that led to the Revolution. Perhaps the only definite and accurate conclusion to which our speculative economists can come is that conditions are not due to any single cause. The increased production of gold has had its natural effect on prices. The elevation of the standard of living has effected not only prices but business also. The artificial rise in wages is not an inconsiderable factor; nor is the growth of trusts with the consequent reduction of competition. The tariff of course has had an effect on business conditions, but the effect has not been due so much to inherent defects in the schedule as to the agitation to which it has given rise and the unsettled state of affairs consequent upon the universal demand for revision. All these things are clear enough, but how conditions are to be improved is another matter. It is a matter that should give us more concern than the evils we are complaining of. Too much interference in a matter of this kind is more likely to do harm than good. It is a maxim of political economy that nature has so provided that the evils or inconveniences under which men suffer in regard to wealth have an inherent tendency to correct themselves. If only the natural laws be left to act as they inevitably do when human folly does not step in to thwart them their results will be more beneficial by far than those of any artificial laws that a legislative body can devise. In other words human nature is so constituted that even in industrial matters it acts as an unfailing check on its own excesses. Political economy teems with illustrations of this truth. It was in recognition of this truth that Adam Smith advocated the principle of industrial freedom. Every individual, according to Smith, is continually exciting himself to find out the most advantageous employment for whatever capital he can command. Though he considers only his selfish ends the study of his own advantage usually leads him to promote the interests of society. And what is true of capital in Adam Smith's opinion is equally true of labor. He therefore argued that capital and labor should be left to their own direction, and that all attempts to protect individuals against the effect of competition can only be regarded as bad economy. Now in this country we have seen the old laws of competition both with respect to the employment of labor and capital nullified. Unions and trusts have destroyed competition. There has been too much interference with natural laws, and now there is a disposition to interfere some more for the purpose of rendering some of the natural laws operative. There is a demand for interference with capital but not with labor. What the result of such interference would be no finite mind can predict with any degree of accuracy. If Adam Smith is to be relied upon it would be advisable to let the evils of the day correct themselves. It may be that we are just now beginning to feel the effect of the evils of big industrial combinations, but to revolutionize suddenly this form of corporate industry would be to invite disastrous consequences. We have already seen that the trusts are extremely sensitive to political sentiment, and that even a little loud talking about them in Washington flutters the money market.

An Allegory

By Charles Baudelaire

(Translated by F. P. Sturm)

Here is a woman, richly clad and fair,
Who in her wine dips her long, heavy hair;
Love's claws, and that sharp poison which is sin,
Are dulled against the granite of her skin.
Death she defies, Debauch she smiles upon,
For their sharp scythe-like talons every one
Pass by her in their all-destructive play;
Leaving her beauty till a later day.
Goddess she walks; sultana in her leisure;
She has Mohammed's faith that heaven is pleasure,
And bids all men forget the world's alarms
Upon her breast, between her open arms.
She knows, and she believes, this sterile maid,
Without whom the world's onward dream would fade,
That bodily beauty is the supreme gift
Which may from every sin the terror lift.
Hell she ignores, and Purgatory defies;
And when black Night shall roll before her eyes,
She will look straight in Death's grim face forlorn,
Without remorse or hate—as one new born.

Perspective Impressions

The enemy of innocent amusement is generally a person with only one virtue of which he is inordinately proud.

The Socialist Mayor of Milwaukee has given fresh evidence of superior intelligence. He has declined an invitation to lecture on the Chautauqua circuit.

The local preachers who are enjoying one of their periodical spasms of morality would probably like to sit as a Hague tribunal on the question that Jeffries and Johnson have agreed to settle at Emeryville.

"Red" Hayes says he's glad "that all doubt concerning the attitude of Roosevelt has been removed." Truth from the great dissembler at last. Now watch him make all the insurgents look like cripples in the race back to the White House.

Now that the limelight is on Judge Lennon of San Rafael it is instructive to contrast his behaviour with that of the men who have made "coward's castles" of the bench in San Francisco.

"Happiness lies in self-forgetfulness," says that profound thinker and original philosopher, Mr. Elbert Hubbard. "To be happy you must forget yourself," says Bulwer. Which goes to show that great minds are still running in one channel.

The Illinois legislator who confessed last week that he accepted a bribe to vote for Senator Lorimer was probably actuated by the hope of winning the plaudits of the people. For according to the new morality the bribe-taker who confesses is a convert to patriotism, and everywhere public servants are on a still hunt for temptation.

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(In the preceding chapters the hero of this serial history tells of the assassination of the Bulletin's first editor, of the organization of the Vigilantes, of his escape from their hands after many vicissitudes and of his sensational flight from San Francisco. In the third instalment he introduced us to Jack Power, a highwayman who figured prominently in the romantic history of early California, to whom he was indebted for his escape from the hands of a murderous mob in Santa Barbara.)

(Fifth Instalment)

I had remained for two or three hours where I had halted on the mountain side, looking out on the vast ocean glittering like a burnished mirror beneath the rays of the morning sun, and down on the City of Santa Barbara, which lay like a little social pebble on its sounding shore, thanking Heaven for my recent escape, and revolving in my mind plans for my future action. By that time I became materially rested, and mustered strength to penetrate the mountain wild still further; deeming it to be but prudent to place a little more distance between myself and my pursuers, and accordingly commenced a further ascent. After proceeding some distance I came to a very precipitous "bench" overgrown wth a thick and impenetrable "chapparal." Into this I cut my way with my knife until I came to some rocks that afforded shade, and near by I found some water. Here I halted and remained behind the rocks the entire day without seeing a living creature of any sort. Strange to say, either from extreme excitement or some other cause, I felt no hunger, although the last meal I had eaten was my breakfast on the preceding morning at the Rancho de Refugio. I drank a great deal of the water, however, for I still suffered from fever. Before reaching this spot I had thrown away my flannel underclothes owing to the excessive heat, but toward evening it became quite cool, and I discovered I had done a very foolish thing. I had lost my over-coat and waistcoat the previous day as before mentioned, and suffered greatly for the want of them. I may as well here state that in the pocket of the over-coat were all my papers of a private nature, but fortunately they fell into the hands of Don Antonio Maria de la Guerra, Mayor of Santa Barbara, and brother of the present Senator, through whose kindness they have been restored to me. Among these papers were letters to the different Missions in lower California and Mexico, stating that I was a good Catholic, and not traveling through those countries on any political errand. This as I afterward learned was told to the good Bishop Amat, and he sent messages to the various Missions, instructing them to give me shelter if I visited them. He also had mass said for me. Had I known all this at the time, I would have been spared the painful pilgrimage I was then about entering upon. I should have at once sought an asylum at one of the Missions and been safe.

When it was quite dark I prepared to come down from the mountain and sleep in the plain, being afraid of the bears in which the country abounds. I got into a canyon in which was an aqueduct built of stone. It is many miles in length, and supplies the Mission of Santa Barbara, which is distant a few miles from the city, with water for irrigation and other purposes. I followed the course of this aqueduct till it brought me near to the old Mission church and buildings. Finding no safe place to sleep immediately about them, I at length got into an oat field in which the straw had been cut and stacked up. Here I made a very comfortable bed and slept soundly till just before day, when I heard a man driving some cattle into the field. I remained quiet till he went away, and then got up and again ascended the mountain back of the church. As may be supposed, by this time I had become quite hungry. I saw some fish swimming in a kind of basin in the water-course and thought I would try to catch some of them and eat them raw. I cut some holes in the crown of my hat, so as to make a kind of net of it, and then fastening it to a pole endeavored to get some of them; but either I was too unskillful a fisherman, or fate had determined I should not succeed. After trying a long time in vain, I was compelled to give it up and remain hungry. I continued up the canyon a mile or two, keeping all the time in the water course and walking bare-footed. Still having fever, I drank every half hour. I endeavored to cross the mountain, thinking that I might find some friendly ranch in the plain on the other side, but after I had traveled till I could advance no further, even in the water course, I was obliged to give it up, and sat down to rest. I have since been informed that in endeavoring to cross that mountain, I was undertaking an impossibility, it never having been crossed at that point. I remained there in solitude the entire day, and at night again descended to the Mission and slept in the same oat-field without interruption till day. When I awoke I found myself suffering intensely from hunger. I had now been three days without eating, and was perfectly ravenous. I determined to go to the first rancho I could find and ask for food, concluding that I might as well be captured and killed as starved to death. Accordingly I got out into the road and walked on without knowing which direction I was going. Presently I came to a house. I should judge it was then about seven o'clock in the morning. A young man was standing in the door whom, from his appearance, I took to be an American, but on accosting him, I discovered that he could not speak English. I then addressed an old woman, who appeared to be his mother, but with no better success. I managed, however, to make her understand that I was hungry, and showed her a five franc piece. Her breakfast was nearly ready, and she soon invited me to sit down and fall to, which I did with a will. After breakfast I got the old lady to give me some beef, hard bread and a bottle of milk, for which I paid her three dollars. As no one spoke English about the premises, I thought there was no fear of my being betrayed by them to my enemies, and continued my walk along the road. I had got my head so "turned round" on the mountain, that I did not know the direction of the City of Santa Barbara, till suddenly, to my horror I came right upon it. As soon as I espied it I turned and ran off the road about a mile, when I came to a small canyon filled with very thick bushes. Into these I crept and lay there all day without molestation. And better need I had to be well concealed than I was then aware of; for it turned out that the woman at whose house I breakfasted was a Mrs. Robbins, and though a native herself, the widow of one Captain Robbins, an American, and moreover she was the mother-in-law of none other than Harvey Benjamin Blake, alias the "white pig" who had instigated the Santa Barbara mob to hunt me so savagely two days before. He was in the habit of almost daily visiting his mother-in-law, and, as I afterward ascertained did actually, on that day, pay her a visit, and was telling her about the hunt of the preceding Sunday, when she informed him that I had breakfast with her that morning. At this "the pig" became almost frantic. He mounted his horse and rode back to town where he communicated his news, and getting up another party they gave me another hunt. All the while, however, I, unconscious of what was going on, lay safely ensconced in the bushes, and their search was fruitless.

As soon as night came on I watched the moon and stars to ascertain which way I should go to get north of the City of Santa Barbara. I had determined to abandon my project of going to Mexico, and to return toward San Francisco, knowing that I should be more rigorously pursued in lower California than elsewhere. I thought that I was south of the town, toward Los Angeles; but in this I was mistaken. When I fled to my present hiding place I had come at least a mile and a half in the direction I wished to travel. I came out of my retreat, and traveled on, getting as I supposed to the northward of the city. I kept two or three miles off the road, and walked for nearly three hours, when I came to a ranch.

By this time I had become sleepy, and as I preferred to rest near a habitation on account of the bears, I determined to halt here. I laid down by the side of a fence, but, notwithstanding my fatigue it was so cold I could not sleep. One of the greatest annoyances I found during my pilgrimage in Santa Barbara, was the California watch dog. There are always eight or ten of them about a ranch, and they invariably gave the inhabitants notice of my presence by barking. Then soon found me out in this instance, and at once became very noisy. Presently I heard a man speaking to the dogs in English! I started up in alarm, knowing that if he was an enemy and recognized me, escape was impossible while he had his dogs to assist him. Presently he came out to see what they had discovered. I boldly accosted him first, saying, "Your dogs are barking at me, sir," following up the information by asking him how far it was to the City of Santa Barbara, pretending that I was going in that direction. Without answering my question, he replied: "Are you from above?" I replied in the affirmative, and he asked me "from how far?" I told him "from San Jose." He asked me how long I had been on the road, and I told him about a month. He then said, "It is only about four miles to the city, and a good road. You can soon make it." I judged from his accent, that he was as we familiarly say, "from Pike." I imagined, too, that he did not wish to give me shelter for the night. However he was not aware that had he offered me his hospitality, circumstances would have prompted me respectfully to decline it. I left my friend "from Pike," and after walking a short distance further, came to a sheep ranch, where I saw some large stacks of oats. I was now glad that the dogs had roused me from my last uncomfortable resting place, and crawling in between two of the stacks, I enjoyed a sweet and refreshing sleep until morning.

I arose before it was fully daylight and continued my journey. I had no fixed plan of operations, nothing more than a general idea of getting northward as quietly and as rapidly as possible. I had not gone far before I saw a Spaniard on the road. He did not approach me, however. He was a vaquero and was watching some cattle. After proceeding some five or six miles, I saw some horsemen on the road coming toward me on their way to the city. At the same time I observed two men at work in a field. Immediately it struck me that the best way to avoid meeting the men on the road was to join those in the field. I accordingly approached them, while the horsemen passed on. I remained with the two men some time. They were engaged in making a fence, and preparing the ground to put in a crop. I ascertained that I was upon the land of Daniel Hill, Esq. He is an old Californian, having resided in the County of Santa Barbara thirty years. He had married into the Ortega family, and is the father of Mrs. Nicholas A. Den, the wife of the gentleman to whom I have before referred. I learned these facts from one of the men, who was a Chileno and spoke English. He informed me that he had been a long time in the employ of Grogan & Lent of San Francisco. He said my face was familiar to him, and asked me what countryman I was. I told him that I was French, but had been a long time in America, and was then on my way to the Mission of Santa Inez, to act in the capacity of teacher of English. He asked me if I had seen anything of "the man the people were hunting." I told him that I had not, but that it was supposed that he had gone to the lower country. I told him that I was one of the party who had pursued him, and regretted that he had escaped us, and further informed him that during my stay in Santa Barbara, I had been the guest of Don Pablo de la Guerra. This appeared to satisfy my Chileno-yankee friend.

The Physician at the Supper Table---III.

By the Sybarite

The Doctor had been presented with a two pound Mallard by the Count—fat, tender and sweet-smelling—and, having been roasted seventeen minutes, it was being served, along with fried mush, celery, brown bread and butter and a pint of Chablis at the northwestern table of the dining room of the club.

"I'm delighted," said the Doctor's midnight companion, "to admit that my insomnia is passing away. I guess you were right in making the distinction between insomnia and wakefulness. I—"

"Thomas Francis Meagher was as truthful as rosy when he termed Chablis the enchantress of wines. Sam Ward called it a gentleman's wine."

"As I was saying, your distinction between insomnia and wakefulness—"

"The most renowned white Burgundy is Montrachet, which seldom finds its way into America or Great Britain. Clos St. Robert is a close second. Chablis comes next; and, when carefully made and matured, is one of the noblest wines in the world. The demand for it in the United States is not great, partly because it is high-priced and partly because Burgundy drinkers generally prefer reds. There is little or no adulterated Chablis, and even poor Chablis is rare. This wine is only made in France and California, although there are some white wines produced in Italy, Germany and Spain that resemble it, except that they are never so extremely fine. It reaches a state of perfection in twenty years, all other conditions being equal. It is a wholesome wine, and when genteelly gurgled is fascinating beyond description. It possesses great vinosity, fullness, and fragrance. It is a most luscious accompaniment of canvasback or mallard, and of venison or smaller game."

"As I was about to say, or attempted to say, your distinction—"

"There has always been a good deal of palaver over the age of wine and that excellence which maturity gives. With the exception of Madeira, Tokay, and some other sweets, wines which are too old are not good. All things have their prime. It takes a long time to kill the tannin in a red wine; but, once its climax arrived at, its depreciation is rapid. You can tinker an old violin and keep it sonorous, but once a wine is aged, if you physic it, it dies. Wines are like men. They have their babyhood, youth, maturity, their age and decrepitude. When too old, their good qualities vanish; and their taste, perfume, soul, depart. A wine of a noted year has certain lasting qualities, but in time it goes the way of all flesh."

"This layout is certainly a most delicious assimilation of potable and viand, surely."

"I am glad you accepted my advice and doctored for sleeplessness and not insomnia. I knew that if you followed my advice you would come out all right. I never administer opiates except in cases of extreme pain or insomnia from prolonged dissipation.

"If sleeplessness be occasioned by undue nervous excitement the application of mustard plasters to the abdomen will afford relief. Where this remedy fails the freshly-made solution of lactate of soda or some milk or whey may be used with good results. When brain exhaustion is responsible for the inability to sleep, the administration of a tumblerful of hot claret and water, with sugar and nutmeg is recommended. When acid dyspepsia is present the alkalies and alkaline earths are useful. The irritant properties of the air which hinder sleep during hot weather can be counteracted by sprinkling the floor with water. When sleep is broken by severe pain nothing is more useful than morphia. These latter remedies should never be taken, however, without the advice of a physician. A hypodermic injection of morphia, however, is to be preferred to taking the drug internally when the wakefulness is due to neuralgia."

"You remember the sad case of suicide of the Dean of Bangor, which event created as much sympathy in our country as in England?"

"The circumstances attending the death of the Dean of Bangor—although they were distressing—presented no novel features. The reverend gentleman was a man of considerable intellectual power, which is the same thing as saying that he was constitutionally liable to intervals of mental depression. All highly intellectual men are exposed to this evil. A pendulum will always swing just as far in one direction as it does in the other. Great power of mind implies also great weakness under certain conditions. The marvel is not that great minds occasionally become deranged, but that they so often escape derangement. Sleeplessness means not merely unrest, but starvation of the cerebrum. The brain cannot recuperate, or, in other words, it cannot rest. Physiologically, recuperation and rest are the same thing Sleep is simply physiological rest.

"The only cause for regret in these cases is that the blunder should ever be committed of supposing that a stupefying drug which throws the brain into a condition that mimics and burlesques sleep can do good. It is deceptive to give narcotics in a case of this type. The stupor simply masks the danger. Better far let the insomnious patient exhaust himself than stupefy him. Chloral, bromide, and the rest of the poisons that produce a semblance of sleep are so many snares in such cases. Severe insomnia is a malady of the most formidable character, but it is not to be treated by intoxicating the organ upon which the stress of trouble falls. Suicide, which sometimes occurs at the very outset of derangement, and is apt to appear a sane act, is the logical issue of failure of nutrition that results from want of sleep. It is curious to note how a sleepless patient will set to work with all the calmness of forethought of intelligent sanity to compass his death. He is not insane in any technical sense. He has no delusion. He does not act, or suppose himself to act, under an influence. He simply wants to die, and, perhaps, not until he has made an attempt to kill himself will he exhibit any of the formulated symptoms of mental desease.

"Insomnia is most often found among brain workers, whose brain activity causes the flow of too great an amount of blood to the head. The nerves controlling the contraction of the blood cells through weariness fail to perform their duty, and a temporary passive congestion is established, which effectually prevents sleeping the early part of the night. The victim should lie with the head raised very high with pillows.

"By the way, in sleeping, much depends on securing a comfortable position. Lying on the back would seem to give the most ease, but general experience and practice prove that it does not, and it is liable to some definite objections. In a weakly state of the heart and blood-vessels, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. Persons who have contracted chests, and who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so in that position. For these and other reasons it is therefore better to lie on the side, so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand. It is well to choose the right side, because, when the body is thus placed, the food gravitates more easily out of the stomach into the intestines. Sleeping with the arm thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free in the extremities, and the head and neck, and the muscles in the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches and dreams. The best sleep is obtained when the shutters are closed so as to make the room dark, and the windows are adjusted so as to admit plenty of fresh air. Early rising is not a virtue, unless the riser has secured sleep enough; and the best time to rise is when the sleeper wakes naturally.

"Sometimes indigestion will awaken you at the small hours and take revenge for some very slight departure from the careful diet you uniformly adopt. Recently it has been discovered that many persons lose hours of sleep because they are in need of nourishment—that the fast is too long that continues from supper time at 6 or 7 o'clock until 7 or 8 o'clock the next morning.

"Physicians who used to prescribe bromide of soda or potassium for sleeplessness, now urge their patients to take beef tea instead. There are many who, after taking various prescriptions with little benefit, have at length been so fortunate as to receive the latter advice. At first beef tea was used, with some light bread or biscuit broken in it, sipped from a spoon as warm as it could be taken. Afterward milk just scalded, not boiled, was substituted, and to make it more easy of digestion a teaspoonful of lime water was added to half a tumblerful of milk. To facilitate matters a pocket stove with an alcohol lamp, or an arrangement for the gas fixture should be at hand. If neither beef tea nor milk can be easily procured, hot water with an infusion of hops or mint may be substituted, or even hot water alone will quiet restlessness and induce sleep.

"When once the habit of wakefulness is broken up, the beef tea or milk may be taken cold, but not iced. If you are always a poor sleeper, it will be well to continue the late supper as a permanent thing in your daily life. Provide for it in case—"

Being a Brief Chronicle of Significant Events the Wide World Over

This City Blamed for Plague Menace

The charge is made in American Medicine that the entire country is menaced with bubonic plague as a result of the negligence of San Francisco. It is stated that the contagion spread from the infected rats of this city by means of fleas to ground squirrels, prairie dogs and other rodents and that the disease is to be expected in human beings for some time to come in the United States, the bacillus having obtained a foothold. The spread of plague is limited, says this authority, by one factor—the vitality of the rodents infected. If they have sufficient tolerance to keep the bacilli alive instead of dying quickly, the germs will be spread far and wide. The article blames this condition on the contempt for sanitation in this city during the Schmitz regime and the moral is drawn that municipalities should elect only gentlement and not "fiddlers" and other men of "low morality" to public office.

A Senatorial Precedent

Senator Leroy Percy, recently chosen by the Legislature of Mississippi to represent the State in the United States Senate, has established a precedent which is not likely to be followed by others elected to that body. After he had been chosen in a prolonged and bitter contest, State Senator Bilbo charged that a bribe had been offered him to vote for Mr. Percy. An investigation established the falsity of the charge. Upon the conclusion of the inquiry Senator Percy went to Jackson and in an address to the Legislature asked that a senatorial primary be called in November to determine whether the people preferred former Governor James K. Vardaman or any other citizen to himself to represent the State at Washington. He told the Legislature that if he should not prove to be the choice of the people he would resign. This willingness to remove a cloud upon title to the senatorial toga is something new in American politics.

Governor Patterson's Defiance

Although Governor Patterson of Tennessee incurred a great deal of censure when he pardoned Duncan B. Cooper, convicted of killing ex-Senator Carmack, he has just thrown down the gauntlet to his enemies by announcing himself a candidate for re-election. By so doing he disregards the Tennessee tradition which fixes two consecutive terms as the ordinary tenure. This action will revive the bitterness which culminated in the death of Carmack. The ex-Senator had asked for election to the governorship as the champion of the Prohibitionists, but he was defeated by Patterson and took revenge by assailing Patterson in his newspaper. More than ninety per cent of the whites of Tennessee are pure-blood Americans, descendants of Lord Berkeley's and Oglethorpe's fierce and fighting pioneers. They are implacable in warfare, political or otherwise and the contest which will be waged over Patterson's candidacy is sure to be full of dangerous excitement. The political machine in Tennessee is perhaps the most potent and most comprehensive in the United States. In the primaries the governor has almost absolute power.

Employers' Voluntary Liability

Following its action in cutting down the amount of Sunday labor in its various plants the United States Steel Corporation has instituted a voluntary employers' liability relief system. Irrespective of legal liability the company has decided on a scale of payments. During temporary disablement, single men will receive 35 per cent of their wages and married men 50 per cent, with an additional 5 per cent for each child under sixteen and 2 per cent for each year of service above five years. In case of death of the wage-earner the widow and children will receive one and one-half years' wages, with an additional 10 per cent for each child under sixteen and 3 per cent for each year of service of the deceased above five years. The corporation announces that for some years past it has been paying more than a million dollars a year to injured employees and to their families. Its new scheme will be tried for a year to see how it works, and the corporation announces that "it is our purpose by this plan to treat employees fairly and generously, even under the most enlightened view of the employer's responsibility." It also announces that it has under consideration the pensioning of disabled or superannuated employees. The International Harvester Co. also announces a system of compensation to employees suffering from accident not caused by intoxication or wilful disregard of safety appliances by the injured person. The scale of payment is to be, in case of death, three years' average wages, but not less than $1,500 nor more than $4,000; for loss of hand, or foot, one and a half year's wages, but not less than $500 nor more than $2,000; for other injuries, one-fourth wages for 30 days of disability, one-half wages during two years of disability, if it continues beyond 30 days, and if the disability is total, a pension after two years.

Socialist Claims in Germany

Carl Kautsky, the scientific theorist and Socialist, has just published in Berlin a notable article forecasting a great triumph for the Socialists in the elections next year. He says there is an excellent prospect of their doubling their total vote, in which case they will probably have an absolute majority of the aggregate votes polled in Germany. If so, it would mean a catastrophe for the existing order of things and the established form of government. He admits that such a triumph cannot be reckoned upon with certainty, but anyway it is unquestionable, he says, that the Socialist advance will be so extraordinary that it will shake the foundations of the existing system of society and government. Kautsky warns the party not to destroy their chances by foolish blunders such as a general strike, which is advocated by the extremists for the purpose of extorting universal suffrage in Prussia.

Increased Trade with the Philippines

The Payne tariff law established free trade, with certain exceptions and limitations, between the United States and its Philippine possessions and the result has been a great increase in the volume of business. The most striking gains in exports to the islands appear in wheat flour and cotton goods. Flour trade that formerly went to Australia and cotton trade that formerly went to Europe now come to this country. Imports from the islands also show an increase directly attributable to the new tariff. Hemp, now and heretofore on the free list, still stands as the leading article of import. The importation of sugar has greatly increased, likewise of cigars and cigarettes. Nevertheless our trade with the 8,000,000 inhabitants of the islands is only on a par with our trade with the 90,000 people in Alaska, omitting Alaska's shipment of gold and mining products.

The Chinese Prince Was Afraid

The newspapers missed a very good story in connection with the arrival here of Prince Tsai Tao who is minister of war, brother of the regent and uncle of the emperor of China. It is the sort of story which could have been developed into a fine sensation for it has to do with plots to kill and is decorated with bombs and the mysteries of a secret society. At the same time it would have explained the unseemly haste with which the Prince scurried from San Francisco to the East and the discourteous abruptness with which he squelched the elaborate plans made for his entertainment. When all the most prominent local Chinese gathered at the Palace Hotel to greet their prince they were deeply chagrined by the hasty and perfunctory manner in which he acknowledged their deference. It will be recalled that a beautiful silver punch bowl was to be presented to him with great ceremony and that he vouchsafed his presence for a few moments only, retreating to his rooms and sending word that the gift could be sent after him. As there is no more ceremonious nation than the Chinese and no more carefully trained expositor of bland politeness than a Chinese prince, this unusual conduct was received with amazement by everybody except the few who knew the startling reason for it. The fact of the matter is that the Chinese prince was very badly frightened during his stay here, frightened by threats of death.

The Consul Warned Him

It is not long since Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the head of the Chinese Freemasons, the powerful reform party which aims to overthrow the hated Manchu dynasty and give the government of China to the Chinese, paid a secret visit to this city. The powers that be in China are very respectful to Dr. Sun Yat Sen on account of the tremendous power which he wields. They regard it as the dictate of prudent diplomacy to show consideration for a leader who may some day be at the head of Chinese affairs. This policy was pursued by Shui Ping Chun, until recently consul general here. Shui met Dr. Sun Yat Sen during his visit and treated him with the most obsequious kindness, at the same time doing everything in his power to fathom the purpose of his presence. Whether he actually fathomed that purpose it is not for me to say, but the result of his investigation was that when he went to China he made it his business to meet the prince at Shanghai and warn him that a plot against his life was being hatched in San Francisco. When Prince Tsai Tao started across the ocean to this city it was with the firm conviction that the powerful American branch of the reform party which has its headquarters in this city had perfected plans for throwing a bomb at his carriage and thus striking a blow for Chinese liberty. There is no doubt that when he arrived here the streets of Chinatown were placarded with bulletins denouncing the Manchu dynasty and that some of those who rode in the parade with him were members of the reform party. That is why the plans for the prince's entertainment had to be curtailed. He feared to mingle freely with the local Chinese and thought that it would be much safer to receive that punch bowl in his private apartments. Perhaps he feared that some anarchistic Chinese might hurl it at his head.

A Charge of Plagiarism

Reading as I do with the utmost attention William Marion Reedy's St. Louis Mirror, I was interested to find last week the following paragraph:

> A correspondent calls the Mirror's attention to the alleged fact that all the Wagner material in Gertrude Atherton's "Tower of Ivory," was "lifted" from George Moore's "Evelyn Innes." It were a good thing if all the Wagner material in all contemporary novels were "lifted" and then dropped somewhere out of sight. Wagner is all right as music, but he's a burden as the novelist expositors insist upon presenting him. No novel at all aesthetic is complete without expatiation upon "Tristan and Isolde," "Parsifal," etc. It is time for our novelists to write novels, not music.

Thinking that Mrs. Atherton might also be interested I called it to her attention, at the same time asking her to make whatever reply she saw fit.

What Mrs. Atherton Says

Mrs. Atherton paid her compliments to the editor of the Mirror in the following words:

In regard to the clipping you send me from the St. Louis Mirror, it is not surprising that any middle-western imagines that all knowledge of Wagner must be obtained at second-hand. It is like that other deathless provincialism which holds to the belief that the British aristocrat was invented by Ouida. It never occurs to these good people that Ouida, although temperamentally incapable of reaching the psychology of the English upper class, had ample opportunities to observe its men and women from the outside, having, indeed, many intimate friends in the circles she was fond of describing. Other writers who draw the English aristocrat from life are bound to give him a superficial resemblance to the famous heroes of Ouida; and the ignorant, of course, jump to the conclusion that even first-hand portraits are filched from the old plates. Likewise, it does not occur to them that others besides George Moore may have had an opportunity to study Wagner at first hand. The students of Wagner, I should say, roughly, number several hundred thousand. As for myself, having lived in Munich for seven years if I were not saturated with Wagner I should be a candidate for an asylum for idiots.

And what nobler theme for a novel than music, the music of Wagner in particular? Graft? Divorce? New York Society? But after all, what do the opinions and speculations of these small fry amount to? Merely the necessity to make paragraphs.

Camping on Polk's Trail

That irrepressible architect Willis Polk is just now having the time of his life. Nary a day passes which does not afford Polk ample food for his healthy appetite for hilarity. It is only a short time since he assisted the Examiner to "put one over" on itself and now he has the local chapter of architects camping on his trail. It all comes about because Polk announced one day with a straight face that he had been chosen architect-in-chief of the Panama Exposition. Of course there isn't an architect in town who doesn't dream of designing a building or two for that exposition. If you meet an architect on the street and find him in an abstracted mood, be sure that he is thinking on this subject. So when Willis Polk announced rather casually that he had the entire job bottled up, there was a tremendous hubbub. Architects are very serious folk, Polk being one of the very few in town with a sense of humor; hence none of the craft stopped to consider that the announcement was a trifle premature. That an architect should be chosen before the fair was assured to San Francisco did not strike them as improbable. The next meeting of the architectural chapter was the most thronged that ever was held here, also the most exciting. Polk attended, for the first time in his life, I believe, but his aspect was sphinxlike and the combined efforts of all our Vitruviuses failed to elicit any additional information. Following the meeting a committee waited on William H. Crocker, thinking that he would be able to coax Polk into further revelations, but although Polk met the committee in Crocker's office, the conference availed them nothing. Finally the chapter held another meeting and solemnly resoluted. It was the sense of their weighty deliberations that all architects should be given an equal chance to submit plans for the exposition and that the exposition committee should consider them very much at its service. Polk has been laughing at them till his sides ache. He is having the time of his life.

The New Bohemian Club

Speaking of architects and architecture reminds me that the new building of the Bohemian Club at the corner of Post and Taylor is coming in for a great deal of professional censure. I have heard it compared with the old Fontana warehouse, very much to the advantage of the warehouse, and certainly its brick rigidity of outline does not appeal very strongly to the eye, even of the uninitiate. The Bohemian clubsters vaunt themselves as the patrons and cognoscenti of all the arts and it was only natural to suppose that their new home would be a triumph of architecural beauty. Yet the franker and more enlightened members of the club are confessing with sadness that the building is not what it ought to be. It is being contrasted unfavorably with some of the other club buildings in town. The Family has a beautiful building, so have the Elks and the Union League and the Town and Country and the Francisca and the Argonaut. The Pacific-Union will be housed magnificently and when the new Olympic Club is built in Post street, the red home of the Bohemians next door will look more insignificant than ever.

The Identity of "The Sybarite"

The following letter has just come to me:

The Family, May 3, 1910.

Editor "Town Talk,"

Dear Sir: I had the good fortune to make one of a brilliant gathering in this club a few nights ago and the talk dwelt for some time on the series of papers entitled "The Physician at the Supper Table" which are being published in your excellent weekly. All of us agreed that these papers were deserving of the highest encomiums and as we boast some little knowledge of the niceties of table and sideboard, you may take this as a high compliment. If I may say so with modesty we were born in Sybaris and educated in the Cyrenaic school of Aristippus. Doubtless you catch my meaning, for you too have classical learning. In the author of these papers we recognize a brother Sybarite, but are divided as to his identity. Some of us maintain that the author is none other than Mr. Raphael Weill, the Brillat-Savarin of the Paris of America. Others insist that only Colonel Kowalsky, the Trimalchio of our banquets, could write them. A third faction urges that they must be the work of Petronius himself—I mean of course Mr. Ned Greenway. You will note that we garnish our conversation with the lore of the ancients, but indeed we are indebted for most of it to Ned Hamilton. Will you set our minds at rest by telling which of these three is the Sybarite of your articles?

Thanking you in advance, I will sign myself

—A Family Man.

I am sorry that I cannot comply with the request of my correspondent. I can only say that none of his brilliant friends has guessed aright. The author of the articles is one of the most prominent citizens of the State, but he will not permit me at this time to divulge his name.

keeper to be on terms of intimacy with rogues of fertile wit, skilled in the art of separating fools from their money, but the idea of a police commissioner making choice of such society is somewhat repugnant to our sense of the obligations of a public servant to the people whose lives and property he is supposed to safeguard. If Flannery has done nothing worse he has at least failed to differentiate the exigencies of his private business from the duties which he assumed when he became a public official. I am not inclined to take for granted all that has been charged against Flannery. The circumstances attending his downfall argue cogently to his discredit, but nowadays it is well to await developments before jumping to a conclusion with respect to the guilt or innocence of a man whose disgrace is passionately desired for political reasons. Flannery has enemies who but recently went through a long course of training in the business of perfecting what are known as "frame-ups." They are men in whom all the better instincts of human nature have been extinguished. In the furtherance of political ends there is no species of cruelty at which they would scruple. The fine Italian hands of these heartless rascals being visible behind the scenes in Marin County I am not disposed to turn thumbs down at this stage of the proceedings, though I have no hesitation in saying that Flannery has got himself in a might unsavory mess.

The Police and the Crooks

Though it is startling and shocking to be told that intimate and amicable relations exist between a prominent police official and the leader of a gang of professional rogues there is really nothing of novelty in such a situation. Flannery is the first police commissioner that I have ever known to be charged with having social and business relations with what are known as confidence operators, but the protection of such rogues by high police officials is not uncommon. In almost every large city there are thieves and bunko men in the enjoyment of police favor. In some instances the favored ones serve as stool-pigeons, and receive as compensation the freedom of the city. In some cases the police share with the criminals the loot of crime. The fact is that if the heads of police departments zealously did their duty professional criminals would have but very little territory in which to operate. How easy it is for the police to round up the criminal element we learn whenever a big celebration is about to take place in any city. The police take the precaution of locking up all the pickpockets on the eve of the celebration, and keep them behind bars until it is over. Though this news is always published nobody ever thinks of asking why the police tolerate the pickpockets when there is no celebration on hand.

Flannery's Proud Past

It is interesting to recall at this time that Harry Flannery, though a saloon-keeper, received some high honors at the hands of the Democratic party of the State. It will be remembered that at the State convention that nominated presidential electors for the last Bryan campaign there was a lively contest between Flannery and the Hon. Frank J. Sullivan, and that the delegate's preferred the saloon man to Mr. Phelan's brother-in-law.

ROASTS

No other seasoning can equal that delicate touch given all roasts by adding

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, Agents, New York.

It may be also remembered that at the last session of the Legislature when Mr. Phelan renewed his overtures for the complimentary vote for United States Senator Mr. Flannery was also on hand eager for the dubious honor. On the show down Flannery beat the impeccable young millionaire, and the latter's friends almost swooned from humiliation. Mr. Phelan, as a Bryan elector, graced the Flannery ticket and the people of San Francisco gave the saloon man a larger vote than they vouchsafed their darling ex-Mayor. So in view of the honors that Flannery received it is not to be wondered at that Mayor McCarthy appointed him to the police commission.

"Tom" Williams in the Limelight

Mayor Gaynor's speech at the banquet of the Newspaper Publishers' Association in New York was hardly more sensational than "Tom" Williams' spectacular injection of himself into the proceedings. Williams proved himself a hero in an emergency. A less tactful person, or one more impulsive than discreet, as incensed as Williams was on that occasion, would be likely in the excitement of the moment to transgress the proprieties, but Williams maintained his composure, holding his judgment on its throne notwithstanding the discourtesy to which he was subjected and the hostile demonstrations which his conduct provoked. What he had to say was pertinent and polite, and he said it in defiance of a howling mob. The achievement was characteristic. "Tom" Williams is a man of exceptional courage and wonderful self-confidence. As a newspaper man in this city where he entered the profession as a sporting reporter and rose to the position of manager of the Examiner, he figured in many episodes that tested his mettle and he was never found wanting. Many years ago at a session of the legislature in Sacramento he gave a remarkable exhibition of stolidity in circumstances of the most trying character. One day, without the slightest warning, as he was sitting at the reporters' table in the Senate, he was taken up as a subject of discussion on account of his strictures on certain statesmen. One after the other these statesmen took the floor and inveighed against Williams in terms of the most bitter abuse. In language impassioned and virulent they heaped denunciation upon him, and through it all the calmest man in the chamber was "Tom" Williams. Finally he was expelled, and without the slightest evidence of emotion he took his leave, going straight to his room in a hotel where he sat down and wrote a report of what had taken place, enlivening it with epigrammatic comments on the men who had denounced him and repeating the charges that had stirred their ire. Several thousands of words he dashed off for the afternoon paper which he represented, and his workmanship was flawless. He turned out a most brilliant philippic and it must have made the blood of every one of his assailants tingle. Later in the day he sallied forth and licked one of the senators on the street.

Financing Natomas

Some time ago I gave in these columns the outlines of the romance of Natomas Consolidated, the gold dredging company out of which millions have been taken to found new fortunes and to rehabilitate old ones. Now I learn that Natomas is about to enter upon a new era of prosperity made possible by a six per cent bond issue of $15,000,000. The first five million of this bond issue was offered for subscription in London on April 2 through an advertisement in the Times and had been taken at par at the close of the following day. The money will be used to enlarge the development and reclamation work now being done by the company, a work which is probably unequalled in California. Included in the assets of the company are gold-bearing gravel dredging lands, important water rights, rock crushing plants, real estate and the right to purchase a tract of more than 50,000 acres of valuable land between the city of Sacramento and the American River. These lands have a frontage of 22 miles on the American and Feather rivers and the company plans to reclaim and irrigate them. A board of experts consisting of Charles M. Rolker of London, Judge Peter Shields and Marshall Diggs of Sacramento and Albert Burch, the mining engineer, valued them recently at $43,223,116. The certified accounts of the company show that for the nine months from January 1 to September 30, 1909, the profits available for bond interest, depreciation and redemption of capital amount to $810,284.25, being at the rate of $1,080,576.35 per annum. Five new dredges will be installed out of the recent bond issue and it is estimated that the profits from the lands and rock crushing plants alone will be $2,168,600 per annum. The directors of Natomas are Eugene J. De Sabla, Louis Sloss, W. P. Hammon, R. J. Hanford, E. R. Lilienthal, Joseph D. Grant, M. E. Griffin and Curtis H. Lindley, all of this city, and Lord Ribblesdale, Sir Charles Day Bose and Albert Reitlinger of London.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

Tom Gibbon is Ousted

Tom Gibbon, the militant democratic editor of the Los Angeles Herald who recently raised ructions in the party of the unterrified by firing editorial broadsides into the Bourbon conference in the southland, is no longer able to stir wrath by his sizzling pronunciamentos. Like a bolt from the blue General Harrison Gray Otis has swooped down upon him and shorn him of all editorial authority in the Herald office. A burdensome mortgage was all that stood between General Otis and the Herald and at last he has decided to take charge. A few days ago Blakely Hall, a newspaperman from New York, walked into the Herald sanctum and announced to Gibbon that he had the authority of General Otis and Harry Chandler to take charge of the editorial policy of the paper. It must have been a great shock to Gibbon and I am sorry for him. He has always had the courage of his stout convictions and it will gall him to have his name at the top of a paper which he does not control. Perhaps he will discontinue his association with the Herald altogether. I believe the Herald has lost steadily ever since it was bought by Gibbon and Mrs. Lobdell from the general. The purchase price was $190,000 of which Mrs. Lobdell and Gibbon contributed, I believe, $150,000, the former putting up Los Angeles property and the latter pledging his beautiful Hollywood holdings. The rest of the purchase price was raised in cash from stock subscriptions. Mrs. Lobdell retired after losing heavily, the mortgage burden became heavier and heavier and General Otis finally decided to foreclose.

When Pillsbury Scored

No recent legal contest has been so fruitful in verbal quips as the de Laveaga case which is now being tried before Judge Coffey with Samuel M. Shortridge and E. S. Pillsbury as opposing counsel. Shortridge is a past-master of conversational fence and although Pillsbury is not averse from crossing foils with him, it must be said that the white-headed lawyer has usually come off with second honors. But Pillsbury has one palpable hit to his credit, as even Shortridge is willing to concede. A witness was on the stand for examination by Shortridge and when Pillsbury moved to strike an answer from the record, an argument arose involving the legal doctrine of probability. Shortridge had his authorities at the tip of his tongue and his books within reach of his fingers.

"Let me read to your honor," he said, "a short excerpt from this volume, a gift by the way of the late Major McLaughlin. It is a work on the doctrine of probabilities written by Sarjeant Williams."

"Who is Sarjeant Williams?" demanded Pillsbury. Shortridge looked at him with amazement.

"You don't know Sarjeant Williams, the greatest English authority on this subject?" he exclaimed. "It is evident, Mr. Pillsbury, that you have not spent your nights as I have."

"I hope I have not," snapped Pillsbury.

A Pugilist in Disguise

Baron von Schroeder, like several others among our prominent leisured gentlemen, prides himself on his ability as a boxer. Many an impromptu match has he won with one of his scientifically directed punches. But he met his Waterloo a few nights ago. The scene was the hammam baths of a big hostelry to which Baron von Schroeder had retired after an evening of entertainment. In his company was Baron von Hinkel, a German who has been sojourning here and a very distinguished looking man who seemed to be von Hinkel's intimate friend. The talk was of the Jeffries-Johnson fight and it was quite natural that Baron von Schroder should mention his proficiency in the manly art. Von Hinkel's companion became greatly interested and when he admitted some little knowledge of boxing, nothing would do but that von Schroeder should put on the gloves with him. The sparring match which followed is described by spectators as more than one-sided and when von Schroeder went to the mat under a well-directed blow he was glad to call quits. He congratulated his conqueror and sought private information from Baron von Hinkel as to his antecedents. He learned then that the man he had been boxing with was von Hinkel's valet and that he was an ex-pugilist. Henceforth Baron von Schoeder will not box with anybody unless he has first inspected his family tree.

The Hillsboro Insurgent

Unless I miss my guess there will be some very interesting developments when the distinguished municipal council of the new town of Hillsboro holds its sessions. There is an interloper in that body, an official who broke the slate and thrust himself into office without so much as a "by your leave." This is considered deucedly bad form by the other members of the board and they are prepared to show their disapprobation as soon as opportunity arises. The insurgent against the political organization of Hillsboro is Norris Davis who put himself up as a candidate at the last moment and beat George Pope by one vote. The incorporators of Hillsboro did not expect any such recalcitrant behavior. They wanted Pope on the board and they are very much put out at his narrow defeat. So they are privately determined to discipline Davis, to treat him the way La Follette is treated by Aldrich and Gussie Gardner by Joe Cannon. Of course they will not be rude about it, but just the same Davis will be given to feel that he is de trop. The policies which he advocates will not make much of a hit with Templeton Crocker and Henry T. Scott and George Howard and the Reverend Dr. Brewer. His suggestions will be chilled by the frost of the majority, the while Davis is delicately chided for advancing them. Yes, the meetings of the Hillsboro board should be very interesting, not to say extremely funny, for Davis is not the sort of man to pine under disapprobation. If he were that sort of a man he would never have broken the slate and beaten George Pope by one vote.

He Refused to Subscribe

I suppose it is pretty generally understood that the amazing total of subscriptions obtained within two hours for the Panama Fair was not the result of mere spontaneous enthusiasm. Before the meeting was called at the Merchants' Exchange a number of committees went around town and interviewed our moneyed citizens as to the amounts which they would be willing to contribute. That of course was a necessary precaution and it does not detract from the magnificent showing made when the shares were put up for sale, particularly as there were innumerable voluntary subscriptions from men who had not been solicited and who put up sums which took the committee's breath away. One of the men who served on a committee to solicit subscriptions —he is one of our foremost federal officials here—is authority for the statement that his committee met with only a single rebuff and he adds with considerable feeling that it was one of the most coldblooded rebuffs imaginable. It came from a San Franciscan who before the fire was prominent in the affairs of a big wholesale drug house which has since passed out of separate existence, its owners devoting themselves to other investments. This particular man has been very successful of late in oil, one of his coups being to sell a well for two million dollars. The committee thought that he would put his name down for a handsome sum but they were never so deceived in their lives. He did not put his name down for a cent but he treated the committeemen to the bitterest tirade against San Francisco and all its citizens and enterprises that they had ever heard.

The committee passed from shocked surprise to lively indignation and the members are longing for an opportunity to "show up" this disloyal San Franciscan.

"Don't Come," Said Kahn

Just before the Exposition boomers started for Washington they received despatches from the Capitol advising and urging them to stay at home. But the junket looked too good to them to be abandoned. One of the despatches was from Congressman Kahn who advised the committee that nothing would be done at this session of the Congress. In other despatches it was explained that as the spirit of economy was brooding over Washington the time was inopportune for any lobbying for a big appropriation. I hear that even the Administration joined in the request that the trip be postponed, but the boomers were not to be dissuaded. It was the sentiment of the boomers that as San Francisco had once more astonished the world, raising as it had four millions in a jiffy, it was advisable to keep enthusiasm at boiling point and at the same time to hold the eye of the nation and discourage all competitors. So despite protests "On to Washington!" was the slogan, the engine shrieked and the special was off.

Lawlor's Ambition

District Attorney Fickert describes the Hon. William P. Lawlor's political ambition as ludicrous. Evidently Mr. Fickert is not familiar with Judge Lawlor's past; else he would not consider it ludicrous for that gentleman to aspire to a seat in the State's highest tribunal. To Judge Lawlor all things are possible. Seeing himself where he is it is far from ludicrous for him to think of soaring to another height. Ascension to the Supreme Court is a trivial achievement compared to what he has already accomplished. Judge Lawlor is not the man to question his own fitness while considering the possibility of realizing a fantastic dream. He knows that in a world where transcendent souls are scarce mediocrity is of the highest excellence in the eyes of the preponderant mediocre people. Besides he knows that he is at least skilled in the art of putting into play mediocre qualities, an art which some philosopher has said begets more reputation than is achieved by merit. In my opinion it is not half so ludicrous for Judge Lawlor to aspire to the Supreme Court as for Judge Dunne to be permitted to be at large. Knowing something of the various stages of Judge Lawlor's rise to distinction I am prepared to say that he is justified in any ambition that he might hold. However vaulting I am sure it cannot o'erleap itself. Besides it is natural that a man to whom fortune has been so prodigal should feel that nothing is too high for his daring. It is natural that his fancy should dwell on his own prospects with riotous exuberance, sowing his pathway through life with orient pearl, paintings for him endless glorious triumphs on the cloud-curtain of the future. Judge Lawlor reminds me of a squirrel in a cage: he is always climbing.

To Celebrate the Fourth in Paris

Henry's famous American bar in Paris will be the scene of a lively celebration on the coming Fourth of July and the participants will be well-known San Francisco men and women. There are a number of local people who are planning to start abroad soon and it was agreed recently that all of them should meet in Paris on the Fourth of July to show the San Franciscans of France how the Parisians of America make the eagle scream on the national birthday. As Henry's bar is noted for its cocktails above all other Parisian emporiums of booze, it has been decided to make that place the rendezvous and promptly at ten o'clock of the evening of the Fourth the patriotic travelers will meet there and proceed to uncork their enthusiasm for liberty and any number of bottles of the choicest vintages at one and the same time. 'Twill be a great occasion and unless I mistake the temper of those who will compose the party, midnight will be sped and daylight well on its way before the party breaks up. Among those who have sworn the solemn pact to meet at Henry's are Mr. Gus Eisen and his wife, Dr. J. M. Dunn, Paul Verdier, the manager of the City of Paris, Mr. Conrad Peters and his wife, Mr. Leon Bocqueraz and his wife, Mr. George Lewis, and last but by no means least of this choice company, Monsieur Edouard Greenway.

Scott as the God from the Machine

I wonder if Henry T. Scott realizes yet that he acted as the deus ex machina for one of our junior barons of finance a few evenings ago? If he has not, he will be interested to learn the circumstances. This particular junior baron of finance is a paragon of propriety when the daily routine confines him within the gorgeous bank in which his family is paramount, but after business hours he is not averse from a little relaxation. Sometimes he takes a little more relaxation of a liquid sort than is good for him and then all the native exuberance of his disposition bursts forth, like truth emerging from the bottom of her well or perhaps it would be more appropriate to say, like a saucy bubble swimming to the surface of a brimming beaker of champagne. Our youthful banker chose the St. Francis Hotel as the setting for one of his boisterous performances last week. It was

AN UP-TO-DATE STOVE

Do you realize there is no longer any reason why you should use a coal range? Oil is cheaper than coal; it is lighter and easier to handle, and gives an intense heat. Provided you have the right stove, oil is more economical, cleaner and less trouble. Have you seen the

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

The accompanying illustration gives you only a rough idea of its appearance. You really can't appreciate it until you either use it yourself, or talk to someone who has used it. It does everything that a coal range will do—except heat the room. The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove will do anything, from heating a kettle of water to cooking a course dinner, but it won't heat a room. It doesn't "smell," it doesn't smoke. It can't get out of order. Light it and it is ready. Turn it down and it is out. Only a woman who knows the trouble of carrying coal and cooking in a hot kitchen can appreciate what it means to have a clean, perfect stove that will cook anything, boil, bake or roast, and yet won't heat the kitchen. How is it done? The flame is controlled in turquoise-blue enamel chimneys, and directed against the bottom of pot, pan, kettle or oven, and only there. The flame operates exactly where it is needed —and nowhere else. With this stove your kitchen is cool.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The nickel finish with the bright blue of the chimneys makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

very lively while it lasted, undoubtedly worth the price of admission. At the same time the bartender who had to duck a carefully aimed wine glass was not an enthusiastic spectator and the same may be said of several other employes of the hotel. The exuberant youth had retreated to the tapestry room and gracefully balanced on the back of a chair, his feet planted on the gobelin blue seat, was embarrassing a feminine guest with his conversational efforts, when it was determined to send him forth "into the night." The hotel force was advancing stealthily for a rear attack when their plans were knocked into a cocked hat. For Henry T. Scott, one of the owners of the hotel, entered at that psychological moment and disregarding the disturber's unconventional attitude, cried out:

"Hello, Blank, come and have a drink."

Another London Serial

Jack London's tireless pen has earned for him another snug sum of money. To his friends of the local literary colony he has communicated the glad news that the New York Herald has accepted from him a serial story for which he has received $8,000. It is another Klondyke story, the hero of which after amassing a fortune in the frozen north returns to civilization to wage war against predatory wealth.

Beach Thompson's New Venture

Mr. Beach Thompson, one of our most successful promoters, has gone into the wireless telephone business and the company with which he is connected is now operating a wireless telephone between Stockton and Sacramento. I am told that the project is very successful, the messages being transmitted with wonderful facility. Mr. Thompson is of the opinion that there is a great future in this business and his company has secured coast and foreign connections and will soon branch out on a great scale. Investors will probably regard with favor a project promoted by Thompson, for he has already achieved a wonderful success in the organization of the Stanislaus Electric Power Company. It was quite an accident which turned Mr. Thompson's attention to the power business. At the time when he was still an instructor at Stanford he was interested in the San Domingo placer mine near Angel's Camp. It was a good proposition, but water for power purposes was lacking. Mr. Thompson began studying the water situation with the assistance of Professor Marks of Stanford and the gigantic possibilities of power exploitation were suddenly revealed to him. With his brother-in-law, Howard Veeder, the well-known clubman, he set to work getting options for power sites along the Stanislaus River. It was a difficult and at times a discouraging undertaking, but the two men finally had the power possibilities of the Stanislaus pretty thoroughly bottled up. They placed their proposition before certain local bankers and were offered $400,000 for their options. Then the local bankers reconsidered the matter and lost their enthusiasm; so Mr. Thompson went to New York. There he got speedy returns. A company of eastern capitalists was formed; bonds for seven millions were underwritten by the Knickerbocker Trust Company; and the Stanislaus Electric Power Company was formed. Mr. Thompson had had a hard time to make ends meet but he took a million dollars out of that bit of promotion, besides getting water for his mine which is paying handsomely, I believe. He now lives in a beautiful home at Menlo.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2736, N. S.—Dept. No. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN GEORGE BUECKER, also known as GEORGE BUECKER, Deceased.

SOPHIE BUECKER, as administratrix of the estate of John George Buecker, also known as George Buecker, deceased, having filed herein her petition in due form praying for an order of this Court authorizing and directing her to borrow the sum of Seventeen Hundred Dollars ($1700.00), or such lesser amount as to the Court may seem meet, wherewith to pay off and discharge a certain promissory note now secured by a mortgage on certain property belonging to said estate, and hereinafter described, and for the purpose of securing said loan to mortgage to the lender of said sum of money the undivided one-half interest belonging to the above named deceased, in and to that certain parcel of real property situated and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Street; running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly One Hundred and Twenty-two (122) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly Twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Twenty-two (122) feet and Six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block No. 172;

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court, at its Courtroom, Department Number 10, in the Grant Building, at the Southeast Corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in said City and County, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Friday, the 10th day of June, 1910, then and there to show cause why the prayer of said petition should not be granted and the real property above described mortgaged as prayed for.

It is further ordered that service of this order be made by publication thereof once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation published in said City and County of San Francisco.

For further particulars reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein.

Dated May 4th, 1910. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

A Convert to Catholicism

It strikes me as very strange that the bavardes, ever on the alert for news, should overlook the interesting fact that Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick became a Catholic shortly before her marriage to Allan MacDonald. They might have surmised as much from the fact that the marriage ceremony was performed by Father Pius Murphy. Catholic priests do not officiate at weddings unless at least one party is of the faith. The bavardes might have known that either bride or groom must have been converted to Catholicism, but they had not their wits about them and missed a good story. The fact is that Miss Kirkpatrick became a Catholic two weeks before the original date set for her wedding, April 14. Miss Clara Allen, her cousin, acted as her sponsor. So that is the reason a Catholic priest and not a Presbyterian minister, officiated at the wedding. Her conversion was not heralded and will be a surprise to most of her friends. Both the Kirkpatrick and the MacDonald families are strict Scotch Presbyterians. The Sharon and Davis families to which Mrs. John C. Kirkpatrick belongs were Quakers. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was formerly Miss Lillie Davis, her mother being Mrs. S. K. Davis of San Jose, a sister of Senator William Sharon. Mrs. William Sharon was a Catholic, the sister of Father Pius Murphy. Mrs. James M. Allen (Ida Davis) who was a favorite niece of Mrs. Sharon, surprised her family one day by becoming a Catholic, just as Mrs. Allan MacDonald has done. Mrs. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Allen were pupils for many years at the College of Notre Dame in San Jose. It was as a result of her education there that Mrs. Allen changed her faith. The first wife of Senator Frank Newlands, formerly Miss Clara Sharon, a cousin of Mrs. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Allen, was a devout Catholic. Lady Hesketh, Flora and Frederick Sharon were baptised Catholics but never followed the faith.

Keeping Tab on a Millionaire's Affections

The bavardes are keeping their eyes on Louis Titus these days. Perhaps you have not the pleasure of Mr. Titus' acquaintance. If not let me assure you that his acquaintance is worth while; for Mr. Titus is a millionaire, whose fortune is of his own construction. He made the greater part of his fortune across the bay by the simple process of converting barren acre tracts into enticing town lots. And he began operations with the proverbial shoestring reinforced with his genius for making two blades of grass grow where but one grew before. The interest that the bavardes are taking in Mr. Titus is due to a sense of his availability for domestic purposes. Some time ago Mr. Titus became an object of speculation to matchmakers in consequence of a divorce. Upon his return to single blessedness it was rumored that another romance had come into his life, and that as soon as a very charming young Oakland woman obtained her release from fetters that chafed Mr. Titus would again take unto himself a wife. But just as the bavardes had about made up their minds that they had correctly read the Titus horoscope they were agitated by the report that the young millionaire's affections had been alienated. On the wings of gossip flew the news that the Titus automobile was at the service of a very beautiful young woman, and that current indications justified the conclusion that first conjectures were all wrong. Developments are now eagerly awaited.

The Mysterious Miss Morgan

No midnight meeting of the "inner circle" of the Black Hand could have been guarded with more secrecy or enveloped with deeper mystery than was the conference at which Miss Ann Morgan, daughter of the New York Croesus, volunteered to bring to the working girls of San Francisco a message of glad tidings and great joy. In order adequately to safeguard this meeting which was held in the concert room of the Palace last week, outer and inner guards were maintained and there was a "dead line" marked by a strip of red velvet carpet on the marble floor, beyond which only those properly accredited and entitled to receive Miss Morgan's message could step. The Baroness Nugent and her sister, Miss Maud Younger, the latter called by courtesy a "union waitress," officiated as guards, each flanked by a sufficient number of bell boys to repel a possible onslaught. Just why so much secrecy was deemed necessary, baffled conjecture, since every one leaving the room seemed to be consumed with eagerness to relate in detail all that had happened. If Miss Morgan possessed the panacea of industrial uplift, one would naturally assume that the great tidings should be sent broadcast over all the world instead of being limited to the few score working girls within sound of Miss Ann's mellifluent voice. While waiting for the statuesque heiress to make her appearance, the girls from the shops, laundries, cigar factories and so on, amused themselves by listening to a program of music. But it was Miss Morgan, the New York millionaire bachelor girl, as she likes to be called, whom they had come to see, and their fidgety nervousness and anxiety indicated how confused and dizzy they had become while anticipating the great honor that had been conferred on them.

Her Millionaire Simplicity

Shortly after 9 o'clock Miss Morgan, accompanied by Mrs. Elizabeth Gerberding and one or two society friends, strolled into the Palace with nonchalant grandeur, tripping along on a pair of buckled pumps with wonderfully high heels. Instantly every feminine head sought its neighbor's in whispered conference, and the comments on the lady's appearance were audible. The girls were charmed by Miss Morgan's smart hat, the acme of classical simplicity. It was doubtless in deference to the position of the working girls that Miss Morgan donned so plain a chapeau. It was made of finest white felt in a jaunty Cavalier shape, slapped up on one side, showing the brim faced with black Leghorn straw. Its only adornment consisted of the pins, two large round balls studded with jewels which stood out against the simple background like veiled incandescent globes. Where the hat was turned up, there was a tiny nosegay of flowers. The remainder of her apparel was in modest conformity with this demure hat. No flounces or vain ruffles marred the classical outline of the mauve smoke-gray silk which was heavy as broadcloth. It hung in straight close-fitting lines from the shoulders to the ankles where it lay in a soft mass about the feet. The lace collar was made of frilled Venetian lace, the only ornament being a large diamond butterfly with outspread wings that flickered and fluttered with the slightest movement. Miss Morgan, tall and lissome, her satiny brown hair coifed in the simplest possible style, innocent of rat or puff or curl, doubtless viewed her modest attire as the very thing which might serve as an example after which the working girls, so often accused of vanity and bad taste, might profitably pattern. Of course the working girls lack access to the atelier of Lady Duff-Gordon where all of Miss Morgan's gowns and chapeaus are designed, but it was at least worth their while to inspect a correct model of refined simplicity.

The Message of Uplift

Miss Morgan, in delivering her "message" grew eloquent with intensity as she urged the girls to see to it that every garment they purchased bore the union label. Samuel Gompers, numbered among Miss Morgan's dearest friends, could not have advocated the cause with more zealous ardor. Whether or not Miss Morgan herself practised her preachment when she purchased her clothing no one ventured to inquire. Before leaving, Miss Morgan succeeded in having some of the girls sign a paper avowing their intention to stand by the union label, the heiress assuring them that she herself had signed when a union label league was formed by herself and other well-known society leaders in New York. When one of the girls ventured a timid inquiry as to the financing of such a league here something vague was said about monthly dues, and the monetary topic was dismissed. As Miss Morgan left town the following morning she did not have the pleasure of nurturing this little flower of social uplift, and it will be interesting to see how it grows.

A Speech That Was Withheld

Miss Morgan first became interested in San Francisco through the fervid tales related by Mr. Heney and his friends, these stories impressing themselves with such dramatic force on Miss Morgan that she announced her intention of coming to this city and publicly telling us to our shameless faces just what she thought of us. A public meeting was talked of, to be arranged by the Women's League of Justice. Miss Morgan was very much in earnest, feeling that if we were only told about ourselves by someone who really saw the situation aright, the snarled mess would become instantly untangled and all would be lovely. When Papa Morgan heard of daughter's plan, the parental wrath nearly reached the explosive point. He commanded the haughty beauty to desist. But daughter snapped her pretty fingers in dad's face. She said she would do as she pleased. Miss Morgan herself related this story to her friends. Her visit here having terminated without the threatened speech, one assumes that parental discretion got the better of daughter's valor.

of Miss Helene Irwin and Charles Templeton Crocker! How little of sentiment in them; how piercing the dominant dollar note! "Immense Fortunes to Merge Under the Directions of Cupid" was the Call's shrieking scarehead, imputing to the little god who pierces and vivifies all things, producing life and joy, a purpose entirely foreign to his nature. And as though fearful that Mammon might not be made sufficiently conspicuous this sub-head was inserted: "Engagement Announced of Burlingame Millionaire and Hawaiian Heiress." Furthermore we are told that the bride is one of the "wealthiest girls in her set"; that her father is a "wealthy banker"; that she is "sole heiress of her father's immense fortune," and that Templeton Crocker "is reputed to be worth $15,000,000." In the Examiner office also the engagement was discussed from the dollar standpoint. "Cupid Allies Many Millions" was the Examiner's scarehead, and in the opening paragraph it is said that Crocker is a "many times millionaire" and that his fiancee is the only child of "the richest man in Honolulu." Then follow elaborate details touching the riches of the young people, explaining how the fortunes were made, et cetera. The romantic and sentimental side of the story is altogether neglected by the press, which assumes that people care naught about the "one thing pure where all beside is sullied." Yet here are a maid and a man of whom we can be sure that the step they are taking is prompted by the noblest passion with which a human being can be endowed. There is no need of either of them being concerned about sordid matters. Touched by a sacred fire, in one fate their hearts and beings they are about to blend. Surely in this there is much to stir the imagination. A tale of love it has been treated as though it reflected the emotions of the stock market.

Lady Wilson Missed the Wedding

San Francisco society saw mighty little of Lady Sarah Wilson but New York society saw less and thereby hangs a dolorous tale. Lady Sarah arrived in New York in time for the Gould-Drexel wedding and was exceedingly anxious to attend that spectacular affair, but she was doomed to disappointment. Her famous twenty-odd trunks failed to put in an appearance at the St. Regis where she was stopping and I am told on good authority that as the hour for the ceremony drew near Lady Sarah waxed more anxious than ever she did during her unchaperoned stay in besieged Mafeking. Not even so unconventional a person as Lady Wilson would dare to attend a wedding like the Gould-Drexel affair in any but the proper apparel, so she fretted her heart out at the hotel while the rest of the fashionables were displaying themselves at St. Bartholomew's and quaffing champagne at the Gould home afterwards. Next morning Lady Wilson got her trunks and sailed for London, with what deep chagrin may be imagined by those who have had a similar experience.

The Singletons to be Divorced

The domestic infelicities of John Singleton, president of the Yellow Aster mine at Randsburg, and the pretty Seattle girl whom he married shortly after striking it rich in the famous pocket of ore, have at last culminated in the filing of a suit for separation by the wife. For eight years has this union of youth and beauty with wealth and sedate age endured in spite of numerous small squalls which so disturbed the matrimonial sea that a separation was threatened three years ago. The burning of the handsome home in Singleton Court, to which Mrs. Singleton went as a bride upon her return from a wedding trip to Honolulu, seems to have marked the actual crisis in the lives of these two. Los Angeles people were genuinely surprised to hear that they had come to a point of open disagreement. Singleton, in the spirit of forbearance which age is expected to have for youthful impatience, laughted away the tears of his wife, settled a generous independent income from Yellow Aster stock upon her and took her to New York to spend a season or two forgetting. While in the metropolis Singleton humored a whim of his wife's in allowing her to adopt an abandoned waif whom she is now completely wrapped up in. Friends of the couple believe that this time there will be no halt in the divorce proceedings which have been instituted. The career of John Singleton has been an interesting one throughout. He was one of the very few who came out of Randsburg with a "find" and he was soon enabled to acquire additional large blocks of stock in the company of three men which owned the Yellow Aster. Archeology Becomes Fashionable

Local society as represented by Mrs. Eleanor Martin and her intimates has put the seal of its cultured approval on archeological research. This is an event of such transcendent importance that I almost hesitate to chronicle it as a society item. Still, while archeology is no doubt an important branch of learning, society is paramount and it must be conceded that archeology and not society was the gainer by the splendid function in Broadway with which Mrs. Martin signalized her readiness to recognize the prestige of those who delve in ancient soil for the shards and brickbats of departed grandeur. One of our most distinguished local archeologists delivered a lecture on this occasion on the recent archeological discoveries in Crete. 'Twas a learned lecture indeed and withal interesting, although some of our cultured exclusives found it a bit somnolent and snatched forty winks or so during its progress. I do not believe the story that one of our most learned young ladies asked Mrs. Martin if she had not traveled in Crete during the cretaceous period. Neither am I inclined to believe that some of the ladies blushed when the lecturer touched lightly on the real significance of the Daedalian myth. In the first place I do not think that more than one or two of them had ever heard of the Minotaur and besides an old Grecian scandal is not likely to embarrass anybody who has taken part in the intimate tattle that is so popular at select little bridge parties. If I might offer a suggestion it would be that our distinguished archeologists devote some attention to the subsoil of local society wherein by a little judicious digging they would discover such treasures of forgotten history as Crete in its palmiest days never dreamed of equalling. Nobody would drowse during a lecture on this entrancing subject.

Mrs. Norris Writes a Prize Story

The many friends in local newspaper and social circles of Mrs. Charles Norris will be pleased to know that she has just won the cash prize offered by a New York newspaper for the best short story submitted. Mrs. Norris was Miss Kathleen Thompson and worked for some time on the staffs of the Bulletin, Call and Examiner. One of her best newspaper performances was an interview with Margaret Illington at the time that that actress was attracting notoriety by her suit for divorce and her rhapsodies on the delights of sock-darning and other duties of domesticity. Mrs. Norris is a very brilliant young woman and now that she has attracted the attention of the New York editors I have no doubt that she will rapidly achieve literary distinction. Her husband is the brother of the late novelist Frank Norris and is on the staff of one of the leading New York monthlies.

Society Going to the Tyrol

Society will rendezvous at Oberammergau this summer, or more properly, at Munich, a few miles above Oberammergau where the comforts of life are more easily obtained. Many have taken their motors abroad rather than endure the inconveniences of continental travel. Among those who plan to see the Passion Play are the Wellington Greggs and their two beautiful daughters, the George A. Popes, the Joseph D. Grants, the W. H. Crockers, the Francis Carolans and the Tevis family; while from the other side of the bay there will be Mrs. W. C. Ralston, Mrs. Lucie May Hays, Mrs. W. E. Dargie, Mrs. William Rieder, Mrs. Charles Knox and Mrs. James Allen. Many prominent club women, intent on broadening their educations, plan to visit the Tyrolese village, Mrs. Sophia Peart, Mrs. L. R. Ellert and Mrs. James B. Hume being of the number.

Mrs. E. Lynch, Mr. Lynch and their son George motored to Del Monte last week in their big seven passenger Peerless,

What a delightful thing it is to have a home not crowded between two other houses, but surrounded by your own spacious lawns and gardens, with room enough for a tennis court, a garage for your motor, a willow fringed lily-pool perhaps, and flower-bordered walks, all your own.

These are characteristic features of residences in the beautiful Crocker Tract, Piedmont, where people REALLY LIVE, not merely exist. There the children lead the ideal childhood life in the open, with associates OF THEIR OWN CLASS because the restrictions placed on this villa park insure a neighborhood of the greatest distinction.

The houses in the Crocker Tract are examples of the last word of achievement of the modern architect and form no insignificant feature of its attractiveness.

The fortunate owners of villas here see from their windows the whole sweep of city and bay, with the lake lying like a silver mirror in the foreground. There are no whirring cars, clanging bells or nerve-racking whistles.

All is loveliness and peace, save for the shouts of children gathering poppies or the hum of the passing motor.

No wonder that day by day this beauty spot is being more and more recognized as the One Place for a home of distinction.

School Girls Going Too

Taking advantage of the great dramatic event at Oberammergau Miss Hamlin has arranged to have a number of girls from her school chaperoned through Europe, the experience being regarded as a schooling necessary before these young women will be considered sufficiently finished to enter the social world. Miss Cornelia McKinne, president of the Collegiate Alumnae, and Mrs. Robert McKinne will act as the chaperons. Four of the girls will remain in Paris for a year or more under the tutelage of a special teacher of their own, the latter's clientele being limited to four. The fortunate four are Miss Clementine King, Miss Adeline Bogart, Miss Florence Foster and Miss Irene Cuneo. Others who will accompany them will be Miss Edna Lindgren, Miss Belle Brittain and Miss Marie Payne. They leave next Saturday. Quite a number of the girls from Miss Head's School are planning to leave about the same time. Mrs. Gilbert Gurney, considered one of the most scholarly women in the university town, will chaperon a party of a score or so. She attended the Oberammergau festival in 1890 and wrote some particularly brilliant letters about it. She is much at ease in the continental languages.

In the Social Spotlight

A charming luncheon was hostessed by Mrs. Lily Hitchcock Coit on Thursday last at the Palace Hotel in honor of Mrs. Louis Parrott who is leaving for Washington, D. C., to join Mrs. Henley Smith, later sailing to pass the summer in Europe. The friends entertained were Miss Jennie Flood, Mrs. James W. Keeney, Mrs. Wm. Mayo Newhall, Mrs. Alexander Garceau, Mrs. James V. Coleman, Mrs. Wm. Hinckley Taylor, Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt, Mrs. Geo. H. Mendell Jr., Mrs. Gordon Blanding and Mrs. Charles Page.

With the arrival of R. E. Wells at the Palace the list of prominent railroad men who have been in San Francisco this season is complete. Mr. Wells is general manager of the Salt Lake, San Pedro and Los Angeles railroad and is a brother of A. G. Wells who holds an equally prominent position with the Santa Fe.

Another well known business man who has been at the Palace for the past few days is W. R. Rust, general manager of the Tacoma Smelting Company. Mr. Rust is in the city on business connected with his company.

Among the mining men now in San Francisco and registered at the Palace, the recognized headquarters for mining and oil men, are E. T. McMonigle of Flagstaff, Colonel Thomas Ewing of Denver, Colorado, Chas T. Weir of Tucson, A. M. Ardery of Carson, W. L. Leland of Bakersfield, T. S. Bullock of Sonora and Captain H. F. Gerry of Angels Camp.

R. T. Crane, the millionaire manufacturer of Chicago who has been spending the winter in the southern part of the State was a recent arrivel at the Fairmont where he stayed for several days. Mr. Crane is the father of Mr. Charles Crane who was appointed Minister to China by Secretary of State Knox and recalled from his work before he could get farther on his way than San Francisco and the Fairmont. Mr. R. T. Crane was accompanied by Mrs. Crane.

Judge Erskine M. Ross of the United States Circuit Court which is now sitting in San Francisco has taken apartments at the Fairmont where he will make his home while in the city.

L. W. Pizzini accompanied by Mrs. Pizzini is a guest at the Fairmont Hotel. Mr. Pizzini is one of the prominent planters of Virginia where he has a large plantation near Richmond.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Bennett and Miss C. Bennett are visiting Mrs. Thomas Young at the Vendome.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Doyle of Cuperinto, Cal., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Spivalo at the Vendome.

Judge Frank Murasky was host at a dinner party given at The Peninsula last Wednesday. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. E. O'Donnell, Mr. S. Renard, Mr. Thos. H. Morris and Mrs. M. Grennan.

The Laurel Court of the Fairmont Hotel continues to be the scene of many delightful informal tea parties. Its cheery out-of-door effect makes it the most attractive place of this sort in the city. Among those who entertained there recently were Mrs. Walter D. Mansfield, Mrs. Daniel Roth, Mrs. Walter Scott Franklin, Mrs. Fred Zeile and Mrs. Clem Tobin.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado included, Miss A. M. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Ralston L. White, George H. Kieder, I. N. Hubbard, Mrs. C. W. Neal, Lucille R. Neal, Hugo A. Taussig, Hugo Kleinhaus, R. R. Sherman, C. W. Cook, R. Marrach, Mrs. Burgin and Mrs. Barkley.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Maud, who spent a few days last week at Del Monte, are planning to return soon and remain for the summer. Mr. Maud holds the golf championship of the State and finds the Del Monte links a great attraction. They are to bring their car with them to do the many drives very thoroughly.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Spreckels Jr. motored down to Del Monte to spend the week end.

Mrs. W. F. Morris is sending out cards for the marriage of her daughter, Isabel, to W. Hobart Garlick, on the evening of May 5, at Grace Episcopal church. Since the announcement of her wedding day Miss Morris has been the guest at a number of affairs, the most recent of which was the tea given by Miss Marjorie Stanton at her home in Berkeley. Miss Harriet Caswell was another recent hostess who complimented Miss Morris at a prettily appointed tea. Mr. Garlick and his bride are to reside in Berkeley.

Mrs. C. C. Warren and Miss Edith Cory were at The Peninsula during the past week. The Warrens will go to San Mateo on June 1 for the summer.

The officers of the Portugese warship motored down to the Hotel Vendome for lunch recently, being the guests of Mr. John Rafael of San Francisco.

During the social festivities of the past fortnight the Fairmont has been the home of many of those who have already opened their summer homes across the bay or down the Peninsula. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Foster, Mr. and Mrs W. A. S. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Kuechler, all of San Rafael.

Among the recent arrivals at the Fairmont are M. and Mme. Pierre Rojestventsky who will make their home there during the summer. M. Rojestventsky is the Consul General of Russia at this port.

A RIDDLE

A string of four large and busy candy stores in this city. Why all four? A box of candy will solve the riddle.

The Chameleon

Agnes Wilson was born and bred in a little interior town. At eighteen Agnes had a pretty face and a trim figure, but an absolutely colorless disposition. She had no likes or dislikes, no opinions, no ideas of her own. It was the joke of the village that if anybody said, "I like this, but don't like that," Agnes would say, "Yes, I like this, but I don't like that—while if anybody said, "I like that, but don't like this," Agnes would say, "Yes, I like that, but I don't like this." She was nothing but an echo—a weather-vane—a chameleon. John Bennett was a farmer. He was a young man, a prosperous man and a good man. He told Agnes that he loved her. Agnes said that she loved him. He asked Agnes to marry him. Agnes said, "Yes." He kissed her. She kissed him. They were married. Everything John wanted Agnes to do she did. And she never did anything John didn't want her to do. They lived a life of vegetables, fruit, horses, cows, pigs, chickens and ducks. They were happy together. This went on for a year.

Then Henry Allen came to the village. Henry Allen was from the city. He was young, rich and handsome. He wanted to buy an estate to include several farms, one of which was John Bennett's. He approached John on the subject. He saw Agnes. He asked John if he could board at the farmhouse while he was inspecting the property. John consented. Henry Allen told Agnes that he loved her. Agnes said that she loved him. He asked Agnes to run away with him. Agnes said, "All right." He kissed her. She kissed him. Then ran away. Everything Henry wanted Agnes to do she did. And she never did anything Henry didn't want her to do. They lived a life of music, wine, horses and carriages, automobiles, yachts, glitter and glare. For the poor creature was nothing but an echo—a weather-vane—a chameleon.

THE COST OF GAS

In Santa Barbara, a city of 12,000, the people wanted to know about the gas business and the basis of rates.

So the city council engaged the expert engineering services of Professor C. L. Cory of the University of California.

He visited the city, examined the plant, collected data, figured it all out. Last month he rendered his official report.

Here are the pertinent facts in that report:

To determine what rate for gas will give a proper return upon the investment, including the cost of improvements proposed, it is necessary to make allowance also for depreciation charges upon the new construction. The average depreciation upon the total plant is at the rate of 4.6 per cent. Allowing a return of 6 per cent upon the investment and including the cost of fuel oil at $1.15 a barrel, operating expenses, and depreciation then 1,000 cubic feet of gas would cost 123.87 cents and with oil at $1 a barrel, 119.78 cents a thousand.

The items of expense making up this gas cost are—fuel oil (at $1 a barrel)	27.25c.

other station costs	14.71c.
distribution of gas	10.35c.
administrative expenses	22.13c.
depreciation (4.6 per cent)	19.68c.
profit (6 per cent)	25.65c.
Total	119.78c.

(That's gas at practically $1.20 a thousand.)
(In San Francisco the supervisors fixed the rate at $1.)

Grace George in "A Woman's Way"

By Edward F. O'Day

When Thompson Buchanan constructed the comedy in which Grace George is now starring he was not at particular pains to hedge himself within the limits of plausibility and in consequence he amuses us but heardly convinces. The importance which the press agents have sedulously sought to attach to "A Woman's Way" as a moral instrument does not exist. A matrimonial difficulty is solved, it is true, but no woman in real life would seek to solve it in Mr. Buchanan's way and even if she should be so fantastically inclined, the habitude of the ultra-conventional society depicted in the play would stand obstinately in the way of her success. When a woman discovers that her husband's affection is being alienated and that he is philandering with another woman, her anxiety to save her marital happiness from wreck may urge her to desperate expedients, but is it conceivable that she would invite the Other Woman to her home? Is it likely that the Other Woman would accept such an invitation? Mr. Buchanan has put additional strain upon our credulity by making the two women strangers. But even supposing that in the sort of society to which Mr. Buchanan introduces us a wife will invite to her home a woman whom she has never met and that that woman will accept the strange invitation, can we believe that events will shape themselves as in the play? It happens that the Other Woman has had affairs with three of the men whom she meets in the home of the Wife, not counting the Husband. Two of them are married and despite their gay experience they manage the situation so awkwardly that their wives immediately become suspicious. In the climax of the play they reveal to the Husband that part of the Other Woman's past in which they have figured, thereby bringing about the disillusionment on which the Wife had counted. Having been invited as a supposedly honored guest, the Other Woman breaks bread with the family, serves her purpose in the Wife's scheme and is dismissed with scant ceremony. There would of course be no necessity for pointing out that this dramatic structure cannot be taken seriously, if we had not been asked by the press agent to do so. It would have been much better to offer the play as a witty trifle with no vital bearing on the divorce problem, but no doubt the attention which that problem is everywhere receiving offered an irresistible temptation. Mr. Buchanan does not solve any problem and I imagine that he had no such weighty motive in writing the play. He was probably concerned only in creating diverting situations and fitting clever lines to them and in this he has been admirably successful, for the situations throughout are very amusing and the cleverness of the speeches is above the average. It was necessary for his purpose to make the Wife a paragon of wit and the Husband an utter fool and he has done both things so thoroughly that one wonders how so bright a woman could ever endure so assinine a man. Obviously he is not worth the trouble she goes to for the purpose of keeping him, but if she didn't take all this trouble we wouldn't have the play, would we?

Grace George is an accomplished comedian. To use an expressive vulgarism she "kids" delightfully. Her every speech is set off by engaging plays of feature and easy gesture. Her serious moments in this play are few but effective. I had not seen her since she played in "The Marriage of William Ashe" and it seemed to me that her work showed a great deal of improvement. That she is an actress who will do still better things in the years to come I make no doubt, for she has signal ability and possesses unusual opportunities for finding the plays that suit her. It is a fortunate actress who has a manager for a husband. Just why C. Aubrey Smith was chosen as her leading man I am at a loss to conjecture, for in the absence of any histrionic interest that he excited I found myself absorbed in his striking resemblance to a well-known Powell street saloonkeeper. That is hardly the sort of interest which a leading man should excite. It is too irrelevant. Just the same I'd wager that the saloonkeeper could act the part of the Husband about as well as C. Aubrey Smith. Jack Standing who plays a subordinate part would have been much better cast, it seems to me, if he had C. Aubrey Smith's part. I'd wager that he would play it better than the aforesaid saloonkeeper, for he strikes me as being a mighty good young actor. Certainly his personal appearance would at least create the illusion of a gay husband which C. Aubrey Smith's does not. The junior Henry Miller is principally interesting as the son of his father. He is an incredibly serious chap in a role that doesn't call for that sort of treatment. Carolyn Kenyon who plays the Other Woman seems to minimize her personal attractiveness in order not to excite the sympathy of the audience. The author hasn't given the Other Woman much of a chance, but Miss Kenyon seems a little too much impressed with the necessity of subordinating herself to the star. Ruth Benson plays the small part of an elderly woman. You know she is a good actress as soon as she steps on the stage.

It is said that in the production of "The Pillars of Society," Mrs. Fiske's newest success, a strong characteristic of the actress—her admirable repression—is strongly illustrated. Her company is of exceptional strength and the Ibsen play lacks in no particular for perfect interpretation

Dr. Wullner's Return

It is a high compliment to the appreciation of San Francisco concert goers that Dr. Ludwig Wullner and Mr. Coenraad Bos should return so soon. We had an opportunity to reflect upon Wullner's lieder singing during his absence and now the chance to revise our first estimate of his art has been presented. But there is no revision necessary. That was made apparent during his first concert at the Valencia Theatre when the applause which greeted him was perhaps even more enthusiastic than when he came here as a stranger. Dr. Wullner is probably not in better voice but his hearers have become acquainted with his methor of interpretation and are better prepared to enjoy the beauties which he lavishes at every recital. The opening program was an excellent one throughout and it would be difficult to pick from it certain numbers for superlative admiration. Of course The Erlking called forth great plaudits, as it always does when it is adequately sung. Dr. Wullner's singing of it was particularly interesting at this time because it is not so long since we had the great pleasure of hearing Schumann-Heink's rendition. Fortunately it is unnecessary to make a comparison. Both sing it flawlessly after their own fashions. The long "Dichterliebe" by Schumann with Heine's words was given with powerful intensity and enthralling sweetness. The Hugo Wolff numbers too could not have been more satisfactorily sung. Some critics find matter for carping in the technical quality of Dr. Wullner's voice, but after all there is a great deal more in a song by Schubert, Schumann and Wolff than a mere instrument for the exploitation of a perfectly trained organ. Nobody denies that Dr. Wullner's interpretation of these masters could not be surpassed. He has the soul of an actor, a great actor and there is tremendous strength, even in his most repressed moments. —The Music Lover.

Walter Damrosch and His Orchestra

The New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch with the assistance of four great vocal stars, the Loring Club, the San Francisco Choral Society, Mr. Lowell Redfield, Mrs. H. McCoy, Wallace A. Sabin and Paul Steindorff, will offer the greatest week of orchestral concerts that our music lovers have ever known. The first event will be a great Wagner Festival with vocal and instrumental excerpts from the five great works, "Tannhauser," "Lohengrin," "Meistersinger," "Walkure" and "Tristan and Isolde." This will be given this Saturday night at the Greek Theatre of the University of California and one should take the seven or seven-twenty boat to arrive in good time. The same program will be repeated at the Garrick Theatre on Sunday afternoon at 2:30. On Monday night a splendid collection of Tschaikowsky masterpieces will be played under the auspices of the Elizabeth Murison School Association. There will be a magnificent program every night excepting Thursday and the special feature will be the American and European novelty night on Wednesday when the American Music Society will attend in a body. On Friday night, May 13, the Loring Club under Wallace A. Sabin will assist in the production of Mr. Sabin's composition "St. Patrick of Tara," the last Bohemnian Club Jinks Drama and on Sunday afternoon, May 15, Tschaikowsky's most successful opera "Eugene Onegin" will be given in concert form with the San Francisco Choral Society of over one hundred voices under Steindorff assisting. In honor of the visiting alumni there will be a special symphony concert at the Greek Theatre on Thursday afternoon, May 12, when Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, Brahm's "Academic Festival" Overture and several other great orchestral works will be given and Mme. Van der Veer and Mr. Kellerman will sing.

New Play at the Alcazar

"The Commanding Officer," an American military play which will be presented next Monday evening and throughout the week at the Alcazar, was written by Theodore Burt Sayre and had a successful run last season in the Lyceum Theatre, New York, under Daniel Frohman's direction. It is an interesting depiction of social life in a cavalry post near a Nevada mining town, and its twelve characters, with two exceptions, are members of the army set, made up of officers and their wives, sweethearts and daughters. Evelyn Vaughan will be seen as Floyd Carroll, Grace Travers as Mrs. Archer, Adele Belgarde as Mrs. Major Bingham, Bessie Barriscale as her daughter, Landers Stevens as Lieutenant Hammond, Will R. Walling as Colonel Archer, Howard Hickman as Lieutenant Waring, Louis Bennison as the sheriff, Burt Wesner as Major Bingham, William Garwood as Lieutenant Billings and all the other Alcazar favorites in well-fitting roles. The play is in four acts, each of which has a picturesque setting.

Maude Adams at the Columbia

Grace George will continue as the attraction at the Columbia Theatre for a second and last week commencing with Monday night, May 9. Maude Adams, in her latest success "What Every Woman Knows" will be the next attraction, opening on Monday night, May 16. The tour of Miss Adams is one of the most wonderful in the matter of attendance records that the theatrical world has known in recent years. "What Every Woman Knows" is the fourth play from the pen of Barrie in which Maude Adams has found great success. The first was "The Little Minister." Then came "Quality Street" and after that "Peter Pan." The success of all these plays is a matter of theatrical history. The advance sale of seats for Miss Adams' engagement at the Columbia will begin next Thursday morning

The Antonia Dolores Concerts

Mlle. Antonia Dolores (Trebelli) is announced for two concerts at the Garrick Theatre, the dates being Monday night, May 16 and Thursday night, May 19. Mr. Boyd Wells will be the assisting pianist. At the Monday night concert a group of old English gems by Purcell, Wilson, Linley and Dr. Arne will open the program. A second group will consist of German masterpieces by Beethoven, Schubert and Schumann and a third of songs in French by Tschaikowsky, Pierne and Debussy. In addition to these the artist will sing the aria "Deh Vieni" from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and one by Donizetti. At the second concert a group of rarely heard Bach songs, works by Pergolese, Haydn, Saint-Saens, Gounod, Massenet, Grieg, MacDowell and W. J. McCoy will be given and the operatice arias will be from Bellini's "I Puritani" and "Louise" by Charpentier.

Helen Grantley at the Orpheum

Miss Helen Grantley who will be remembered for her hit in Zangwill's one-act play, "The Never Never Land" some two years ago, will be the headline attraction at the Orpheum next week. She has an ambitious offering entitled "The Agitator." It is by Mrs. Oscar Berringer, the authoress of "A Bit of Old Chelsea." "The Agitator" has a timely and human theme dealing with a young girl nicknamed "Pickles" employed in a large factory who comes to the aid of her oppressed co-workers, leads a strike and suffers and starves with them till victory is assured. Eddie Leonard, one of the best known and most popular comedians in America who was the feature of George Evans' Honey Boy Minstrels last season and prior to that the favorite end-man of the Lew Dockstadter organization, will introduce a new singing and dancing creation called "At Home Again" in which he interpolates his own compositions in his own inimitable way. He will be assisted by that clever comedienne, Mabel Russell. James Harrigan, "The Tramp Juggler," will reappear after quite a lengthy absence. The Ollivotti Troubadors play the violin and guitar. Next week will be the last of The Avon Comedy Four, The Three Sisters Klos, John McCloskey, and the great baseball comedy hit "Swat Milligan."

New Rex Beach Play at Ye Liberty

Next Monday evening the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will appear in the dramatization of "The Barrier," the latest of Rex Beach's stories to meet with success in dramatic form. The Oakland stock company will be the first to present this play in the West and Manager Bishop promises that it will be seen exactly as presented last winter at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, under the management of Klaw & Erlanger. In justice to "The Barrier' it is wise to state that Beach entrusted the preparing of its stage version to a skilled dramatist, Eugene W. Presbrey who had previously met with success in dramatizing "Raffles," "The Right of Way" and other novels. And the result is that "The Barrier," in striking contrast to "The Spoilers," is a play that does the splendid book full justice. The appearance of the stock players in the characters so well known to readers of fiction will be awaited with interest, and with the complete scenic surroundings it is sure to receive at Ye Liberty it should prove a most entertaining attraction for the patrons of that theatre. After one week of "The Barrier," a revival of "The Pit" will be the attraction.

The Le Bruns at Idora

Music lovers will find plenty to interest them at Idora Park the coming week. Ferullo and his magnificent band which has been entertaining thousands during the last five weeks will play their farewell concerts tomorrow afternoon and evening. On Monday comes the Le Brun Grand Opera Company in connection with Paul Steindorff's superb symphony orchestra, a combination entirely different but no less high class than the band. The Le Brun company, a noted organization of grand opera stars, give scenes and acts from the popular operas in costume. Accompanied by Steindorff's orchestra this will form an attraction which will appeal to all classes of music lovers. They will be at Idora for one week only, giving concerts every afternoon and evening. Following comes Ohlmeyer and his famous Coronado Beach band.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—There has been heavy selling of all leading stocks by inside interests during the recent week and with the exception of one day, Friday, the market has not enjoyed any rallying power. The weakness in high-grade securities with new low records for the year has been the chief factor in causing distrust among the large Wall street contingent and created much bear sentiment on the future of the stock market. As concerns the fundamentals of the country, there are many elements of strength in the situation and the chief factor is a good outlook in the agricultural districts for average crops at least. This is the important element for a continuance of prosperity and we believe eventually will be reflected in conditions of marked stability and higher prices in Wall street. We are not bearish on the situation in stocks, but a somewhat lower level may be reached before a definite upward trend occurs.

Wheat values were headed unmistakably downward in the first half of last week, but were checked by unfavorable weather and timely application of muscle. Reports from the winter wheat belt are conflicting but most of the damage is confined to Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri. The weather has been too dry and insects are said to have made their appearance in large numbers. News from the northwest is decidedly bearish and cash demand in all markets is limited. New crop months closed the week at the same level as the week before while May option closed 1⅝ lower. While very moderate deliveries are expected to be made on May contract Monday, they will nevertheless add to the expense account of carrying high priced old crop property to a lower new crop level.

Corn—Deliveries of corn promise to be fairly liberal Monday but by no means overwhelming as was predicted some time ago. The cash demand for corn has shown some improvement locally, but the demand from the east is still very poor. Receipts are very small and stocks will show a fair decrease for the week. There is every prospect that the corn acreage this year will be as large as the enormous total of last year and that barring exceptionally wet weather it will be planted probably a fortnight earlier at least.

Cotton—Seldom before in the history of cotton did prospects for a new crop change more quickly than about a week ago. The first reports of the damage done by snow and frost were greatly exaggerated, as, in our last week's letter we surmised they would be. There seems to be, however, no question but that sections of the cotton belt were seriously damaged; but even a week ago there was considerable question of the amount of actual re-planting that would be necessary and the most encouraging reports in regard to this phase of the situation are, that it is not too late for re-planting, in ample time for a big crop and, if the reports on scarcity of seed are exaggerated, even in part, as the other reports were, there need not be much fear that the damage will be made good with but a nominal loss. The much-talked of squeeze in the May option is not as much feared as it was. In fact that it will be hardly felt at all is shown by the receipt of over 225,000 bales of cotton in the New York warehouses to meet the May deliveries and before the end of May this should amount to 325,000 bales. With such a stock on hand and such economy on the part of the spinners we see no reason to radically change our views on the entire question. For the present, and especially in the face of Miss Giles' bullish report on acreage, (which carries some weight in the futures), we would await further developments before taking on further commitments. Yet we maintain that those who are short on the new crop and have the courage of their first convictions and will continue to hold their position will ultimately find their accounts on the right side of the ledger.

Copper—It is held by shrewd observers that those who are opposed to the publicity policy of the Copper Producers' Association will not care to force their views to the point of jeopardizing the existence of the organization. The Amalgamated Copper Co., or at least some of its influential directors are said to be strongly opposed to the Copper Producers' Association, or more particularly to the publication of the very valuable statistics which are given to the public through Secretary Graton once a month. If any decision is arrived at looking to the dissolution of the Copper Producers' Association, the responsibility therefore will be laid at the doors of the Amalgamated Copper Co., and it is doubtful whether they desire to have attached to their name the odium which this course would invite. No improvement in the demand and lower cables serve to maintain a general quiet tone in the market. Large consumers are adhering to a waiting policy and they remain out of the market pending further developments. The production of copper for this month will be large and exports light which will restrict any upward movement in prices.

Local Securities—The local stock and bond market has shown a fair amount of activity of late, but in view of the generally depressed stock market conditions which prevail throughout the country, the trading is not spirited. The attention of the local and other investors seems to be still drawn toward Spring Valley, Associated Oil and Pacific Gas and Electric common. The first stock has made a substantial recovery on the news that the Board of Supervisors were making efforts to set a price on the Water Company's plant in order that the city may purchase it. Associated Oil has rather fallen behind in point of activity, although its price has remained very near the top figures of last week. Pacific Gas and Electric common, under the direct influence of a weak New York stock market, has lost favor for the time being but the fact of its enormous earnings which should ultimately result in large dividends for its shareholders, rather argues against any protracted decline. The balance of the stock list and practically the whole bond list has been active in spots without much change. It is felt that now is a good time to make purchases of Associated Oil and Pacific Gas and Electric common for, all things considered, earnings such as these two companies are reported to be making, will in the long run prove unquestionable arguments for much higher prices.

and he annoyed me with no more questions. They asked me into their tent which they had pitched in the field, and treated me to a cup of good warm coffee, and exchanged some of their soft bread for my hard biscuit. They also gave me a drink of Aguardiente for which I paid a dollar to the one who did not speak English. I told them as I left, that I was going no further than Dr. Den's house that day, and the next day I hoped to reach the Mission of Santa Inez.

As soon as I left them I got into the mountains; it being then about eight o'clock and entirely too late for me to travel any longer on the road. I lay concealed in the mountains all day, and at night came down again. Finding no straw at hand of which to make a bed, I continued my journey until the moon went down which was at about midnight, and then fell asleep under a tree. I awoke in the morning very cold and stiff, and suffered greatly until the sun came out. The warmth then restored me to a comparative degree of comfort, and I pursued my journey. I passed the residence of Dr. Den before any of the household were stirring, and after walking some five or six miles further, came to the ranch of one Don Ignatio Ortega where I had made the unsuccessful attempt to get some brandy for my guide after leaving the Refugio. After I had passed this place I again went into the mountains. Here I remained all day, and after having eaten all that remained of the provisions I had bought of old Mrs. Robbins, I enjoyed a good sound sleep until about five o'clock in the evening, when I awaked. I was on a very high mountain which commanded a view of the road for some distance both ways. Not seeing any one, I descended to the road which led to the Refugio Ranch. It ran through a deep canyon which I remembered having passed on my way to Santa Barbara, and I knew that now I must be at least thirty miles north of that town.

As I was making the best of my way along the road, I suddenly heard the sound of hoofs, and looking up, I saw a horseman approaching me at a full gallop. He was so close upon me that it was impossible to hide from him, and beside, he had seen me and it would have been foolish to attempt it. I loosened my pistol and my knife in my belt to be ready for service in case he attacked me, and awaited his coming. When he reined up in front of me I at once identified him as one of the two men who, it will be remembered, were so curious about my money at the Refugio, on the Fourth. This was not Pedro, but his companion who lived at Las Cruces. He was also a brother of the guide who had gone with me into Santa Barbara. After the first recognition, I tried to deceive him as to my situation, and told him that the Indians had stampeded my horses; but I soon found that he knew all about me and everything that had befallen me in Santa Barbara. He told me furthermore, that Dennison had gone on back to Half-Moon Bay, taking with him all the horses. I suspected this man to be a robber, and of course was anxious to get rid of him. How to do it, however, without any difficulty puzzled me. In the event of his attempting to rob me, which I thought it not unlikely he would do, I did not want to kill him, for it would have caused me a great deal of trouble, to bestow his body, and horse and saddle in such a manner as to prevent discovery. I had a fierce enough pack at my heels already, without wishing to do anything which would render them more savage than they were; and yet, to suffer myself to be robbed by him was out of the question.

He told me he was going into town to get some medicine for a sick brother, and when he returned he would sell me a horse he had at his place. It occurred to me to ask him if he would take a message for me to Gen. Covarrubias, telling him where I was. He at once agreed to do it, and I gave him a four dollar piece. At first he refused to accept it, but after a while did so. After conversing a few moments longer he started off, as I supposed, to go to the city. Presently, however, he returned with a bottle half filled with brandy which he had procured at the Refugio, and offered it to me to drink. I suspected it was poisoned, and very politely told him—"after you, Senor." He drank as I thought, very sparingly, and handed the bottle to me. I took a mouthful of it but did not swallow any. Indeed the liquor was poison enough of itself without any "doctoring."

He now asked me to give him ten dollars more, which I would have done had I had it out of my purse; I had no idea, however, of letting him see my money, and therefore told him that all my money was in twenty dollar pieces, and on his return from Gen. Covarrubias I would give him one of them instead of a ten. My object was to get rid of the fellow, and of course I never intended after he had left, to wait for him, or ever let him see me again if I could help it. I contemplated crossing the mountain of Santa Inez, and then leaving the Coast Range. He appeared satisfied with my answer to his demand, and was about riding away, when something put it into my head to ask him if he knew Jack Power. His eye brightened in a moment, and he replied in Spanish quickly—"Jacky Power v amigo?" I told him "yes." His whole manner at once changed, he appeared very much pleased to know it, and taking a long pull at the suspected bottle, he said to me—"If Jacky Power is your friend, I will have him at this place tomorrow at twelve o'clock." It was then sundown, and he immediately started for Santa Barbara, distant thirty miles. I had not the remotest idea when he rode away of being there the next day, for I had no faith in him; I did not believe he could bring Power to me as he had promised, and I was very anxious to be clear of him. As soon as he had gone, I bent my steps towards the Refugio in search of a place to sleep. I waited until it became quite dark, and then attempted to get into one of the small houses adjacent to the main building, which when I was last there I had observed to be unoccupied. In this attempt I failed, the door being fastened. I managed, however, at length to stumble upon a sort of little out-house, built of adobe, with a tile roof, and laid down inside of it to sleep. I had lain there but a few moments when I heard voices, and presently two men approached conversing in Spanish. One of them entered the house. I lay perfectly quiet, and directly he lit a match which for a moment lighted up the place, but he did not see me, and immediately his companion went away; whereupon he fastened the door on the inside and laid down. Soon afterward, another came to the house and tried to gain admittance, but my companion refused to let him in, and he went away. I waited till I thought my fellow-lodger was asleep, and then stole softly to the door, unfastened it, and went to the garden of the establishment and laid down under a row of willows which were planted inside of the fence.

I subsequently learned, before I left Santa Barbara, that the man who entered the building in which I was secreted, was a prisoner who had broken jail in Santa Barbara while the sheriff and the mob were hunting me, and made his escape. He either had a wife or friend at the Refugio, which accounted for his coming there. I managed notwithstanding the cold night air to get some sleep, but I awoke at daylight shivering and nearly chilled through. I got up, however, and continued my journey toward the mountain of Santa Inez, and before long the warmth of the sun relieved me. I tried very hard to discover the pass by which Ramon, Dennison and I had crossed it, but after two hours of fruitless search I had to give it up. Having thus abandoned all idea of crossing the mountains alone, I determined to await the result of my message to Power. I did not go to the spot where I told my mensenger I would await him, fearing that he might play me false, and, tempted by a reward, bring my enemies upon me. So I moved about a mile and a half down the road nearer the city, and taking a position which commanded a view both ways, secreted myself in the bushes and awaited his arrival. When it had got pretty well on toward noon, I spied two men in the distance coming from the direction of Santa Barbara, and on their nearer approach I was delighted and at the same time surprised to find that it really was Jack and my messenger. They had to ride around the foot of a steep hill before they could pass me, and seeing no one else on the road, I descended from the moontain to meet them. Jack was very glad to see me safe, and told me all my friends in town had come to the conclusion that I was killed. He asked me why the devil I did not remain with the men he had sent to me in the adobe house; and explained that all my friends thought it would be better for me to remain in town a day or two, as there was very little fear of my being discovered where I was, and hence I had not heard from him at three o'clock that morning as had been agreed upon. I reported to him how one of them had attempted to rob me, and told him that I of course thought myself much safer in my own keeping than in such hands, and therefore had left. I then narrated to him my adventures since I had started out on my own account. He swore furiously at the scoundrel who had treated me so ill, and declared that he would cut the rascal's ears off when he saw him. He however asked me if the fellow was not drunk and I told him that he was, which appeared to account to him for his conduct.

He told me that he had had several persons busy the last four days hunting the mountains for me, and when the messenger told him where I was he did not believe that he had seen me till he had shown him my name which I had roughly scratched on a piece of paper when I sent him. Power and I stepped a little aside from the Spaniard, and had a long conversation. He told me that it was suspected in the city that he knew of my whereabouts, and a large sum of money had been offered to him to reveal it, but of course in vain. He told me that though he was poor, he would not have the blood of a helpless man upon his hands, and I might feel quite certain he would never betray me. Of this I was very sure, and although he did not ask me for any money, I gave him one hundred dollars for his kind services to me thus far. When I took out my purse to give him the money, he asked me if the Spaniard had seen it. I assured him that I had been too cautious for that, and he replied that it was well I had been, for the fellow was a robber, and would at any time have murdered me for much less than what I had with me, as would many others of his stamp who were very plenty in that section of the State. He added, however, that there was no danger now of any of them betraying me, because they had learned that I was a good Catholic, and they would not have the reputation of having sold my life to my enemies. Beside that, he told me with a significant expression of the eye, that he was a "medicine man" among them, and they would not provoke him. He then called to the Spaniard, and giving him twenty dollars out of the money I had given him, to which I added five or six dollars more, he bade him go to the Refugio and procure for me a horse, saddle and bridle.

While the Spaniard was absent, Jack told me that his original intention on learning where I was, was to take me to "Los Alamos"—one of the places at which I had stopped as the reader will remember before crossing the mountain of Santa Inez—but that on reflection he thought it best that I should go to a place called the "Arroyo Honde," being the same place where resided my friend Pedro who had been so inquisitive about me on the fourth, when in company with the Spaniard who was then with us. He told me that it was but five miles distant from where we were, and that though the Spaniard could take me there, as he knew the place and the friend to whom he intended to send me, he did not intend to trust him but to go himself. It was not long before the man returned from the Refugio bringing only a naked mule with the information that that was the best he had been able to do. Jack looked suspiciously at him for a moment and then telling him to dismount from his horse, he coolly took the saddle from the animal, and placed it on the mule. The man then spoke in Spanish to Jack who afterward told me that he wanted him to let him take me to his place at Las Cruces. Power told him that he intended to take me to Los Alamos, and that he might either stay where he was or go to the Refugio and wait till his return. I then mounted the mule, and Jack his steed, and we proceeded along the road, leaving the Spaniard and his unsaddled horse to keep each other company. As soon as we were out of his sight, Jack exchanged animals with me. Being a fine rider, he could get along with the mule much better than I, and besides, in case of an unexpected pursuit, his magnificent horse would take much better care of me than the miserable little animal I was on. The horse was very fleet and powerful, and withal perfectly gentle, with a gait as easy as the rocking of a cradle. After making the exchange we got in the road and took the direction of the Arroyo Honde at which place we shortly arrived.

Here I at once discovered that the master of the place was, as I had suspected, none other than my inquisitive friend of the fourth, Don Pedro. Power appeared to have a mysterious influence over all these people. They all respected him, and while many of them would have cut my throat at any time for my money had I been alone and unfriended, his name seemed a talisman which converted them from enemies into hospitable friends. He frankly told Pedro who I was, and what were my troubles, as also who were my friends at Santa Barbara. He informed him that he had brought me to his house for refuge, and as he delivered me to him safe and sound he expected me to be returned to him in the same condition when called for. He told him to take charge of me for a few days, until the hunt after me had begun to flag, or some other and safer place could be found for me. He further charged him to tell no one that I was there, to let no one see me, and particularly to keep my hiding place secret from the Spaniard whom he had just left on the road, calling him by name. All of this Pedro willingly agreed to, and Power then stated the case to his wife and exacted and obtained from her the same pledges. It will be seen that she faithfully and honorable kept her trust to the last, and took care that her children did the same; but the sequel will also show how far her husband kept his.

In order that the events which occurred during my stay at the Arroyo Honde may be fully understood, it is perhaps not amiss here, to give some description of the place and its inhabitants. The Arroyo Honde is a mountain stream which runs for several miles through a narrow mountain gorge or canyon, and empties without any bay or indentation in the coast, directly into the sea. The house of my host is situated in a very wild and romantic spot, at the bottom of the canyon, and within sound of the ocean surf. It is a new structure, built of adobe, with two stories, and very comfortably finished inside. A short distance from the house, and lower down the canyon, is an old hut, built of reeds. There is a garden and orchard on the premises, and also the ruins of a vineyard which once was cultivated by the people of the Mission of Santa Inez; and sufficient plateau, or level land to herd quite a number of cattle. The inhabitants of the place consist of Pedro, his wife and six children; Chino, the eldest boy, Juan, the second, and Avellino, the third; also two little girls, and an infant whose sex I never knew. In the old adobe hut above mentioned, there lived an old Santa Inez Indian, whom they called Konoya. He was bent with age, and must have numbered nearly ninety years. His sole companions were two black dogs. I became, in the course of my sojourn there, quite friendly with old Konoya, but all my attempts to cultivate the acquaintance of those dogs were in vain. They ate at the same table with their master, who always cooked his frugal repast of jerked beef and pinola with his own aged hands, without assistance from the family at the house.

Old Konoya was as black as a negro. He probably had never known what it was to have his head or feet covered, or a coat on his back. His sole raiment was a flannel shirt, and a cloth tied round his loins; he also wore his hair in a long cue fancifully decorated. He never moved on the most trivial occasion without his two dogs following like shadows at his heels. Their sole errand on earth seemed to be to guard that aged Indian, and no persuasion or coaxing could ever produce any other effect than a sullen growl and a closer crouching at their master's feet. The old man's occupation appeared to be to keep the garden fence in repair, and that of the dogs to drive the squirrels out of the corn. Whenever Konoya spoke, the dogs would fly like lightning to do his bidding; but at the sound of any other voice, they would only growl and look into the old man's face for instructions. During the two weeks I was at this place I never succeeded in patting one of them on the head, nor could I have ever crossed the threshold of the Indian's hut without his permission. The old man was a very devout Catholic and counted his beads every morning. When he ascertained that I also was of his religion, he became very friendly with me. He knew that there was some mystery connected with my being there, but never thoroughly understood what it was. He was made aware that men were hunting me, and that no one was to know of my presence there. He frequently brought me warning from the Senora to go further into the woods when strangers were about the premises.

Of the children of my host, Chino, the eldest of the sons, was, I should judge, about seventeen years of age. He was looked upon as a sort of major domo, and had a general supervision of the ranch. Juan, the second son, was about twelve years old, and his business appeared to be to let the water in on the crop from the Arroyo, herd the stock, milk the cows, etc. Little Avellino, the youngest, was his mother's pet, and my favorite. He was a beautiful boy; not more than eight years old, and a perfect child of nature. When in the course of my sojourn at his father's house, it became necessary for me to hide in the mountains, it was the faithful little Avellino that brought me my food, and he was generally the unsuspected little messenger sent by his good mother to warn me of danger, when my pursuers were about her house. He had a little pony of his own, the gift of his grand-father, and he rode him without saddle or bridle. He would take the sash from his waist, and calling the pony to him, who minded him like a dog, he would fasten the end of it around his nose, and then throwing the rest of it over his neck, would seize it in his hand and thus sway himself on to the pony's back, where, when once seated, he was as much at home as if he had been on his feet. He knew that it delighted me to see him ride, and when I would applaud him with "bravo Avellino!" away he would fly like the wind, cutting all manner of capers, and rolling about on the back of his pony like the circus rider in "the drunken sailor scene." When Pedro was away, which was pretty much all the time, he would ride races with his brothers, of which Paisano, they called me, was always chosen judge; and, notwithstanding he sometimes came out behind, I generally found some excuse to decide in his favor.

Dear little Avellino! The remembrance of his warm and faithful little heart will never fade while I live. Neither he, nor any of his brothers had ever been to a school or could read a line of their own language, yet nature had endowed that child with attributes which are wanting in the bosoms of thousands who wear the highest literary honors of the earth—sincere sympathy with the distressed and helpless, hatred of the persecutor, and fearless fidelity to those who reposed confidence in him. I cannot refrain from relating, at the risk of being tedious, one little incident with regard to him, and then I will resume the thread of my narrative.

The little fellow was a frolicksome, laughing child, and very full of what boys call fun. One day when I was secreted in the mountain he came to my hiding place, and shouted "Paisano! vamos! vamos! los Vigilantes!" I immediately sprung up and was hastening up the mountain in double quick time, when I was arrested by a loud laugh from the urchin. On looking round I perceived that I had been "sold" and the little scamp was enjoying my fright immenseley. I was vexed that he should thus make a sport of my miseries, and I have no doubt my features showed it. The child stopped laughing and approached me, put his arms around my knees and looked up into my face with his large dark eyes in which I could read sorrow for having caused me unnecessary alarm; and murmuring "pauvrecito" he took some pears out of his little pocket and gave them to me. I could scarcely refrain from tears. He never gave me a false alarm again. With this description of my retreat and its inhabitants I again return to my story

The well-known St. Germain Restaurant has once more returned to the downtown section. The restaurant is now housed in a beautiful building at 60-64 Ellis street between Powell and Stockton streets and is more commodiously and luxuriously equipped than ever before in its history. The St. Germain has always been a favorite place for banquets and family dinners and there is no doubt that its popularity will be enhanced from now on, not only on account of its central location but also on account of the splendor of its surroundings and the excellence of its cuisine.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 21,256, Department No. 8.

MARGARET G. LINER, and ROSE McKOWN, formerly ROSE LINER, Plaintiffs, vs.

All Persons Claiming any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Margaret G. Liner and Rose McKown, formerly Rose Liner, plaintiffs, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Twentieth Street, distant thereon Fifty (50) feet Westerly from the Westerly line of Noe Street, running thence Westerly along the said Northerly line of Twentieth Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly Ninety-eight (98) feet; thence at right angles Easterly Twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at right angles Southerly Ninety-eight (98) feet to the Northerly line of Twentieth Street and point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block No. 112.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiffs will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiffs are the owners of said property in fee simple absolute; that their title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiffs recover their costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of April, A. D. 1910.

Auto Notes

Between 35,000 and 40,000 miles is the service had by W. L. Brolock of The California Auto Parts Co. of this city from a Diamond Tire on his Ford car. He writes The Diamond Rubber Co. that this tire was put on his machine over three years ago and has been in constant service ever since, having made three round trips between San Francisco and Seattle. He also used the car in the rent service during the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. He further adds that this tire has outworn three sets of other makes to date.

J. W. Leavitt is in receipt of a recent communication from E. G. Eagers who is the foreign traveling representative of the Willys-Overland Company. Mr. Eagers had just left Hawaii for Sidney, Australia. While in Hawaii he climbed the side of the volcano of Kilauea in a model "38" Overland car. "The little car," he writes, "went to the mouth of the crater, an elevation of 4000 feet, without the slightest falter." Two sales immediately resulted from the feat.

J. L. Whitmore, manager of the Central Automobile Company of Stockton and agent for the Pioneer Automobile Company in that territory, is in town to place orders for several new cars. Mr. Whitmore reports business in Stockton 200 per cent better this season than in any previous year. The roads according to his statement are fine in the Stockton vicinity and the active touring season is opening up. He also states that the model M 6 cylinder "40" Thomas recently delivered to E. C. Wagner is the delight of the Stockton auto fraternity.

Recently Mr. J. H. Carpenter of New York, well known as one of the founders of the Automobile Club of America, purchased a lightweight 20 horsepower Hupmobile runabout. Mr. Carpenter is himself an owner of several big cars and the fact that he has taken to the smaller car is rather significant. He spent considerable time at the salesroom of the H. J. Koehler Co., New York, inspecting the little machine and left fully convinced as to its ability to fill the bill in every particular.

The firm of J. K. Armsby & Co. has added another Chalmers-Detroit to its list of automobiles for the use of its salesmen. The Chalmers has proved most satisfactory and it is expected that before the end of this season the Armsby Co. will have a large number of these cars in its service.

"A number of automobiles are being used in the big oil fields in Southern California for transportation purposes," said Mr. A. G. Brooks Ridley of the Standard Motor Car Company who returned from an extended trip through that part of the State. According to the traveling salesman and representative of the Standard Motor Car Company, the demand for machines in the oil section and the use to which the cars are being put is one of the most unusual features in the history of the trade on this coast. All through the Coalinga and Midway fields people are putting them in the rent service and the cars are being used to transfer people from one district to another, most of them operating from Bakersfield. Most of the men who have had cars in this service for any length of time have made a great deal of money out of it and as a result the demand for cars in that territory is very good. Several of these companies have been using Ford machines for the past two years and have had very good success and when it is considered that under the traffic arrangements these machines carry from four to seven people each over the rough roads of this section of the State the showing of these small cars is considered remarkable. People are buying all through the country and according to the indications and reports received the coming season will be one of the best. Ridley closed sales for a number of Ford cars during his trip.

Mr. W. E. Travis of the Hotel St. Francis in his Big Six 1910 model Stevens-Duryea made the run from the foot of Mt. Hamilton to the top in twenty-six minutes and on his return home was told that twenty-three minutes was the record. Now he is feeling very badly, as it would have been no effort on his part to have lowered this record. The trip was made entirely on the high speed, no gear shifting necessary, and although the car is one hundred and forty-two inch wheel base there was no difficulty in making all turns without slacking up or backing. Although it was an extremely warm day there were no radiator troubles.

Geo. Forderer who recently took delivery of a new Pope-Hartford has just had the car equipped with Morgan & Wright Nobby Tread Tires secured from Weinstock & Nichols Co.

F. L. Brown, the Oakland capitalist and oil man, has been making numerous runs into the country in his new "Little Six" Winton touring car. Last Sunday the trip was made to San Rafael and into Marin County. The tours to be made in the near future are Ben Lomond, Santa Maria, Oroville and a trip to Los Angeles. Mr. Brown is accompanied on these pleasure jaunts by Mrs. Brown, their chauffeur and two guests.

McDuffie Motor Company's Chalmers "30" continues to make wonderful runs in Denver and outlying districts. E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company is just in receipt of another telegram from them reading: "Our Chalmers thirty made two trips from Denver to Colorado Springs and return recently, three hundred miles; total running time twelve hours and forty-five minutes, forty minutes stop between runs; carried full load; never missed a shot, not even a puncture; roads heavy with mud and slush; another double header soon."

DORA I. WALTON, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or any Part Thereof, Defendants.

Action in rem brought against all the world in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the complaint filed in said City and County in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting.

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Dora I. Walton, the above-named plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Douglas Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Fifteen (115) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-third Street; running thence Northerly along the said Easterly line of Douglas Street Fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Thirty-four (134) feet and Three (3) inches; thence at right angles Southerly Fifty (50) feet, and thence at right angles Westerly One Hundred and Thirty-four (134) feet and Three (3) inches to the point of commencement. Portion of Horner's Addition Block Number Two Hundred and Sixteen (216).

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: The judgment of this Court establishing plaintiff's title to said real property and determining all adverse claims thereto, and declaring plaintiff to be the owner in fee simple absolute of all the above described real property and each and every part thereof free and clear of any liens or encumbrances, and for general relief and costs of suit.

Witness my hand and the Seal of said Court this 28th day of April, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

DOTTIE LILLIAN PARSONS, Plaintiff, vs.
EDWARD EUGENE PARSONS, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Edward Eugene Parsons, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that , unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 29,006.

ROSE P. BLOW, Plaintiff, vs.
CHARLES H. BLOW, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Charles H. Blow, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of plaintiff continuously for more than one (1) year last past; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of April, A. D. 1910. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE SOLD

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Alameda.

In the Matter of the Estate of HANNAH S. CRANE, Deceased.

MARY N. HUSSEY having presented to the Judge of this Court her verified petition praying for an order of this Court to sell the real estate belonging to said estate at public or private sale, and it appearing to the Judge of this Court from such petition that it is necessary and would be for the advantage, benefit and best interests of the estate and those interested therein to sell the said real estate for the purposes and reasons therein mentioned, and said petition having been filed in the Clerk's office of this County;

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Alameda, Department No. 4 thereof, on the 20th day of May, 1910, at ten o'clock a. m. of said day at the Courtroom of said Court, at the Courthouse in the City of Oakland, County of Alameda, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of said deceased to sell the said real estate at either public or private sale.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for a period of four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, in which said City and County said real property desired to be sold is situated.

Dated this 13th day of April, 1910. WM. S. WELLS, Judge.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 9369, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of EDWIN WALLACE CARPENTER, Deceased.

MAX THELEN, the Administrator with the Will Annexed of the Estate of Edwin Wallace Carpenter, deceased, having presented to this Court and filed herein his verified petition praying for an order for the sale of all the real property of the above named decedent, for the purposes therein set forth; and it appearing to this Court that it is for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the said estate and those interested therein that the whole of the real estate belonging to the said estate be sold, and that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate of the said decedent in order to pay the expenses and charges of administration;

It is therefore ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said deceased appear before this Court on Tuesday, the 31st day of May, 1910, at the Courtroom of Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, at the corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator with the Will Annexed to sell the whole of the real estate belonging to the said deceased, at either private or public sale as he shall judge to be most beneficial for the said estate.

It is further ordered that a copy of this Order be published once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated, the 21st day of April, 1910.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 20,653.

MARY E. NORMAN, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of MARY E. NORMAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

FIRST PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street, distant thereon seventy-five (75) feet Easterly from the Easterly line of Sanchez Street, thence running Easterly and along said Southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Southerly ninety (90) feet; thence at a right angle Westerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

SECOND PARCEL.—Commencing at the point of the intersection of the lines of the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, thence running along the South side of Twenty-fourth Street in an Easterly direction fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles in a Southerly direction parallel with Vicksburg Street ninety (90) feet; thence at right angles in a Westerly direction running parallel with Twenty-fourth Street fifty (50) feet; thence along Vicksburg Street Northerly ninety (90) feet to the point of commencement.

THIRD PARCEL.—Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street, distant thereon ninety (90) feet Southerly from the Southeast corner of Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg Streets, and running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Vicksburg Street Twenty-four (24) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Vicksburg Street twenty-four (24) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street seventy-five (75) feet to the Easterly line of Vicksburg Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Horner's Addition Block No. 88.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that the title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 17th day of March, A. D. 1910.

NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE AT PUBLIC AUCTION

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, No. 5260, Dept. No. 10, Probate.
Honorable Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

In the Matter of the Estate of TERESA MURPHY, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an Order of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, made on the 15th day of March, 1910, in the matter of the estate of TERESA MURPHY, deceased, the undersigned, executor of the last will of said deceased, will sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the confirmation by said Court, the following described real property, to-wit:

All those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land situated in the City and County of San Francisco, in the State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

First—Commencing at the corner formed by the intersection of the Northerly line of Ivy Street with the Easterly line of Webster Street; running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Webster Street, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly, ninety-two (92) feet; thence at right angles Southerly, twenty-five (25) feet to the said Northerly line of Ivy Street; and thence at right angles Westerly, along the last named line, ninety-two (92) feet, to the point of commencement. Being portion of Fifty Vara Lot Number Four (4) in Western Addition Block Number Two Hundred and Eighty-five (285), together with the improvements thereon.

Second—Commencing at the corner formed by the intersection of the Southeasterly line of Natoma Street with the Southwesterly line of Russ Street; and running thence Southwesterly along said line of Natoma Street, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at a right angle Southeasterly, seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles Northeasterly twenty-five (25) feet, to said Southwesterly line of Russ Street; and thence Northwesterly along the last named line, seventy-five (75) feet, to the point of commencement. Being portion of One Hundred Vara Lot Number Two Hundred and forty (240).

Third—Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Oak Street, distant thereon, one hundred and thirty-seven feet six inches (137 feet 6 inches) Westerly from the Westerly line of Buchanan Street; and running thence Westerly, along said line of Oak Street, twenty-seven feet six inches (27 feet six inches); thence at right angles Southerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet, to the Northerly line of Lilly Avenue; thence at right angles Easterly along the last named line, twenty-seven feet six inches (27 feet 6 inches); and thence at right angles Northerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet, to the point of commencement. Being portion of Western Addition Block Number Two Hundred and Eighty-eight (288), together with the improvements thereon.

Said sale will be made on Thursday, the 12th day of May, 1910, at the hour of 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the real estate rooms of Madison & Burke, Number 30 Montgomery Street, in said City and County of San Francisco.

Terms of Sale—Cash, gold coin of the United States; ten per cent of the purchase money to be paid to the auctioneer on the day of sale, and the remainder of the purchase money to be paid on confirmation of the sale by said Court. Deed at expense of purchaser.

Dated, April 12th, 1910. VALENTINE J. SMYTH,
Executor of the Last Will of Teresa Murphy, Deceased.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Number 20,439, Department No. 4.

HELEN M. BONNET, Plaintiff, vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, Defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of HELEN M. BONNET, Plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Sixth Avenue, distant thereon Three Hundred and Seventy-five (375) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Lake Street, and running thence Northerly along said Westerly line of Sixth Avenue Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one Hundred and Twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Southerly Twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet to the point of commencement. Being part of Outside Land Block "B."

You are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that her title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 3rd day of March, A. D. 1910.
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

The first publication of this summons was made in "Town Talk" newspaper on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1910.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff: Name, None; Addresses, None.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8071, Dept. No. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of MATILDA WOLFF, Deceased.

William Wolff, the Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of MATILDA WOLFF, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of all of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes and in the manner therein set forth.

It is therefore ordered by the Hon. Thos. F. Graham, Judge of Department No. 10 of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 16th day of May, 1910, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate—of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said William Wolff, Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of MATILDA WOLFF, deceased, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased MATILDA WOLFF at either private or public sale and as prayed for in said petition as shall be necessary for the best interests of said estate.

And that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Dated, April 11th, A. D. 1910.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed April 11th, 1910. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By E. B. Gilson, Deputy Clerk.

The Memory of Fishes

Even the fishes of the sea have pictures on memory's wall. Experiments have been made with several fishes as to their faculties for remembering, but the most striking results have been obtained with the gray perch, which lives chiefly on a small silvery-hued sardine. Some of these were taken and colored red and were then put into the tank where the perch was, with several silver colored sardines. Of course, the normal sardines were at once seized and eaten, but it was not until hungry that the perch made a tentative meal of one of the red colored victims.

On recognizing the sardine flavor, however, he promptly demolished the remaineder. Later the perch devoured the sardines irrespective of color, thus showing not only traces of a memory, but also the power to differentiate color.

Subsequently sardines colored red and blue were placed in the tank, together with the silver ones. The same scene was repeated, the blue sardines not being attacked until the others were eaten and hunger compelled investigation of the newcomers. After this introduction the perch ate the sardines of all three types without any difficulty.

Some spines of the sea nettle were then fastened to the blue sardines. These were at once avoided by the perch, who promptly got out of the way of the newcomers. This showed traces of memory, as the results of contact with the sea nettle were shown and recognized.

Wealth in Ambergris

The story of how a Manchester (N. H.) painter found in the St. Lawrence river a lump of grayish substance weighing 38 pounds, and how he has discovered that the solid, fatty stuff is ambergris, and is worth $30,000, recalls the nearest thing to romance that ever entered into the lives of Gloucester and New Bedford whalers in the old days when American whalers dared every sea. It was like a lottery. Once in a lifetime you might chance on the decaying body of a whale giving off an awful smell, and inside that whale would be a fortune enough so that you would never have to go to sea again. Charles Reade, as far as we remember, is the only writer to introduce ambergris into fiction. In "Love Me Little, Love Me Long," Davil tells Miss Fountain how "the skipper stuffed their noses and ears with cotton steeped in aromatic vinegar, and they lighted short pipes and broached the brig upon the putrescent monster and grappled to it; and the skipper jumped on it and drove his spade (sharp steel) in behind the whale's side fins." It is a matter of record that not far from the Windward Island a Yankee skipper, in one of the best old whaling years, did cut out of a whale 130 pounds of ambergris, which was sold for $2,500. The price quoted for many years was $6 an ounce. Ambergris is often found floating on the sea, particularly off the coast of Brazil and of Madagascar. The Bahamas send more than any other source to the market. The stuff is a secretion of the sperm whale which dies of the disease producing the perfume matter. Chemists find it hard to account for the fact that the smell of the dead whale is so horrible when the substance taken out is valuable only as a source of sweet smells.

Of the Fair Sex

A woman wants her gloves to fit without a wrinkle—also her skin.

A woman seldom loses her head over a man who has lost his hair.

If a woman hasn't any faith in men, the probability is she's spent all her faith on one man.

Although being given away, brides generally retain their self-possession.

Some women would sooner have a graceful carriage than a costly automobile.

If beauty is a passing thing, it's a wonder more women don't grab it as it passes

A Label for Married Men

Ought a married man to be labeled and badged, just as a married woman is, with a special title and a wedding-ring? Certain Illinois ladies have persuaded their Senator that such a change is urgent, and he is willing to give effect to his conviction by bringing a bill into the United States Senate, if only the ladies can fix upon the designation that shall distinguish between the bachelor and the already appropriated treasure. This is a problem, certainly. In France, the tiniest little fellow is already "Monsieur," and remains so called through life. With us the small boy is "Master" to the servants, but he becomes "Mister" with the budding of his moustache. In no country does marriage alter the masculine prefix. But even if the Illinois ladies could invent some distinctive title, and order it to be adopted with a wedding-ring on marriage by all husbands, it would matter little, alas! to the bold, bad man who wished to pose as unappropriated; he could say that he was a widower, or slip his wedding-ring into his card-case and lock them both in his trunk when he was away from home. When at home, of course, it would not matter if he were labeled, for everybody would know his captured condition!

"Done Oncommon Well"

Baroness Cederstrom, better known as Mme. Patti, tells an amusing incident that happened to her on one occasion in an isolated village in the north side of Yorkshire. A concert was gotten up in aid of the village institution and the baroness duly took tickets and went. But not half the performers turned up and Mme. Patti—incognita—seeing the difficulty of the chairman, offered to oblige them with a song. After she had rendered three of her most popular ballads in her own perfect way, the chairman thanked her. "Well, ma'am," he said, "you've done oncommon well, and although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, mum."

Physicians' Maladies

A French newspaper publishes some statistics showing the causes of death in the medical profession. The figures are impressive, but there is no indication as to the source of the information. We read that 44 per cent die of heart disease, 20 per cent from nervous affections, 20 per cent from the morphia habit, and 7 per cent from tuberculosis. The prevalence of morphia is ascribed to the fact that a doctor knows when his malady is incurable, and morphia is sought to soothe the mind.

The Passing of a King

The death of a King is more impressive than the death of any other of God's creatures because it brings home to us with peculiar poignancy the insignificance of man, the vanities of life, the puerility of pomp, the untenability of power. When the news of King Edward's death was flashed to the ends of the earth, what sensations and reflections crowded upon the countless millions that pondered the royal tragedy! Keen was the emotion of sorrow that it inspired, but keener still was the feeling of awe that possessed all men as in their mind's eye they saw inexorable Fate snatch a glittering diadem from a royal brow bathed in the moisture of the death-agony. Awe-inspiring was the scene that impressed itself upon the imagination: the clay tenement of a monarch falling into decay in the gorgeous chamber of an ancient palace; his spirit in the presence of a perpetual King who holds us in his hands and smiles at our fleeting glory. This scene, the final one in the life drama of the occupant of one of the most glorious of earthly thrones, remind us that "Death comes equally to us all and makes us all equal when he comes," but even for the envious there is no satisfaction in the reminder.

A Discreet Monarch

So much has been said with reference to the life and character and conduct of King Edward that it is difficult to conceive of a point on which there has not been some comment. We can think of no greater tribute to pay to his memory than that which is conveyed in the unadorned statement of a simple truth—he won the hearts of the people. Much can be said of Albert Edward in terms of eulogy without having one's sincerity challenged. Of whom all the world flattered in his lifetime it can now be said without the slightest exaggeration that he gave a flawless performance on a resplendent stage in a continuous pageant. In a country now torn by factional strife, he made the Crown, which is now but little more than the symbol of national majesty, the one object of attachment, elevating it above every contention and division. Whilst the latter part of his reign was not distinguished by the smooth working of constitutional machinery, always apparent was the superiority of the Crown to anything like party favoritism, always notable was the hearty sympathy which the King showed for all the varied interests of all classes of his subjects. In short Albert Edward was an ideal King under the British constitution, behaving as he did "like an eminent citizen invested with temporary magistracy." To refrain from interference is one of the chief duties of a King under the British constitution, and King Edward deserves as much praise for doing nothing as for doing right. It is a discreet man that knows when and where to do nothing and King Edward possessed discretion above all other qualities.

The Hereditary Principle

According to some writers in England as well as in this country King Edward's death occurred at a time when the nation could ill afford to spare the power of his personality. There is a sorry tangle in England's political affairs at this time, and to make matters worse King George is believed to be lacking in magnetism and to have certain defects of temperament. According to some vociferous Democrats on this side of the pond King George being an illustration of the absurdity of the hereditary principle the throne may topple in the present crisis. This is balderdash. There is nothing that can more strongly vindicate the stability of the constitutional monarchy of England than a weak sovereign. The King of England can do wrong, but he is not able to do enough wrong to upset the Constitution. Whether by nature a tyrant or a cipher he is equally harmless. He can create hereditary legislators, he can call into existence and dimiss parliaments, he can frustrate the legislation of both Houses by withholding his assent, he can make war or peace at pleasure; but practically he can do none of these things except ministerially and at the instance of advisers virtually nominated by the House of Commons. In the earlier ages of the monarchy, when the lines of the Constitution were ill defined and irregularly observed aggressive Kings exercised their powers autocratically, but in modern times these powers have been exercised by the Sovereign in the capacity of a trustee and by regulation of law and custom as the fiduciary duties of men in commercial life are prescribed by the rules and practices of courts of equity. Englishmen thoroughly understand the limitations of the Crown, and whilst many of them are prejudiced against the hereditary principle so far as it relates to the Peers they are well satisfied with their constitutional monarchy. They appreciate the fact that their forefathers made wise provision against the chance of hereditary descent giving them a fool for a sovereign. Tom Paine told them that nature had turned the hereditary principle into ridicule by frequently giving them an ass in place of a lion, but having observed that the people under the republican form of government are inclined occasionally to mistake the bray of an ass for the roar of a lion they are in no hurry to abandon the faith of their fathers.

The War Against Wealth

A correspondent who suspects us of being in sympathy with malefactors of great wealth wants to know upon what ground we justify our opposition to the war against wealth. We regret that the sentiments expressed in these columns from time to time have caused us to be misunderstood on a subject of great importance. Because we have taken occasion to criticise the critics of rich malefactors it is inferred that we are in sympathy with men who have accumulated riches by dishonest methods. This is far from the truth. We have not the slightest objection to the reprobation of the especial objects of Mr. Roosevelt's hatred. At the same time we do not approve Mr. Roosevelt's ebullitions of passionate reproach, the reason being that in holding an ugly type up to execration he indulges in vague and confusing generalities that are productive of an inexcusable and mischievous prejudice. Unintentionally, perhaps, Mr. Roosevelt has made the rich real outcasts of society. He has incensed the common people against them to such an extent that there is a probability of special missions being organized for them in the near future. He has created a widespread impression that it is wrong to amass great fortunes, and the result of the war of today against capital is that greater injury is done to the poor than to the rich. Now as a matter of fact under our system of government it is not wrong to accumulate wealth. We have not yet gone in for equality of capital, and until we do we should not outlaw men who possess the gift that is mentioned in Scripture—"The Lord thy God giveth thee power to get wealth." Instead of exciting the envy and prejudice of those who are not familiar by intuition with the laws of supply and demand, who have no presience for the coming changes in the market, and who are not given to industry and frugality, we should endeavor to make the wealth of capital join hands with the wealth of intellect for the common good. The wealth against which there may be a legitimate prejudice is not only that which has been dishonestly acquired but that which is hoarded for personal gratification and grandeur or held for love of the mean power that issues therefrom. The vulgar rich who have no gods but pomp and power are the greatest enemies of society. Against them Mr. Roosevelt seems to have no prejudice, since he hobnobs with them occasionally.

Conservation Becoming Unpopular

Some months ago we observed that in our solicitude for posterity we were doing injustice to ourselves and that this was not a sensible way to promote the interests of the next generation. Though the proposition ought to be obvious to the average intelligence it failed of apprehension. The average intelligence often rejects self-evident propositions to pay homage to what seems to be the yoke of authority, and accepts as incontestable absurdities that are asserted with great solemnity under the guise of indisputable principles of morality. Conservation has been urged upon us as a moral principle, and it has been warmly espoused because we have been in the throes of moral ecstasy. The conservationists have accompanied their adjurations in the cause of posterity with cries of "Stop thief!" and the average citizen deemed it advisable to swell the chorus in order to avert suspicion from himself. To manifest a consuming affection for posterity became an easy way of vindicating one's patriotism. To win recognition as a conservation propagandist was to achieve distinction as a man of exalted motives. But the obsession has relaxed, the spell has been broken. In several of our western States it has dawned on the intellectuals of what are known as leading citizens that conservation means a drag-chain on the wheels of the chariot of progress. In conventions assembled the leading citizens are protesting against the sequestration of State resources and demanding that the Federal authorities mind their own business. They see no reason why development of their respective States should be retarded for the benefit of posterity. Nay, with a remarkable power of recondite analysis they are pointing out the anomalies of the position assumed by the conservationists on the academic question as to whether it is to the advantage of posterity to discourage contemporary capital. And this is not all. The Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, life-long friend of the honest farmer, industrious student of economic conditions, with an experience of industrial affairs acquired in three Cabinets, has discovered that conservation is responsible for the tide of emigration that is surging from Uncle Sam's dominions into Canada. He declares that our settlers have been tormented beyond endurance by the restrictions placed upon them by the young men of the forestry service who have just emerged from college where they were educated at the expense of the government under the Pinchot system. Secretary Wilson finds that there are 4,000,000 acres of land held under the dominion of the reservation officials which can be cultivated by legitimate settlers. He says that thousands of American born citizens have gone to Canada in disgust provoked by our bureaucrats, and that he has determined to put an end to small officialism. So the backfiring of the conservationists is about to be conducted under good auspices.

A Woman's Noble Mission

Now comes Mrs. Philip Verril Mighels to serve society as a prophetess of the contagious moral uplift. Mrs. Mighels has a mission the inspiration of which is somewhat akin to that which is causing many good people to cultivate the habit of being scandalized. Mrs. Mighels' specialty is the purging of literature. Others, persuaded that a sudden fit of laughter is a breach of the Decalogue, that mirth is wanton and diversion profane, may consecrate themselves to the task of causing all the little ornaments of life to be regarded as penicious pomps and vicious vanities, but Mrs. Mighels will concentrate all her talents on the work of reducing the vast volume of printed matter in the world to a compact mass of refined literature. To that end she has taken up a refining rod which tests the value of literature, and everything that does not stand the test she will put to the torch with the same enthusiasm with which bigots once upon a time nailed the ears of heretics to the town pump. It goes without saying that Mrs. Mighels is in every sense qualified to act as a censor of the written word. Were she not a competent critic she would not have the presumption to undertake so exalted a mission. Doubtless years of labor, of study and comparison have brought her critical judgment to maturity. She is in all probability mistress of all shades of appreciation. She is perhaps a Jeremy Collier in skirts; and Jeremy was the admiration of his age. He established a great reputation as a critic. And he had the courage of his catholic prejudices. He pronounced Shakespeare, Congreve and Dryden obscene and blasphemous. He was intolerant of Juvenal because, as he said, that individual wrote "more like a pimp than a poet." Mrs. Mighels probably feels the same way about Juvenal as well as about Ovid, who was banished from Rome on account of his verses, and about the licentious Catullus, also. So far she has dealt only with "Three Weeks," "The Devil" and a few other up-to-date works, but in time she will get round to the classics, tell us that she agrees with the Parthians about the disgracefulness of the Milesian romances and make a special event of the burning of the Satiricon.

We know that she is not to be deterred by the reputation of authors who are cherished by the so-called literati. We have already seen her tackle Flaubert. The literary world is still laughing at Imperial France for being shocked at that unspeakable glorification of adultery, "Madame Bovary," but Mrs. Mighels, deaf to the echoes of unseemly mirth, consigned the Madame to her funeral pyre without benefit of clergy. If the literary world had challenged her critical judgment on that occasion she would have retorted with the question propounded by Flaubert's prosecutor—"Gentlemen, did Madame Bovary love her husband, or did she even try to love him?" The literary world may scoff at Mrs. Mighels, but the literary world is a speck in the habitable globe compared to the world of virtuous Philistines who will applaud our prophetess of the moral uplift. Mrs. Mighels will receive prodigious encouragement in her laudable efforts to banish from teeming shelves the books that make us sympathize with reprehensible emotions, that give us false notions of self-sacrifice, and sinful notions of compassion; books that excite dangerous passions and that rouse admiration for splendid and voluptuous sinners. In the course of time, after she has made smoke of the innumerable novels of illicit sexual passion, she will feed the flames with the fiction that exalts other kinds of abominable lust. Being a sincere moralist she will not discriminate. Even Dickens must suffer. Who that has viewed his pictures of middle-class manners in the early part of the last century has not been filled with disgust by the intemperance of Pickwick? All good Prohibitionists, we are sure, have been shocked by Pickwick, subjected as he was to a long course of alcohol. The book, reeking as it does of brandy and water, is not to be purified except by fire. Mrs. Mighels will do her duty as she sees it; and let us pray that before weariness comes upon her she will have constructed an incenerator large enough to accommodate the indecent muckraking magazines and the obscene daily papers.

Praise in the Wilderness

Bare wilderness, you have grown fair to me.
  The fragrance of the rose above the thron
Endues me in the hour of ecstasy,
  When through dark night I dream of radiant morn.

To me you have been as the tombing earth
  Is to the seed when darkness feeds desire.
Till longing quickens to the time of birth
  And dust yields beauty to the informing fire.

O wilderness! Out of your barren ways
  Are born immortal roses that our tears
Sustained in starless nights and flowerless days,
  Through dense illusion of our mortal years.

* * * * * * *

Turn back again, you faithful who possess
  The rose's guerdon! Pilgrims, turn again,
And cry, "Joy blossoms in the wilderness!
  O brothers, leave the cities of the plain!"

—Althea Gyles.

Perspective Impressions

The rivalry between Teddy and the comet is becoming keener every day.

Much of the militant morality in this world is caused by vinegar in the veins of the virtuous.

"We are compelled to apologize for being citizens of San Francisco"—Rev. E. R. Dille. No need of apologizing as San Francisco is wonderfully tolerant and doesn't mind a Dille here and there.

The Rev. C. N. Lathrop demands that the tenderloin district be made "a safe place for the boys and girls of working men and women." Why not have it made "a safe place" for clergymen also?

The Mayor of San Jose has a vocabulary of invective by no means inferior to that of Mayor McCarthy. In a public speech the other day he characterized the Hayes brothers' newspapers as "lying, hypocritical, defamatory, scurrilous, crow-eating, treasonable, slanderous, pestilential and yellow."

The Hon. Hiram Johnson appears to have pull enough to keep his Santa Rosa client in the background till the campaign is over.

At the so-called "mass meeting of civic decency" held last Sunday the assembled multitude was guilty of the indecency of denying a respectable woman the right of free speech.

Premier Knudsen is accused of misquoting Mr. Roosevelt. Needless to say Mr. Roosevelt is the accuser. Why shouldn't the Norwegian Premier organize in his own country a branch of the great American Ananias Club?

Last week we advised everybody to watch "Red" Hayes make all the insurgents look like cripples in the race back to the White House. Before Town Talk was off the press Mr. Hayes, speaking of Mr. Roosevelt in the San Jose Mercury, said: "He will endorse the President because he sees that he has done his best within the limits of his authority to redeem the pledges of his party and of himself."

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(In the preceding chapters the hero of this serial story tells of the assassination of the Bulletin's first editor, of the organization of the Vigilantes, of their pursuit of him, and of his flight to Santa Barbara, where after many vicissitudes he was conducted to a place of temporary safety by Jack Power, a highwayman who figured in the romantic history of early California. In the fifth instalment McGowan was again in imminent danger, and Power again came to his aid and baffled his pursuers.)

(Sixth Instalment)

As soon as Jack had finished his explanations with regard to me, the Senora cooked some jerked beef and made us some warm tea, and we enjoyed a hearty repast. After-dinner I offered the Senora a Mexican doubloon but she refused to accept it. Power told me she would not accept money for her hospitality, and advised me, if I wished to make her a present, to take some other mode of doing it; which I determined to do on the first opportunity. Jack and I then went up stairs to take some sleep, as it would be necessary for him to remain with me until night, in order not to return too soon to the Refugio, and thus undeceive the Spaniard as to his having taken me to Los Alamos. As soon as it was dark Power saddled his horse, and before he left told me that he was going in a few days to Los Angeles in order to be followed there by my pursuers, if he could succeed in making them believe he had taken me in that direction. He told Pedro to send a pack mule into town the next morning, and he would load him with some coffee, sugar, and other necessaries; then taking with him the mule that we got from the Refugio, he bid us good bye and rode away.

Let the world say what it will of Jack Power—he is not a bad man at heart, and his conduct toward me proved it. I am not the apologist or the friend of any man who lives at open war with society, and bids defiance to the laws, whether in the character of a highway robber, or that of a hypocritical reformer, who under the protection of Vigilance Committees, sets our Constitution at naught, and saps the foundations on which rest our prosperity and respectability as a people; but, admitting all that the newspapers may report concerning this man to be true, he certainly did, in my case, exhibit traits utterly foreign to the character of an unscrupulous ruffian such as he has been represented to be, and it would be an act of base ingratitude on my part to leave unimproved an opportunity of rescuing from universal odium the name of one to whom I am indebted for the opportunity of laying this history of my wrongs before the world; so far as a truthful statement of facts as to his conduct can so rescue it. He knew me only by reputation and sight. He saw me for the first time in many years, at a moment when my life hung so nicely in the balance that a feather's weight would have decided it. He knew not how justly I was pursued; he only knew how ruthlessly. He saw that in an instant more, perhaps, my life would have been sacrificed, and, prompted by some feeling not to be found in the heart of an assassin, he saved me. I had no claim upon his friendship, I had no feelings or associations in common with him, I had never even spoken to him that I remember. He knew that a price was set upon my head, and he knew that it was in his power to earn it; and that too without being suspected of having done so; and again, obeying the mandates of a voice that never whispers into the ear of a robber, though poor, he loftily scorned to better himself by such baseness; and, not content with being true to me himself, he exercised all his energies, influence and ingenuity to keep others so. He may be a "robber chief," as the press has designated him, or he may not. I know nothing of his offences against society; I only know that in his intercourse with me, I found him a brave and noble hearted man, willing to risk his life on the side of a persecuted and outraged stranger; and I fervently hope that for that, the Recording Angel will drop a blotting tear upon the page of his misdeeds.

Early the next morning, (the twelfth of July) Pedro was ready to start with the pack mule. I gave him eight dollars to buy his children some "dulces," also money to get his eldest boy Chino a hat, and some brandy for himself and me, and off he started to town. I remained about the house all that day and the next, without anything of interest occurring, and in the evening of the second day, Pedro returned with everything, including a pair of shoes, blanket and checked shirt, which Power had sent to me; I however discovered, that though the brandy had arrived with the other things, it was not in its "original package," but was contained in Pedro's skin. He had left town with it all right, but, it being a very hot and dusty day, he became dry, and then drier, and at length very dry, and had finished by emptying the jug, which he left upon the road as a useless encumbrance. He endeavored to excuse himself by telling me that my friend, Gen. Covarrubias, had instructed him not to give me any brandy as I was imprudent when drinking, and might bring trouble on myself. This appeared all very well, but I was compelled to doubt the statement knowing that the General could appreciate a good glass of brandy himself, and was not likely to wish to deny me the same comfort. However, I made up my mind to do without it, and, indeed, it was much better for me. During my stay at the Arroyo, my corpulency began to diminish, and I perceived that I was again getting into some sort of shape, while my general health was never better.

During the first few days of my stay at the Arroyo I slept in the house, amusing myself in the day time with the children. Nothing of note occurred until about the fourth day, when my friend, the Spaniard who had been deceived by Power about my whereabouts, called at the house. I was up stairs while he was there and overheard his conversation with the Senora and Pedro. He had discovered that he had been deceived by Power, and had been hunting me up. He asked Pedro if he had heard or seen anything of me, to which Pedro replied that he had not. I had by this time picked up enough of Spanish to understand the general drift of their talk. The Spaniard expressed it as his opinion that Jacky Power had killed me for my money, and hid my body somewhere. Pedro appeared to be very much astonished at such a suspicion. The wretch little knew that I was then safely listening to him, from a place of refuge which Jack had provided to save me from being murdered and robbed by him. After some further conversation with the family, he went away as wise as he came, as far as my masters were concerned.

On the twelfth day of July, a relation of Pedro came to the Arroyo. He was driving a band of cattle, and made that point his stopping place for the night. While he was there, I, of course, kept myself out of sight. He was, I think, the god-father of Avellino, and before he left the next morning, presented him with a fat, three year old steer. The gift was a very welcome one, as there had not been any fresh meat about the place for several days. The day of his departure, while I was lying in my room, I heard a voice that struck me as being very familiar. The speaker was talking Spanish, however, and I did not understand what he said. After he had gone I looked after him and at once recognized him. It was Robert Hays, Esq., the brother of the present U. S. Surveyor General, for California. Although I knew him very intimately, I did not hail him, as he had several persons with him. Poor Bob! It was to be the last time I ever saw him on earth. He has since died. He had a six mule team with him, and had stopped to inquire the road of the Senora, who informed me that the party were from the lower country and were inquiring the road to San Louis Obispo.

Toward evening of that day I suddenly entered the house, and seeing a woman standing in the door, mistook her for the Senora, and was about to address her when I discovered that I was mistaken. It was a daughter of old Miguel Cota of the Refugio. She was accompanied by a young brother, a lad about seventeen years of age. She at once recognized me, and I knew that I was now subjected by this mischance to real danger. The very people of all others from whom I wished to keep my hiding place a secret were the inhabitants of the Refugio. As has been before stated, it was a public drinking place, and general rendezvous for all the idlers, newsmongers and rascals of the neighborhood; and beside, my anxious friend, the Spaniard of Las Cruces, who, I knew, was endeavoring to discover my whereabouts, was a frequent visitor there. It was a bad business, but I had to make the best of it. She did not remain long, and after she had left the Senora expressed her anxiety lest my secret should become known. I tried to reassure her, telling her that I did not think she would tell of my whereabouts, though I felt quite sure that either she or her brother would certainly do so; and it turned out that I was not mistaken in my opinion.

The very next morning, before I was up, old Miguel Cota was in the house, and the Senora had great difficulty in getting me out of it without his seeing me. He told her, as I afterward ascertained, that he had heard of my being there, and was very inquisitive about me. The Senora told him that I had left her house that morning and gone to the light-house at Point Conception. The old fellow remaind all day at the house, while I kept concealed in the canyon. The Senora sent me by Avellino some nice fresh meat, they having killed the steer that day, and some warm tea. Several other persons visited the place during the day, but at night they all left, and I returned to the house. The Senora told me before I retired that she thought old Miguel really believed that I had gone to Point Conception, and I felt greatly relieved to hear it.

Things went on very quietly for two or three days after this and nothing of importance occurred until the night of the fourteenth of July. I still slept in the house, and was enjoying a pleasant rest, when at about two o'clock a. m. I was awakened by the sound of horses' hoofs approaching the door. The visitor proved to be General Covarrubias. He had ridden all the way from Santa Barbara to inform me that a deputation of twenty or twenty-five of the Vigilance Committee had arrived that evening in the steamer from San Francisco, and would, without doubt, begin the pursuit after me at daylight. He had therefore kindly come to give me timely warning, in order that I might put myself out of the way. He could not give me the names of the deputation, but was enabled to inform me that Selim E. Woodworth was one of the leaders. I thought this was very strange, for both Selim and his brother had told me a few days after the organization of the Committee, that, although they had been members of the Vigilance Committee of 1851, they were not of this one, and saw no necessity for its organization. What had worked this wonderful change

The Physician at the Supper Table---IV.

By the Sybarite

Half a dozen jack snipe and a petite pyramid of vaporific fresh mushrooms on toast and a pint of Chateau Yquem for two would seem to many an immoderate midnight repast; yet, partaken of slowly, and set to the music of dulcet conversation, there was gastronomic propriety from commencement to finish.

The Doctor was in his usual vivacious mood, and his friend, for once, had never a word to say regarding his insomnia.

"I suppose," said the latter, "that Christian science, like the faith cure, will have its day; and, then, like the latter, be relegated to shelves for antiques?"

"It has often been asserted," interrupted the Doctor, "that there is no wine that will send a man off his head so rapidly as Chateau Yquem. He goes off blissfully, however, and is as exuberant and as refinedly unpatrician as a Gretna Green parson after a silver-mounted ceremony. It has been said of the gout, and truthfully, that, however painful it may be in the particular region of its existence, it leaves all other extremities free. It may be fairly said of Chateau Yquem that, however fully it may take possession of the mind, it only imparts poetry, sonorousness, charity and hospitality to the partaker. It is probably the only wine in the world that has never been drunk to excess. It is more enlivening than claret or Riesling, but not so much so as Burgundy or Champagne; nor so stupid and heavy as sherry, Maderia, or port. It is more exhilarating than intoxicating, and has probably never incited a quarrel or delivered an under-bred jest. 'It is not wine,' declared the elder Dumas, 'it is a limpid fluid of a straw yellow in which the rays of the sun seem to be imprisoned.'

"Chateau Yquem is sometimes called a liquor wine; and, yet, according to Berthelot and other distinguished chemists, it has the peculiar quality of not becoming transformed into alcohol and carbonic acid during the process of fermentation. Chateau Yquem is the most celebrated white wine in the world and always commands excellent prices. It is seldom or never counterfeited, as no district outside of its own home—unless it is California—can imitate it. There is no wine of Medoc that can excel it, and few can compare with it in delicious fragrance or ecstatic effect—this deliciousness of bouquet and flavor resulting from the presence of maunite and the delicate process of production. There are only three small vineyards in all—the original, which was formerly the property of Sauvage d'Yquem, who transferred it by marriage to the Lur Saluces in 1785, the present owner being the heirs of the Marquis, who died in 1867; the Chateau Filhot, at Sauternes, and the Chateau Coutet, at Barsac. These three vineyards, containing less than 500 acres, produce annually about 5,400 gallons of wine, which, when five years old, commands from $12 to $18 a dozen at Bordeaux. In 1859 the Grand Duke of Constantine purchased $10,000 worth of the vintage of 1847 at $40 a dozen.

"There are neighboring vineyards that produce just as good wines as the three original ones, and there are sections adjacent to the Garonne and Gironde that have built up a substantial trade by what is known in that district as imitation Chateau Yquem; and it is the latter that is most generally sent to the United States. But it is a pure, conscientiously-made and cared-for wine, and as top-notched as its neighbor in all respects. There is little if any adulterated Chateau Yquem, as it costs less to put on the market than Burgundy, and commands imperial rates. Close to Chateau Yquem comes La Tour Blanche; like Chablis in color, but, possibly, more delicate in fragrance. These excellent wines, like Tokay, should be sipped, and are at their best in company with escaloped oysters or small game, like snipe, woodcock, dove, or plover, or even with sweetbreads, or the daintiest of lamb chops. The food, also, should be taken slowly, and every mouthful, nearly, may be moistened with these liqueur-like sauternes."

"As I was saying, Christian Science seems to have taken the place of the faith cure racket; which reminds me that I read, a few days ago, of a Sierra County farmer, who was a Christian Scientist, picking up a rattlesnake just to demonstrate what a protection child-like belief could afford. The rattlesnake promptly struck him in the arm and then followed the usual result of such a serpent's bite. The man suffered terrible agony from the poison and died, finally, raving like a maniac. Did you ever hear of anything more jay?"

"Undoubtedly faith, or Christian Science, or whatever you may call it, assists in recovery from certain forms of disease; but, undoubtedly, faith will not prevent the action of natural forces. Certain ailments are partly mental, and a belief in recovery promotes the end, but faith will never set a broken limb, nor ease the impact of a falling brick, nor prevent the action of a poison. Nature has established certain laws which may not be disregarded. The day of what we call miracles may come again, but there is no evidence that any have occurred of recent years."

"By the way, I am greatly amused at the onslaughts made upon coffee by this writer, and upon tea by that writer; the diatribes against beer and wine by one and against milk and water by the other. When the gamut has been fully run, I find that meats, cereals, fruits and all vegetables, are barred. What do you think of these health cranks, Doctor? It seems to me that they condemn modes of life, kinds of food, fashions of clothing, habits of resting or exercising that have prevailed for years with no visible harm."

"Yes; you are right. Day after day they take away something that some of us have been in the habit of eating or doing, or put in something we have been in the habit of not doing or eating, till we feel like Sancho Panza at his banquet at Barrataria: 'Fruit is too moist, said the doctor of the table, the Dio Lewis of Barrataria; the roast meat increases thirst; partridges are dangerous; stewed coneys are a sharp-haired food; ollapodrida is too coarse. Therefore, eat a hundred rolled up wafers and some thin slices of marmalade.' No wonder if we cry out with the hungry Sancho, 'To deny me any victuals, though it is against the grain of Signor Doctor, and though he should say as much more against it, I say is rather the way to shorten my life than to lengthen it.' The sensible half of the world will say amen to the honest Mauchegan. Never eat a hearty supper just before going to bed, say the Barratarians of health journals; but we know our fathers and grandfathers on their farms would eat a horse's meal, of mush and milk, or Johnny cake and beans and cold cabbage, be in bed and asleep in a half-hour and up at daylight, as hearty at 60 as a Barratarian health broker or breaker at 40."

"You are dead right."

"Lord Cockburn used to tell a story that Rev. Sir Harry Moncreiff had his supper of roast chicken and claret at 11 o'clock at night, all his life and died at 90. But ever since Cornaro changed from a debauchee to an ascetic and measured out his bread and meat by the ounce and his drink by the teaspoonful, and lived to be over a hundred, there have been fools who believed that one man's meat was all men's health, and one man's doctrine was all men's duty. Some health crank lays down the law and ten thousand men break it every day and live long and well. Others obey and die quickly. The wise law of food is that of the brusque but sagacious Abernethy. Is venison wholesome, doctor, asked a nobleman with the gout. Do you like it? was the reply. Yes. Does it agree with you? Yes. Then it is wholesome. There is no better health law regulating food than that. Let the Barratarians say what they will of nourishment and nitrogen and blood-making or blood-thinning qualities of food or drink, the right rule is to eat what you like if it agrees with you, and let the Barratarians go jump on themselves. Why, it is but a few weeks since some Oakland professor proclaimed that walking was not a healthy exercise unless it was very brisk and rapid. The world will never be healthier for the promulgation of such stuff as that. The great want of most of the world, even of our own part of it, is to get food enough and clothes enough, and have time enough to sleep; not to repine upon modes and qualities to fit the theories of schools or authorities. Health authorities are mighty apt to be humbugs."

"By the way, I was reading, only a few days ago, of an assault on apples. I had always supposed that an apple, as a remedial agent, was the boss?"

"So it is—that is, the apple and the lemon. I really believe that if the people of our city used apples and lemons every day half of our physicians and half of our drug stores would have to adopt some other vocation. Chemically, you know, the apple is composed of vegetable fiber, albumen, sugar, gum, chlorophyl, malic acid, gallic acid, lime, and much water. Furthermore, analysts say that the apple contains a larger percentage of phosphorus than any other fruit or vegetable. The phosphorus is admirably adapted for renewing the essential nervous matter of the brain and spinal cord. It is, perhaps, for the same reason, rudely understood, that old Scandinavian traditions represent the apple as the food of the gods, who, when they felt themselves to be growing feeble and infirm, resorted to this fruit, renewing their powers of mind and body. Also, the acids of the apple are of singular use for men of sedentary habit, whose livers are sluggish in action, those acids serving to eliminate from the body noxious matters, which, if retained, would make the brain heavy and dull, or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions and other allied troubles. Some such experience must have led to the custom of taking applesauce with roast pork, rich goose and other like dishes. The malic acid of ripe apples, either raw or cooked, will neutralize any excess of chalky matter engendered by eating too much meat. It is also the fact that such fruits as the apple, the pear and the plum, when taken ripe and without sugar, diminish acidity in the stomach, rather than provoke it. The vegetable sauces and juices are converted into alkaline carbonates, which tend to counteract acidity. So far as the lemon is concerned, it is a steadier medicine than half the proprietary stuff in our drug stores. Show me a man that uses sliced lemon in his tea, and squeezes it on his oysters and fish frequently, and indulges regularly in one or two lemonades daily, especially hot ones, and I'll show you a man that never will contribute much toward my Chateau Yquem or jack snipe. Nor will he—"

The Charm of Tahoe

By Theodore Bonnet

The Native Sons are going to Lake Tahoe soon to hold their "grand parlor" on the pine-clad rim of that beautiful body of water. The Native Sons could do nothing better for their souls.

One Sunday last summer I attended mass at Lake Tahoe in a church improvised for the occasion, and I heard a sermon that made a profound impression on me. The priest—Father Robert Sesnon—talked of the love that we owe to God, and he said there were few places on this earth where it was so easy to love God as in the midst of the beautiful aspects of nature that are visible from the scented slopes of that delightful region. The sentiment struck home plunging me into meditation that was at once edifying and refreshing.

Somewhere Ruskin says in substance that the beautiful in nature appeals to our moral sense; that when, for example we see the sun setting in all its splendor the feeling of pleasure that the spectacle inspires is due to our being instinctively sensible of the fact that it was the hand of God that hung the effulgent orb in the western sky. Ruskin has been laughed at for expounding theories of the beautiful thus tinctured with religious sentiment. It would be well for those that laugh, I have often thought, to join in the perennial festival of nature at Lake Tahoe, to immerse themselves in the sanctity that there perpetually reigns. What profusion of scenic beauty is there! The lake itself with its unruffled calm that overawes our little anxieties of mind and vexations of spirit is but one of innumerable impressive touches of the Creator's mysterious hand. Wander through the cathedrals that have been reared in forest glades; mingle with the aromatic pines, kindled and colored in the sun's light; sense the fragrance of tangle and thicket; court the drowsiness of the heated roads, the coolness of the leaf-carpeted groves; give ear to the golden voices that have been making the regal summits echo with bursts of melody since the days when Pan gaily lead the dances of the nymphs; commune thus with nature in her sublime solitudes, and when at the close of day the pleasant intercourse is broken off, you will have partaken of but a small fraction of the gifts that have been profusely scattered at your feet.

The splendor of the sun departs; its last beams fill the sky with a fragile glory, tinting wisps of thinnest vapor that are strewn like swan's feathers across the deepening blue, making scintillant gems of the eternal snow on old Tallac.

With night's descending shadows comes a cool breeze making every tree an Aeolian harp that re-echoes the harmonies of strings mysteriously attuned within your breast. The landscape with its enchanting wonders has faded from your view. A new scene dazzles you with its glory. The night is full of stars. The air is bursting with silences. My lady moon smiles down from the starry canopy upon the listless waters of the lake and they proclaim the glory of God.

These are the things that set the mind working. It is in contemplation of such things, as Milton says, "by steps we may ascend to God." Warmly I felicitate the Native Sons on their choice of Lake Tahoe for "grand parlor" purposes. There they will get higher thoughts and better emotions than are to be engendered at a session of lady and male-lady moralists at Dreamland Rink on a Sunday.

In addition to extracting sentiments of piety from the handiwork of God the Native Sons will have the opportunity while at Tahoe to occupy themselves with a matter of scientific interest. It may be news to them and to others that the Tahoe region affords excellent advantages for astronomical observation. How many Californians are aware that the first site selected for the Lick Observatory was on the shore of Lake Tahoe not far from Tahoe Tavern? Although the observatory was not built there, good reasons were advanced for choosing that particular spot as an ideal one for the setting up of a great telescope. The Tahoe region is above the fog belt and possesses the clearest atmosphere in the State of California. Those who have stood at the edge of the lake and looked across to the mountains on the other side realize this, for it seems but a short distance from shore to shore. And yet the lake is thirteen miles wide and twenty-three miles long. The air is so translucent that the eye is deceived and loses its power of correctly estimating distance.

I shall never forget a dance at the Tavern. It was on a cool summer's evening and a goodly throng of beautiful women and gallant men gathered in the ball room. There was splendid music and the dancing went on with that delicious abandon which is part of the informality of the famous resort. When the music stopped at intervals there were walks through the hotel grounds to the border of the lake, cosy chats on sheltered benches or visits to the club house for well-brewed lemonades in long glasses clinking with ice. I am sure that the hour was very late when we were willing to retire to our rooms. I know that if Halley's comet had been blazing in the sky then as it is now, most of us would have watched out the twilight of dawn to see the marvel of the ages, the harbinger of who knows what fortunes and misfortunes to this sublunary old planet of ours?

Truly, Tahoe among the mountains, there is no place just like you in California!

The Spectator

A Bad Omen for George V.

Considering the fact that the four Georges were perhaps the most unpopular sovereigns who ever occupied the throne of Great Britain the new king is hardly to be congratulated on his choice of a name. George V. may prove to be one of the most beloved of monarchs but he is certainly handicapped by the association of ideas. Will the time come when some rhymster will add to the famous lines in which the four Georges are held up to execration a couplet regarding George V.? I sincerely hope not. The lines run as follows:

George the first most vile was reckoned;
Viler still was George the second;
What mortal ever heard
Any good of George the third?
When George the fourth to hell descended,
Thank the Lord, the Georges ended!

Two Royal Scandals

It is unfortunate for George the Fifth that he figured in a scandal which brings to memory an unsavory incident in the life of George the Fourth. The greatest indignation against the fourth George was felt by reason of his treatment of his two wives, Mrs. Fitzherbert and Queen Caroline. He was especially execrated for "throwing over" the beautiful and silly Mrs. Fitzherbert whom he married when he was heir to the throne. As she was not of royal blood she could live with him only as his mistress, but society, however, once satisfied that a ceremony had been performed, never regarded her as anything but his wife. George afterwards made official denial of the marriage at his father's behest and a British plenipotentiary was sent off to fetch him a bride from over the waters, for whom he conceived a morbid hatred as soon as the marriage took place. George the Fifth has similarly suffered in public estimation for repudiating the daughter of Admiral Seymour to whom he was married when his brother the Duke of Clarence was heir to the throne, and his wife having been betrothed to the Duke of Clarence has never been received with affection by the people of England since she demonstrated that it made little difference to her which brother she married so long as she became prospective Queen.

A Masterly Proclamation

At the tomb of Napoleon that exhaustless magazine of sound, the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, was struck dumb. But at the death of King Edward he found his voice, unsheathed his tongue and brandished that unruly member with characteristic strenuosity. From the daily prints we learn that our most distinguished private citizen who has been doing his utmost for months to emulate the shrinking violet, converted the death of Albert Edward into a pretext for the issuance of a proclamation. This proclamation is worth preserving as an infallible emetic, superior to anything that the doctor can order. "Next to the ring John Hay gave me," says our illustrious and most admired citizen, "I value the miniature of John Hampden King Edward sent me after I became President." Here we have four self-allusions to one reference to the King, a proportion the justness of which every true Democrat will appreciate and approve. In the next sentence modesty asserts itself: "That was a present a sovereign could make with dignity and one a Democratic President could accept." Here the honors are even; but for the sake of proportion the loud pedal is once more applied to the personal note:—"The King must have known that Hampden was one of my four heroes—Timoleon, Hampden, Washington and Lincoln. Such a selection as the miniature showed extreme tact." Thus are we informed of the kind of heroism that thrills the noble heart of the hero of Kettle Hill and incidentally that he keenly appreciates tact. His love of tact, however, is evident from the proclamation itself. Tact comes from fineness of taste and when did a great citizen ever display finer taste than that which dictated the beautiful sentiments of Mr. Roosevelt's beautiful eulogy of King Edward? Could a man say more of another while saying as much for himself as Mr. Roosevelt said of the King in this deft and tactful proclamation wherein consciousness of self-importance is as subdued as any reasonable man could expect. No wonder that Mr. Roosevelt is beloved by the tactful American people. He is the very incarnation of that pride of sovereignty that resides in every free-born breast. He is the em-

An Anti-Roosevelt Roosevelter

John D. Works, Lincoln-Roosevelt candidate for United States Senator, having for many years followed politics as a profession on the theory that it is the science of exigencies, now finds himself in a state of embarrassment by reason of the homecoming of some pestiferous chickens of his own breeding. To be more explicit Judge Works has been found out. And for Judge Works to be found out is embarrassing to the point of humiliation. The story of this apocalypse has caused a grin to spread over the State. Judge Works is being horse-laughed out of the race for Senator. Two years ago Judge Works tried his hand at journalism. For that socialistic journal, the Arena, he wrote an article under the title, "A Glance at President Roosevelt's Administration and his Personality." It was a very sour glance that the Judge took. From the Works viewpoint Mr. Roosevelt was "a peril to our republican institutions"; he was influenced by "selfish and ignoble desires and base purposes"; he pandered to a "debased appetite for the spoils of office"; his attacks on individuals were "undignified and unpatriotic and calculated to destroy public confidence in moneyed men and moneyed institutions." These are but a few of the reflections of the Proteus-like statesman who is now employing the prestige of Mr. Roosevelt as a vehicle for his own ambition. Copious excerpts from the Arena article were recently reproduced in the Los Angeles Times, and now they are being disseminated from San Diego to Siskiyou, and in all sections of the State the yokels and the groundlings are convulsed with laughter.

Confusion Worse Confounded

Meanwhile the captains of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League are in panic. What to do with Works is a question that is giving them profound concern. They are as completely covered with confusion as the candidate himself. They realize that in making choice of him they have made it obvious to the whole State that they are absolutely lacking in the judgment essential for the purposes to which they have dedicated their talents. For be it known Works was impossible even before the disinterment of his Arena effusion. In giving their unmoral support to the man that once bore the sobriquet of "Spring Valley Water Works" and that expressed publicly his disapproval of the N. S. G. W. they evinced the disposition of fools to rush in where angels fear to tread.

Johnson Disheartened

The exposure of Judge Works is not the only thing that distresses the captains of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League these otherwise gladsome days. There is treason in the camp of the reformers. The startling news has gone forth that Hiram Johnson is the victim of foul treachery in the house of his friends. Here in San Francisco the affairs of the league are under the direction of eleven men, and of that number five are said to be ardent adherents of the Hon. Charles F. Curry. Johnson, by the way, is getting very much disheartened, owing to the weakness of the support that he is receiving from the league. Even in Sacramento, his birthplace, the reformers have not stirred up any enthusiasm for him. Curry's friends are betting that he will beat Johnson two to one in the State capital.

Sapleigh—Bah Jove! an idea has just flashed through my mind.
Sharp—"Flashed" is the word, my boy. It certainly has a clear track.

Another "Sybarite" Guess

From Los Angeles comes another guess as to the identity of the Sybarite who is writing the papers entitled "The Physician at the Supper Table" now being published in Town Talk. This time it is a feminine correspondent. Three San Franciscans having been entered as candidates for the authorship of these clever causeries, Raphael Weill, Colonel Kowalsky and Ned Greenway, it seems only fitting that one of the bon vivants of the south should be put forward. However, the time has not yet come for the mysterious author to emerge from the shelter of his incognito. Here is the letter from the Los Angeles lady:

Editor, Town Talk:

Having read the letter from "the Family man" in the last issue of Town Talk relative to the authorship of the papers "The Physician at the Supper Table" and being a subscriber, I feel like expressing my opinion that the writer of those charming articles can be none other than our distinguished Los Angeles citizen Major Ben C. Truman.

Yours truly,

May seventh. B. C. T.

Mrs. Atherton a Best Seller

"Tower of Ivory," the latest novel from the pen of the gifted Gertrude Atherton, has attained the distinction of being a best seller. In the list of the best sellers for March, recorded in the Bookman for May, the work is placed second in popularity for the whole country and first for New York and the nothern States. Since March it has gone into another edition and there are still no signs of its sale abating. Mrs. Atherton who is in this city at present makes no secret of her pleasure in finding how her book has taken. When I asked her how the news appealed to her, she let me know without evasion that she was mighty glad to hear it. She thinks "best seller" is a hideous expression but does not cavil at being one. She says that she has yet to find an author who in his heart is above being a best seller if he can. And why not? she asks. As many good novels have been best sellers as trash.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Mrs. Mighels' Coup

When Mrs. Philip Verril Mighels with solemn ceremony made a gutter bonfire of the books in her library which she thought were of evil tendency she sent my mind bounding back to the consideration of one of the most delicious incidents in Don Quixote—that pleasant occasion when the priest and the barber sat as a committee of two on the good old knight's library, tossing all the offending romances of chivalry out of the window into the court yard, there to be consumed in auto da fe like Mrs. Mighels' books. It suggested too that solemn day in Florence when Savonarola burned not only books but pictures, statues and other works of art. The names of the books which the great Dominican as well as Cervantes' priest consumed are known and they may be had today, despite the burning. The fact is, disheartening though it be to reformers of literature, that cremation is an inadequate literary corrective. Augustus made a burnt offering of some of Ovid's naughty poems. Yet they survived and sixteen centuries later Kit Marlowe made an English version of them which was burned at Tyburn by the common hangman. Just the same that translation is as available today as the original. All the flames of all the furnaces cannot destroy a book if man sets his ingenuity to work to perpetuate it.

She Tamed the Hoodlums

Mrs. Mighels, of course, burned the books as an object lesson. I wonder if she did not call them to the attention of those perverse minds which are ever hot on the scent of wickedness? Not that the books were very wicked either. I could give Mrs. Mighels a list that would by comparison be incarnadined with purple depravity, yet I doubt whether any of them save one ought to be burned. You see, I am not going to disclose my list. If I did there would be a run on the booksellers. Mrs. Mighels tells me, by the way, that the newspapers missed the most picturesque incident of her auto da fe. She says that during the progress of the bonfire a crowd of young hoodlums appeared on the scene and tried to turn the affair into ridicule with catcalls and derisive remarks. I am glad to chronicle that Mrs. Mighels was equal to the emergency. When one of them ventured a query as to what was a good book to read she instantly replied "John Halifax, Gentleman" and held their attention with an account of the plot of that interesting but melancholy story. The hoodlums who came to jeer remained to get a lesson in literature. I hope they profited by it.

His Valet Was a Lord

When Senator Newlands came to town last week he did not bring with him the Japanese valet of whom he used to be so fond. One of his cronies here mentioned this circumstance and learned that there was an interesting reason for his absence. Incidentally he was more than a valet; he was really the senator's private secretary. Several years ago the senator was at the Palace one night and walked up and down the corridor in evident impatience and vexation. His Japanese valet learned the cause of this—the senator had many important letters to dictate and the hotel stenographer was interminably busy. "I will take your letters from dictation, sir," offered the valet. Newlands was surprised but accepted the offer and found that his Japanese man was a skilled secretary. The boy became almost indispensable and the senator was much put out when he left suddenly for Japan, stating that his father had died. When Newlands went to Tokio with a congressional party a servant called at his hotel and stated that Lord So-and-so of the Japanese nobility wished to place a carriage at his disposal. Lord So-and-so proved to be his old valet and secretary.

Contortions of a Gored Ox

Talk about justice, retributive, poetic or "wild"; San Francisco may now rest appeased for all the contumely that has been heaped upon her by the envious citizens of Los Angeles. Serene and indifferent to any other fate San Francisco has always objected to being called "Frisco." Los Angeles has always been an implacable offender in this regard. In Los Angeles nobody would think of calling San Francisco otherwise than "Frisco," and many of the lately imported Michiganders and Kansasonians imagine that "Frisco" is the name of the metropolis. Now these flippant folk are compelled to take a dose of their own medicine. The immigrant from Kalamazoo and the left lunger from St. Jo. Mo. finds it impossible to pronounce the name of the town as the acclimated resident does, and has shortened it to "Los." Whereupon our reverend friend General Otis is howling his head off in protest. Otis has been printing "Frisco" ever since he made the discovery that the pen is mightier than the sword. He has never printed San Francisco in his newspaper by any other title than "Frisco." Now he objects to "Los" as an abbreviation for Los Angeles. He continues to call San Francisco "Frisco," however, and probably sees no inconsistency in his demand for the full and proper name of Los Angeles. How sweet is the revenge that comes of its own volition and wreaks itself at the hands of the other fellow upon himself.

How the General Pronounces It

That the people of Los Angeles have long been sensitive about the pronunciation of the name of their town is known to all who have sojourned there even for a day. The name looks like a simple name to pronounce, but it is very difficult to give it just the Spanish twist which satisfies the finicky ear of the inhabitants. The picturesque Mr. Lummis fixed the proper pronunciation several years ago, but it has remained for General Harrison Gray Otis to spread the propaganda. I notice that under the title of his paper on the editorial page he prints these cryptic syllables: "Pronounced Loce AHNG-Hayl-as." Will somebody kindly complete the good work by supplying an interpretation of these difficult characters?

"Cab" Was Afraid

During the afternoon session of court recently Superior Judge Cabaniss' bailiff asked permission to absent himself from the room for a short time. Judge Cabaniss regarded him fixedly for a moment and then swept his eagle eye over the court room, assuming a look of apprehension. "Is Mr. Charles Wesley Reed in the court room?" inquired the judge. There was no answer. Again the question was propounded and still there was no response. Still a third time the judge intoned the query and silence brooded on the judicial atmosphere. "As Mr. Charles Wesley Reed is not present," the judge finally told the bailiff, "I think it is safe for me to let you go."

How Miller Graham Got Rich

The ambitious social plans which Mrs. William Miller Graham of Santa Barbara was going to carry out during the coming London social season were knocked into a cocked hat by the death of King Edward. It will be a sore disappointment, but Mrs. Miller Graham has plenty of wealth and can wait till another season. The only question is, Will she obtain from the new king the flattering social recognition accorded her by Edward? In this connection it is worth while recalling that William Miller Graham owes his fortune to General W. H. H. Hart of this city. I should say that he owes his latest fortune to Hart, for I believe that Graham won and lost a couple of plums in the Pennsylvania oil fields before he became a California Croesus. General Hart was down and out several years ago when he met Miller Graham in a Washington hotel. Hart's only hope of rehabilitating his fortune lay in the oil lands he owned and nobody would buy them. He heard that Graham was an oil expert and managed to meet him but could not interest him in his property. Nevertheless when they parted Hart told Graham that he would send him a sample of his oil. When Graham got the sample he found that it was a very high grade oil and he decided to take a look at the well. So he came to California and examined Hart's property. The reality exceeded all his expectations and he devoted himself to its exploitation. Hart cleared about $254,000, if my memory serves me, and Graham started on the new career which has made him a millionaire two or three times over.

"Confessions of a Barbarian"

This is the arresting title of a volume by George Sylvester Viereck. George Sylvester Viereck is a very young man of New York who writes verses hinting at evil things, poses, runs the dramatic department of Current Literature with excellent judgment and boasts of his bastard relationship to the Emperor of Germany. I remember hearing Viereck quoted as saying that he would rather have written one of his own poems than be the Kaiser. The remark indicates that the young man is in no need of a press agent; it also typifies the contents of "Confessions of a Barbarian." The writing of confessions is an obstinate habit with young literary men. St. Augustine wrote his confessions because he was a penitent sinner; Rousseau wrote his because he was an unconscionable egotist; George Moore wrote his because he was brimful of affectation. Now come the "Confessions of a Barbarian" which need not be compared to any of the others mentioned because they are so artificial that they suggest an affectation of affectation, Viereck claims purple blood because his grandmother was the favorite of the first Emperor William, then the King of Prussia. The issue of their amour is supposed to have been Viereck's father to whom the present book is dedicated. The fact that Viereck claims to be the left-handed cousin of the present Kaiser is no doubt the excuse for his affecting to be exceedingly affected. One must live up to one's bend sinister.

The Product of Pubescence

"Confessions of a Barbarian" could not have been written by anyone except a stripling, so it does not surprise us to learn from Viereck that he is twenty-five years old. The book is disagreeably pubescent. Having discovered that he is capable of conceiving ideas Viereck formulates opinions on all conceivable subjects and hurls them at your devoted head with an air of self-satisfied finality. At first you dodge these missiles, but soon you discover that they are only stuffed opinions and then you humor him in his youthful diversion. The book is based on a trip to Berlin and Copenhagen and the wonders Viereck discovered in those ancient capitals. He found what a boy might have been expected to find, the wonders of imperialism and bureaucracy, the Kaiser (his cousin), soldiers and actors and writers, the nude dancers and the street-walkers. Imperialism impresses him because it has become paternalistic in Germany and a boy is not expected to know the evils of paternalism. Bureaucracy also receives his approval because in Germany it is "inspired." His cousin the Kaiser is a superman, the "sole legitimate offspring of Romanticism and Modernity." And so on. He sees everything as a very young man is apt to see it and writes of it with carefully calculated impertinence.

A Sadly Wicked Boy

Viereck is very anxious to let us know that he has plumbed every depth of wickedness. He could tell strange things if he wanted to, "uncouth passions and fantastic desires," but he refrains. Instead he tells of the women who, he says, have been in love with him. There was Ermengarde. "You were fond of me, more than you dared confess even to yourself." And there was Madeleine, "supple, strong and superb." Madeleine was married; she was also "a Madonna who had absorbed, intellectually, the philosophy of Don Juan." Then there was Francesca. She had the Monna Lisa smile that has bothered boys ever since Walter Pater discovered it. "We might have been very dear to each other, had things been different." As for Aholibah, "her eyes were weary from too much loving." To Marion he read "some passionate verses" and as Marion lowered her eyes we guess that they were his own verses and very likely of a tiresome sort. Valeria was "strange, morbid, mad, hysterical." "Her love for me was idolatrous." There was a girl whose name this sad young dog doesn't remember, but she was the wickedest of them all, so he writes a poem about her, singing, "O little Maid of Sappho, come to me." Returning to prose he says, "Your arms were lilies, you were frail, childlike; but your eyes peered with demoniacal passion into ancient abysses glittering with putrefaction. Dear Little Maid of Sappho, how I might have loved you! And ah! that feverish night half drowned in champagne, with the sinister suggestions of an alien Aphrodite." He says that Thusnelda wrote letters to him and to prove it he quotes from them. They show that Thusnelda was mistress of his own overcolored style. In other words he evidently wrote them himself, like Toots. This whole chapter on women is an interesting study in autoerotism or I have read Havelock Ellis to no purpose.

A Visit to George Brandes

The best thing in the book is the description of the author's visit to George Brandes, the Danish man of letters. Whether it is fact or fiction does not matter.

My Danish friends assured me that Brandes was a crank, inaccessible to strangers, and asked me whether I had an introduction to him. I explained that I knew two of his intimate friends who would surely have given me introductions, had I known beforehand that I would visit Brandes on my trip abroad.

These things I munched in my mind as I climbed the stairs to the philosopher's simple abode. A copy of Nineveh rested securely in a side pocket of my coat. A seductive smile curled my lips.

Without hesitation I pulled the bell.

A maid half opened the door, and upon my question whether the Herr Professor was at home, she mumbled something in Danish which I could not understand, and shut the door in my face.

I waited a little while, and again rang the bell. Again the maid appeared and listened to me with impatience as I informed her in German that I would plant myself in front of the door until she had taken my card to the Herr Professor. She snatched the card from me with an air of disgust, and retreated behind the door. One, two, three, four, five minutes passed, but no response was vouchsafed to my offering.

Then, with grim determination, I rang the bell for the third time. There was a sound of shuffling steps. The door swung open. I caught a vision of a magnincent head, white and immense. Like an irate Jove, George Brandes glowered upon me.

"Good heavens!" he scowled, "what do you want? I am working."

"I want to see you, Herr Professor."

"Everybody wants to see me. I have no time for tourists. I'm not on exhibition. Good-bye."

Already the vision receded. One moment more, and the door would have closed behind him. I played my trump card.

"Hold!" I cried with conscious dignity. "I am George Sylvester Vicreck."

"Yes?" he replied, with a vacant stare.

I repeated my name with slow emphasis. I was not impatient with the old man. There was no shade of annoyance in my voice. But no gleam of intelligence leaped from the eyes of the sage.

"I told you I was busy," he angrily reiterated. "If I were to see everybody, I would have to abandon my work."

"But I'm not everybody," I answered. "I have come all the way from America to meet you. I can't leave Denmark without talking to you. That would be Hamlet with Hamlet left out."

He was moved.

"Come in," he said.

Thus I entered the Holy of Holies.

"I do not come to you without introductions," I said. "I bring you greetings from your old friend," and I mentioned the name of a well-known German writer. "He intended to write me a note for you, but I did not get it in time."

"Too bad," Brandes rejoined; "I've never heard of the man."

Nothing dismayed, I added sweetly: And, of course, our mutual friend James Huneker has entrusted me with his compliments."

"Don't know him," the Sage of Copenhagen snapped back.

"What!" I exclaimed, "you don't know the greatest American critic, the only man in America who understands you?"

Brandes reflected.

"Of course," he said, "I know his books. He is strangely brilliant for an American. But I have never met him in person."

"Well," I said, still undaunted, "I am a considerable personage myself."

He looked at me with amused incredulity.

"I am the author of several books. My poems mark a new epoch in American literature. I have given a new impulse to the poetry of my age. Besides, for my recreation, I am editing two magazines."

"You're rather precocious," the sage retorted.

Which readers of "Confessions of a Barbarian" will consider a very apt statement.

"Three Years Behind the Guns"

Some time ago I read a book entitled "Three Years Behind the Guns" and derived such pleasure from the reading that my curiosity as to its authorship was excited. The story is that of a youngster who enlists in the navy and serves on the Olympia during the Spanish-American war. It is a very graphic recital; in fact the best book dealing with salt water which I have read since "Three Years Before the Mast." On the title page was no name; only the initials L. G. T. Through a friend of the author I have accidentally learned the identity of L. G. T. This is none other than Mrs. Luella Gebhart Tisdale of San Jose, the widow of De Witt Tisdale who was president of the First National Bank of San Jose. Her daughter, Mrs. Edward Bryant, with whom she lives, is well known in local society. I learn also that the story is founded on the actual experiences of Mrs. Tisdale's son. When the Century Company accepted the manuscript it was feared that a woman's name on the title page might hurt the sales, so only the initials of the author were used. Mrs. Tisdale, I am told, has received many letters from authors appreciating her work. Dr. Weir Mitchell wrote: "I do not know when I have read a more agreeable volume. The book interested me so much that I sat up far into the night in order to finish it, and found myself regretting that it was not longer." Admiral Dewey said: "The description of the battle of Manila is one of the very best I have seen."

A Prophetess Out of India

Mrs. Anna Dow Currier who is described as one of the last survivors of the old school of acting, is now in this city. As stated in these columns recently an effort will be made to keep her here in order that she may lend her valuable assistance to the new and original Classic Productions Alliance with which Mrs. Frona Wait Colburn intends to reform the drama. Mrs. Currier brings a message from India where she has been spreading the Shakespearian gospel. While inculcating that orthodox gospel Mrs. Currier seems to have imbibed another gospel of a religious and humanitarian character. She preached some of its tenets through one of the Sunday papers. I doubt whether it be new or very inspiring. Mrs. Currier announces the rebirth of the Vedantist philosophy which, she says, was the philosophy preached by Jesus Christ after his return to Jerusalem. Years of intimate study of the matter have convinced Mrs. Currier that the human race experiences a religious revival every two thousand years, the impulse always coming from India. Students of philosophy will be interested in these statements and in the proofs of their soundness which Mrs. Currier, no doubt, is in a position, after years of study, to supply. Formal religion, she tells us, is doomed; the people are being led "out of its bondage" into "a newer purer freedom of life which Jesus Christ preached during the period of his ministry." Strangely enough Mrs. Currier persists in linking the name of the Christian Savior with her Vedantist proclamations. Just what Christianity has in common with Hindu pantheism I am at a loss to understand. Christianity is a very formal religion, indeed, and millions of its followers have absolutely no wish to be freed from the bondage of its formality. They cling to its dogmatic teachings as closely as to its moral precepts. Perhaps these Christians are not to participate in the revival which Mrs. Currier sees coming. Their exclusion, however, will not hurt their feelings or humiliate their intellects. Strangely enough they care naught for Mimansa or Uttara-Mimansa and reck less of the one hundred and eight upanishads. But they may resent the association of the name of the Founder of their creed with that of the oriental cultists who believe in the ten avatars of Vishnu.

A Los Angeles Philosopher

From Judge David P. Hatch of Los Angeles I have just received a copy of a book entitled "Straight Goods in Philosophy" recently published under the name of Paul Karishka. This is the pseudonym under which Judge Hatch sees fit to conceal his identity when he writes. The judge is a remarkable man, for he is not only one of the most prominent members of the Los Angeles bar but also a mystic of the hermetic philosophy and a professed knight of that mysterious cult which takes for its emblem the Rosy Cross. Some of his former publications have dealt largely with Rosicrucian philosophy but "Straight Goods in Philosophy," as its name indicates, is a discussion of the large topics of life in the simple terms which the man on the street can comprehend. Some of Judge Hatch's chapter headings will indicate the nature of this book: Loving Everybody, Healing of the Body by Mind, Our Right and Title in Happiness, Posing, Man and Woman, or Woman and Man—Which?, Food, The Value of the Imagination in Life, What's the Use? These titles indicate a wide range of thinking and writing and it must be said that in treating the topics of his philosophy Judge Hatch has shown a broad grasp of general truth and an aptitude for applying it to particular occasions. His book is never dull, owing no doubt to his persistent avoidance of the usual philosophical formulae.

The CROCKER TRACT, Piedmont, is, strictly speaking, NOT SUBURBAN.

Both north and south the City of Oakland has grown beyond it. It is really a great park RIGHT IN a great city.

Every foot of its oak-clad hills, laid out with the greatest care to conserve all natural beauties, is less than three miles from the centre of a city of 300,000 people.

Yet among its clusters of villas, each surrounded by spacious lawns, embowered in trees and gardens, and having an atmosphere of comfortable elegance and dignity, the noise and tumult of the city seem far away.

The fortunate dwellers in the CROCKER TRACT, Piedmont, are not the slaves of time-tables, as are those who live ten, twenty or thirty miles from office, theatre and city life in general.

HERE YOU HAVE ALL THE COMFORTS OF THE CITY WITH ALL THE DELIGHTS OF THE COUNTRY.

This is being generally recognized, and the CROCKER TRACT is taking its assured and well-deserved place, as the one most desirable spot for a home of distinction.

Templeton Crocker Blushed

The beauteous Helene Irwin's penchant for Parisian chapeaux affords her girl friends almost as much diversion as it does the public. On Monday night at the Damrosch concert the arrival of Miss Irwin, Marion Newhall and Templeton Crocker created a sensation and when they were seated in their box the battery of lorgnettes trained on them from all parts of the house caused the girls to indulge in giggles that became contagious. Their friends wigwagged to them quite informally and young Crocker attempted to evade the unusual attentions by hiding behind Miss Irwin's hat which first attracted so much attention from the house. It was an enormous affair of pink tulle, casting a rosy glow on the young lady's laughing face. Its brim was piled with a mass of rose-shaded hydrangea blossoms, while a bunch of pink orchids was arranged in aigrette shape. Loops of diamonds sparkled in her ears. It was only a moment before the word was passed throughout the house, "That's the heiress who is engaged to Templeton Crocker." Meanwhile Marion Newhall gurgled gleefully, thoroughly enjoying the discomfiture the episode was causing Mr. Crocker who blushed for the three of them.

A Hat and Papa Newhall

Miss Newhall, by the bye, wore a hat quite as stunning as that of Miss Irwin. It was her Easter chapeau, which the witty Marion declared almost caused a scene at Trinity Church on Easter Sunday. Both of the Newhall girls, knowing their father's pronounced aversion to cartwheel hats, conspired to come late to services, thus escaping the necessity of accompanying their parents in the family limousine, for they guessed what would happen when the hats were seen. When they finally arrived, Papa Newhall was buried deep in the prayer book, devoutly intent on following the service. One glance at the saucy Marion and the prayer book was dropped. His eyes rebuked them, aghast with astonishment. The girls, demure as two young novices, looked down serenely placid, but the episode was too much for their well-bred composure. They buried their faces in the huge bouquets in their muffs and laughed in a perfect hysteria of giggles. Since that time the Easter

Gossip From a Liner

From an occasional correspondent who recently crossed the Atlantic on the Hamburg-American line steamer "Kaiserin" I learn that there were several prominent San Franciscans aboard. He says: "This is the night before landing, and those who know say it is a typical last night on an ocean liner. I see before me beautiful women gorgeously gowned, a great many of them angelically transparent from mal de mer, I am entranced with highly developed sexual music from the 'Dollar Princess' and the 'Merry Widow.' Among my fellow passengers are Archbishop Riordan and his talented secretary, Father Ramm, on their way to Nauheim. Madame Roos, mother of Robert Roos, is on her way with Achille Roos to Paris. Frank M. Smith (Borax) of Oakland is aboard with his young wife, two babies and a stork in the middle distance. Louis Hoefler, the attorney, is with us in pursuit of rest, pleasure and business. I hear that he has an important commission to fill in the Russian Oil Fields, and that he will return to San Francisco by way of Vladivostock, China and Japan. The weather has been especially fine. Marconigrams advised us today of the death of Mark Twain and Bob Devlin's victory. Sad and good news."

Cards received by friends in this city announce the marriage of Miss Alice Marie Brorsen and Herbert G. Roth, the newspaper artist, at St. Pancras Church, London, on April 19.

Mrs. Keppel in the Background

Since the death of King Edward we have heard nothing of the most famous of the royal favorites, the beautiful Mrs. Keppel. No news has come out of London about that distinguished woman who was more intimately identified with Albert Edward than any other of his subjects. Apparently it has been agreed that she should be accorded the privacy and seclusion of the background while history of a solemn and impressive character is in the making. In the judgment of the purveyors of gossip it is deemed improper to permit unofficial persons to tread upon the stage that holds the eyes of the world. Thus is human interest subordinated to considerations of delicacy. Mrs. Keppel, however, is bound to figure in all comprehensive histories of the reign of Edward the Seventh. Victoria's son will rank in history as an epoch-maker, as a King who dissipated the gloom of a Court that had been long under the restraint of a puritanical prejudice against the traditional dissipations of royalty; and to give posterity an accurate conception of his character it will be necessary for historians to tell something of his social diversions and of the persons that contributed to his royal pleasure. Consequently Mrs. Keppel will move with enchanting grace through the pages of history.

His Generosity to the Peeresses

Edward the Seventh will rank among the merry monarchs of England, not of course as a profligate like George the Fourth, in one of whose cabinets after his death were found more than a hundred locks of women's hair, some plastered with powder and pomatum while others were mere little golden curls such as grow low down on a little girl's neck. Edward the Seventh had comparatively few love affairs, but he was so courteous to all women that he was frequently credited with an amour that was nothing more than a case of platonic affection. A notable instance of his regard for women occurred just before he submitted to an operation for appendicitis in 1902. His last official act before going on the operating table was the granting of the petition of the peeresses for more space in the Abbey seats. They had been allowed sixteen inches each, and some of the fat dowagers, broad of beam, demanded more. They declared it an outrage to cramp them into sixteen inches of space. The King allotted them four inches more.

Langtry Was His Pet

When King Edward was Prince of Wales he had the reputation of being something of a rake. In that Victorian period the people were easily shocked, and when he figured in the Mordaunt divorce suit they were scandalized. It was in that case that the heir apparent was said to have "perjured himself like a gentleman." It was when Prince of Wales that Albert Edward made a pet of Lily Langtry. He showed his fondness for her even after his accession, and he sent her daughter a present on her wedding day. When Edward ascended the throne several London journals announced that he had become a model husband, but a little later some sprightly gossip was circulated anent an attempt to burglarize Mrs. Keppel's home. It was said that the object of the burglars was to get hold for blackmailing purposes of letters written by an exalted personage. And the London police imparted a soupcon of Sherlock Holmes mystery to the affair by hinting that the crime was planned by a titled crook. On the whole the London newspapers were very kind to the King and often suppressed news that might have led to unpleasant gossip. When he had a narrow escape from a serious accident on board the Shamrock II, on the occasion of a trial trip they made a big sensation of the incident, but suppressed the news that Mrs. Keppel was on the yacht.

The Coryell Fad

With the thorough-going spirit of the true sportsman, determined to attain his ideal no matter what the cost in time or money, Joseph B. Coryell has attained a place in the front rank among the orchid fanciers of America. Only one or possibly two places in England match his orchid gardens and houses down at Fair Oaks. Mr. Manda, a celebrated English authority on orchids, was out here recently and while at Fair Oaks declared the Coryell place to be the finest of its kind in America. The Baroness Rothschild, considered supreme among English orchid faddists, lacks many of the varieties which the Coryell houses show. The present Queen of England is an ardent lover of the beautiful exotics but even her gardens are not superior in the variety of rare blossoms to the Coryell collection.

Their House of Orchids

The Coryells pursue their fad so unostentatiously that it is only by chance and at long intervals that one hears of their wonderful success. They employ an orchid hunter year in and year out who travels all over the tropical gardens where nature guards these wonderful blossoms and whenever he hears of a new variety he has carte blanche to secure it at any cost. Recently this man, an expert of world-wide fame among floral faddists, secured a number of choice varieties from the interior of Luzon. Another new variety came from the Himalayas. Mrs. Coryell who shares Mr. Coryell's passion for these fairy-like blossoms, wore the Phaelnopsis or Philippine orchid at one of the Greenway Assemblies last winter, the flower exciting much comment. It is shaped like a fantastic butterfly with wings splashed with velvet spots that shade from purple to brown against a satiny texture of pale yellowish pink. Mrs. Coryell carries her fondness for the beautiful blossoms to an artistic extreme. She always surrounds herself with colors that harmonize with the flushed pinkish violet tints of the flower, every detail corresponding, from her limousine with its deep purple upholstering to her stationery, daintily embossed with an orchid in place of a crest.

She Introduced the Fad

It is largely due to Mrs. Coryell's generosity that San Francisco has patterned after London in its passion for orchids. She delights in sending the flowers to her friends and in this way society has learned to indulge in the expensive fad. The only other American city that displays orchids as much as San Francisco is New York and most of the flowers there are shipped from Scotland and England. The Scotch, by the bye, are the premier orchid faddists in the world, something in the persistence of the Scotch temperament finding kinship with these petted blossoms, and it is said that no other people has such success with them. All of the men employed on the Coryell place to work in the orchid houses are Scotch, Andrew MacDonald who has charge being considered one of the authorities in this country as well as in Scotland.

She Had Fears of Tetanus

What happens during rehearsal and behind the scenes of the performances given by local amateurs usually affords no end of amusing gossip and diversion. While the utmost harmony and smoothness characterized the preliminaries of Dr. J. Wilson Shiels' play "When Fairies Rule," one of the incidents at the dress rehearsal on Thursday last was very funny—to everyone except Allan Dunn. The kiddies were prancing over the stage in their fairy dance, their golden wands, tipped with tiny spears, held jauntily aloft. In the scrimmage of scampering off the stage one of the little girls received a scratch, so small as hardly to be noticeable. Immediately one of the fond and doting mammas, seeing visions of a slaughter of the innocents through tetanus, ran through the frightened lot of tykes, neatly nipping off the golden points from the wands. Before one realized what had happened the stage was littered with papier mache sword points looking like gilded cornucopias. The children looked startled, for the lady, a well-known matron, was possessed with the passion of a fury. When the lady, having finished her job, explained why she had done it, everyone smiled except Allan Dunn. He had planned the costumes and the wands were the final touch to complete an artistic ensemble. Dunn merely grimaced eloquently.

The Coming Bach Festival

The great success of the Bach Festival at the Greek Theater last year, when an audience of ten thousand greeted the first production of this kind on the Pacific Coast and laudatory comments on the achievement were made at the great musical centers of Berlin and Leipsic promises to be exceeded this year. The Bach Choir of Berkeley under direction of Dr. J. Fred Wolle, will give the Passion music composed by John Sebastian on Saturday afternoon, May 21, at 3 p. m. It was particularly appropriate that the Passion music should be presented this year when so many people from all parts of the world will be going to the Tyrolean village to see the drama of the Crucifixion. All the resources of musical art have been utilized to make the music worthy the majesty of the theme. The choir of one hundred and fifty voices is supplemented by an orchestra of forty-five, a cathedral pipe organ to be played by Miss Aurora Thompson of London and a grand piano which Dr. Wolle will play. This was the manner of the master who played the clavichord while conducting the choir. The chorals will be sung by five hundred boys and girls from the various public and private schools. The opening chorus is majestic in solemnity and dignity. The basses sing an accompaniment to represent the march of the treading feet ascending Calvary. Two choruses, one symbolizing the men and women of the early church and the other the rabble, sing in direful threat and defiant turbulence. Each chorus has its orchestra. Suddenly, like a rift of sunshine out of the storm the words of Jesus rebuking the angry voices are heard. In the distance the angel voices sing in chorus as an accompaniment. The roles of Pilate, Judas, the High Priest and the evangelist who relates the story are taken by Messrs. H. J. Sattin, Arthur George and Carl Anderson, while Henry Mustard sings the words of Jesus. The women at the crucifixion will be represented by Miss Alice Andrews, Mrs. Orrin Kip McMurray, Mrs. A. J. Weede and Mrs. Francis Thoroughman.

In the Social Spotlight

The Palace is the favorite hotel for travelers from the great interior valleys of the State. Among those from the neighboring towns registered there this week were Attorney Frank Short of Fresno, Dr. and Mrs. N. G. Wallace of Stockton, Robert Duncan, district attorney of Mendocino County, Dr. E. T. Raynes from Duncan Mills, R. M. Shackleford, a real estate and oil operator of Paso Robles, Frank Freeman of Willows, T. W. Patterson, one of the leading financiers of the San Joaquin Valley whose home is in Fresno, F. M. Spaulding, also of Fresno, and many others.

Ward Barron and Miss Harvey spent a few days at Del Monte last week, putting in most of their time on the links.

Charles Clark, E. C. Wagner of Seattle, R. I. Bentley and E. E. Baker of San Francisco are some of the best known golf enthusiasts who are at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradford Leavitt and Mr. R. L. Cunningham went down in Mr. Leavitt's Hudson car Saturday for a few days at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Spencer of Portland have taken apartments at the Palace. He is an attorney in the legal department of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and is in the city to argue a case before the Federal Court. Other Portland arrivals at the Palace are Charles E. Ladd, who is one of Portland's influential bankers and A. L. Smith of the same city.

Jacob E. Ridgway, a prominent book publisher of Philadelphia, is a guest at the Palace.

Richard Howe, a New York capitalist and E. J. Frost of Asheville, North Carolina, are recent arrivals in San Francisco and have taken apartments at the Palace.

Mr. and Mrs. Truxton Beale accompanied by Miss Oge who spend most of their time at the beautiful Beale home in Bakersfield were guests at the Fairmont for a few days this week.

Little Miss Evelyn Reives of Fruitvale who is only four years of age, walked from Howard Springs to Adams, a distance of four and one-half miles in two hours recently. A party of eight guests left Howard Springs at twenty minutes to eight and reached Adams at twenty minutes to ten. Little Miss Reives walked both ways, a distance of nine miles.

"The Lark" made its first trip on Monday of this week. This is a new train put on by the Southern Pacific. The southbound Lark leaves San Francisco at 8 p. m. arriving at Santa Barbara at 6:15 a. m.; the northbound train leaves Los Angeles at 8 p. m. The trains make no stop between Santa Barbara and Los Angeles. Slight changes in the ordinary time-table have been made.

Mr. A. D. Shepard and Mr. H. G. Platt, general manager and acting president of the Pacific Improvement Company, arrived from San Francisco during the week to inspect the work at Hope Ranch and to see Col. J. K. Harrington. The Potter Hotel was their headquarters during their visit.

Miss Myrtle and Miss Adeline Smith, daughters of the "lumber king" of Minneapolis, who have been at Del Monte for some time, are taking up golf with their customary enthusiasm and their friends are much delighted with their rapid progress.

The list of arrivals at Highland Springs for the week ending May 4 included J. H. Skinner, John P. Thom, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Cailly, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Thompson, W. N. Winkley, Ed. Whipple, J. D. Wadsworth, A. T. Barthold, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Matherson and family, Miss Hecht, J. W. Hecht, L. P. Signer, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Moffitt, James Moffitt, C. H. Pierce and Frank T. Barrett.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado included C. W. Judson, W. H. Gossip, C. H. Cobb, A. A. Baird, Thomas Mirk, W. H. Hannam, Charles Fletcher Scott, Mr. and Mrs. I. E. Segur, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Murray, accompanied by Mrs. C. A. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Steiger, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Macklem, Mr. and Mrs. William Ede, Mrs. C. Ede of Palo Alto, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Smith and George W. Greyson.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Welch who spent the winter at the Fairmont but who have recently opened their home in San Mateo, spent a few days this week at the Fairmont while attending to various matters in town.

Recent additions to the "Service Set" at the Fairmont include Rear Admiral and Mrs. Stevens of Washington, D. C., Mrs. Uriel Sebree, wife of Rear Admiral Uriel Sebree (retired), Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Biello, U. S. N., Ensign and Mrs. S. A. Clement, U. S. N., Commander and Mrs. W. M. Glasford, U. S. N.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralston White of San Francisco are guests at the Potter on their wedding trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Chase, Mr. Edmund Lyman and Miss Foute motored recently to Aetna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Wilson and Mrs. Francis Coppicus of New York are registered at the Hotel Victoria.

General and Mrs. Oscar F. Long and Mr. George P. Baxter were among the early automobilists who visited Aetna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Tobin, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Magee and Mr. Rudolph Spreckels took advantage of the warm April weather by taking a motor trip through Napa Valley and the Napa hills to Aetna Springs.

A Fine Little Actress at the Orpheum

It is rather late in the day to acclaim the delights of "Swat Milligan," the base ball act which has nearly completed two weeks at the Orpheum, but just the same I wish to express my belated appreciation of one of the most delicious things which vaudeville has yielded for many and many a day. Particularly I want to go on record in praise of the most consistently performing fan who ever wore petticoats. I refer of course to diminutive Miss Viena Bolton on whom attention is focussed during the fifteen minutes or so of "Swat Milligan." This little girl brings to the portrayal of a dirty ragged waif more zest, more enthusiasm and more real ability than some of our haughty stars who see their names twinkling in the electric signs can ever hope to display. Viena Bolton is a crackerjack. From the first moment of her appearance she compels our notice and the eye hardly ever wanders from her. Childlike she distorts her face violently to suit every varying mood and every distortion is a joy; but her face is only part of her fortune. Her arms make the very gestures of the street urchin and her legs complete the illusion. Just to watch her with her eye glued to a knothole in the ball ground fence and with both hands and one leg rooting excitedly for her favorites inside is to catch the soul of base ball on the fly. Off the stage I should guess that Viena Bolton is sweet-and-twenty something or other; but on the stage, outside that ball ground, she is about fourteen years of tough, untamed and undignified childhood. I would be perfectly willing to see this young woman in a four act entertainment and if Mr. Bozeman Bulger, the author of "Swat Milligan" or some other playwright will construct a vehicle to carry her peculiar talents through a whole evening, I will go a long way to see my judgment of her talent vindicated. To have missed her would have been a dreadful calamity. Come again, Miss Bolton, and if there are any more at home like yourself, send them along to keep us company in your absence.

When Miss Helen Grantley gave us Zangwill's "Never Never Land" she did not impress particularly, but she had an interesting and novel sketch. Her return with "The Agitator" is inauspicious. There are so many rents in this dramatic fabric that the poverty of Miss Grantley's histrionic ability is pathetically apparent. "The Agitator" is balderdash unredeemed. How such a piece of puerile nonsense ever crept into the Orpheum is beyond my guess. I feel sorry for Miss Grantley, not only because she is an inferior actress but also because she is outfitted with a playlet which can only expose her to ridicule.

Eddie Leonard and Mabel Russell in blackface sing and dance with the oldtime minstrel charm. They are distinctly worth while. James Harrigan, the "tramp juggler" would have given everybody greater satisfaction if he had not resorted to the cheap expedient of "planting" a young woman in the audience to simulate hysterics over his various sallies. A vaudevillain confesses weakness when he subsidizes laughter. The Avon Comedy Four are below the Orpheum standard; so is John McCloskey, a tenor who reduces the Pagliacci prologue, The Rosary and "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms", to a common denominator of monotony. One of the Ollivotti Troubadours is a handsome young man who plays the guitar quite well while the other is a serious-looking chastiser of the violin. The Sisters Klos are ring performers of unusual merit; theirs is vaudeville of the best tradition.

—Edward F. O'Day.

THE FOUNDATION

Thousands of pleased customers are the foundation upon which Geo. Haas & Sons' four large stores are built

The Damrosch Symphony Orchestra

What a wonderful aggregation it is, this symphony orchestra which Walter Damrosch brings to us from New York! There is probably not an individual in it who could not charm an exacting audience in a solo performance. Many of the players are the masters of the ultimate secrets of harmony and technique that lie in their instruments. Playing together with the proper sense of subordination and mutual support they produce an effect that is sublime. Here we have a body of musicians, each a distinct temperament, differentiated in a hundred ways from all his fellows, yet all perfectly subdued and unquestioningly obedient to the will of their leader. Whither his baton leads them they follow with the ready response of intelligent soldiers who glory in their work and yield not only submission but affection to their commander. At his behest they submerge their individualities and become so many fractions of a glorious unit. Where do we find a more perfect or a more inspiring example of the subjection of the many to the will of the one than in an organization like this which Walter Damrosch rules? Is there not a profound lesson in the result of this subjection? From it proceeds a harmony that stimulates the mind and ravishes the senses, a symphony of well-ordered excellence such as, in the words of old Sir Thomas Browne, strikes in the hearer a deep fit of devotion and a profound contemplation of the First Composer. "There is a musick," he says, "wherever there is a harmony, order, or proportion" and in all music he finds "such a melody to the ear, as the whole World, well understood, would afford the understanding." Do we not find in such music as that which Walter Damrosch gives us a suggestion of that music of the Spheres of which the doctor wrote, those well-ordered motions, and regular paces which though they give no sound unto the ear, yet to the understanding strike a note most full of harmony? At the will of Damrosch the musicians can swell their volume of sweet sound to such proportions that the ear seems overwhelmed or subdue it to such a tenuous trickle, to so soft a whisper of melody that the sense impression seems to vanish and only the imagination is stirred to response. What dreams he evokes from the innermost chambers of consciousness, what high resolves, what mighty strivings of the soul to burst its prison house and soar to purer, loftier regions! With what sure steps does he not seem to tread the higher air, mounting toward the empyrean and carrying his listeners with him beyond the stifling atmosphere of earth! He is an apostle of the higher things and under his spell all of us become enthusiastic disciples, ashamed of the dross and vanities for which we strive in our workaday world. We sit in his presence transfigured by the light of his inspiration and it is well for us if we go away chastened and humbled, realizing our sordid shortcomings and cherishing the impulse which he has communicated to our better natures. Is not this the inspiration of the Brahms symphony? Is not this the inspiration of the of Beethoven's overture from "Leonore"? Do not such compositions as these stir the soul as surely as Gounod and Massenet stir the blood? And should we not feel deeply grateful to Walter Damrosch and his organization of splendid players for giving us an evening of transcendent enjoyment?

Miss Anglin, Bluestocking

Through the kindness of that most wonderul press agent Louis Nethersole, I have been put in possession of some "straight dope" about the forthcoming production of the "Antigone" of Sophocles by Margaret Anglin at the Greek Theater. On second thought I withdraw that expression "straight dope" because I can see that Miss Anglin would resent it if it ever came to her attention. Miss Anglin, be it known, has become a bluestocking of the most confirmed variety; she talks the difficult lingo of dryasdust college professors and gives evidence of such weighty studiousness as one would hardly expect from a busy actress. In order that I may not spoil the effect of the Anglinesque erudition as transmitted by Louis Nethersole, I will give the thing in full. Here is the way Louis quotes the actress:

I am deep in the study of "Antigone" and I find myself in a tumult of disparities between realism and archeology. I hove finally decided for beauty and an approximation of realism with the least possible harm to archeology, of course, but with a subjection to it by no means slavish. I often have wondered why the modern mind should accept as the standard of the "right way" to produce Greek and Elizabethan plays the meager presentations that obtained when the plays were first given. Revivals of the precise system of ancient play production are interesting, of course, as showing how the ancients overcame their difficulties, but it seems to me far fetched that these obsolete and awkward methods should be considered either supremely accurate or supremely artistic. Who imagines that Shakespeare would not avail himself of modern appliances and expedients in presenting his plays? Why is it to be supposed that Sophokles would still be using great masks for facial expression and men for playing women's parts if he were within reach of actresses and actors taught to use their own faces? So you see there are demands upon me from archeology that I shall not indulge. In fact, if I, a woman, were to play at all in a Greek revival, it would lack strict verity. Then, too, I shall give "Antigone" at night, instead of by daylight. This is contrary to Greek tradition, but it provides me with a poetic and vastly beautiful setting for the play, and insures a degree of personal comfort to my audience which would not be theirs, certainly, under the rays of an afternoon sun. In the matter of costuming I shall be faithful to the most familiar kind of Greek garb, disregarding the fact that the actual period of the play calls for costumes blending the severity of Attic line and color with exoticism. Since I am trying to command interest for the play itself, and as much as is deserved for the players, I do not want to divert attention by the ill-advised introduction of needlessly unfamiliar costumes. This is all by way of stealing a march on the archeologists, should they be moved to criticise me later for lapses in strict accuracy, and I do hope it won't involve me in too many discussions.

Particular attention should be given to that "tumult of disparities between realism and archeology." 'Tis a fearsome condition for an actress. Louis Nethersole writes that Professor Riddle of Cambridge is "caring for the details" of the production. I wonder if the writing of statements like the above is one of these "details."

An Enthusiastic Press Agent

Congratulations are due Miss Henrietta Crossman for having a wonderful press agent. This gentleman has just favored Town Talk with a screed of unusual interest. "If you want to see Henrietta Crossman," it begins, "see her on her next visit here, for it will be the last opportunity in many years, if not forever." This statement piques curiosity. Is Miss Crossman going to quit the stage? Not at all. She is merely going to London and in the opinion of her press agent she is such a wonderful actress that she may never come back. In his mind's eye he sees the London theatergoers detaining her as their prime favorite through all the years to come. Is is not delicious? The irrepressible press agent says that the London managers have been looking for years for an actress to take Ellen Terry's place and that at last they have found her in Miss Crossman. Does it not begin to be grotesque? But there is more behind. Says the press agent: "She has all of Terry's charm and grace and talent and adds to these youth." Think of that! One would imagine that Miss Crossman was a young woman. She is—to the press agent, but not to the census man. Let us not disparage Miss Crossman. She is an actress of long experience who wears doublet and hose charmingly and has considerable talent for light comedy, witness her "All-of-a-Sudden Peggy." But who ever picked her out to be the successor of Ellen Terry? Will the English ever pick an American successor to that wonderful English actress? They may—when the Greek Kalends come, or when an Irish Member of Parliament applies for the Chiltern Hundreds. Which is as much as to say that they may, when press agents cease to be ridiculous.

Maud Allan's Farewell Engagement

Maud Allan will return for a farewell engagement and will give a performance for the benefit of the Tuberculosis Relief Society. This event will take place Tuesday afternoon, May 17, at three o'clock at the Garrick Theatre. As before Miss Allan will have the support of a magnificent symphony orchestra under the baton of Paul Steindorff. In order to accommodate the hundreds unable to secure seats for the performances in which Miss Allan gave her dramatic version of "The Vision of Salome" two special performances will be given at the Valencia Theatre on Friday and Saturday nights, May 20 and 21, when a splendid program will be given with a larger orchestra than ever before.

Maude Adams in Barrie's Latest

Charles Frohman will present Maude Adams at the Columbia on Monday night in Barrie's comedy, "What Every Woman Knows." This is the work which ran for five months at the Empire Theatre in New York last season and in it Miss Adams is credited with having scored the greatest of all her successes. It is to be remembered that the first big success scored by the actress was in Barrie's dramatization of "The Little Minister." Then followed "L'Aiglon" by Rostand. Barrie again came to the fore with "Quality Street" and after that with "Peter Pan." The popularity of all these works is a matter of ready remembrance. In his latest comedy Barrie has constructed a play that is full of human nature. It has humor, wit, quaintness and whimsicality. It also has some fleeting touches of satire and underneath it all, hidden as it were beneath a glossing of humor, there is a heart throb that makes a direct appeal. The cast surrounding Miss Adams is the same as was seen in her support in New York. The leading man is Richard Bennett.

HARRY OHLMEYER

Director of Ohlmeyer's Band at Idora Park commencing Monday.

The Damrosch Concerts

The farewell Damrosch concert will be given on Sunday afternoon when Tschaikowsky's opera "Eugen Onegin" will be given in concert form. This work like Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah" is so full of beautiful numbers that its rendition in this manner, especially with the aid of the good libretto that the management will furnish gratis, should be thoroughly enjoyable and intensely interesting. The cast will include in addition to the four soloists with Mr. Damrosch Mrs. H. McCoy and Mr. Lowell Redfield of this city and a chorus of over one hundred voices from the San Francisco Choral Society of which Paul Steindorff is the director.

"Cameo Kirby" at the Alcazar

"Cameo Kirby," Booth Tarkington's and Harry Leon Wilson's delightful play of life in New Orleans seventy-five years ago, will be given its first stock presentation here in the Alcazar next week. In the title part Landers Stevens will have a character admirably adapted to his most effective qualities. Evelyn Vaughan will be seen as Adele Randall, Bessie Barriscale as a quaint ingenue, Adele Belgarde as Madame Davezac, Grace Travers as a slave girl, Will R. Walling as Moreau, Louis Bennison as Larkin Bunce (the part created by McKee Rankin), Burt Wesner as a slave, Howard Hickman as young Randall, William Garwood as Anatole Veaudry and all the other Alcazar favorites in appropriate roles. The scenic production will be most elaborate.

Frank Fogarty at the Orpheum

Frank Fogarty, the Irish wit who has been given the sobriquet, "The Dublin Minstrel," will make his reappearance at the Orpheum next week. Fogarty, it will be remembered, was one of the greatest hits in the program that opened the New Orpheum. He will be cordially welcomed by a host of friends and admirers. The Thomas J. Ryan-Richfield Company will appear in a sketch "Mag Haggerty's Reception" written by Will M. Cressy. Smith and Campbell will present their incident from life called "Camping Out." The Three Brothers Mascagnos will introduce a novel act called "Fun in a Drawing Room." They are comedy eccentriques and gymnasts. Helen Grantley will present for the first time here a sketch by Bronson Howard entitled "Romya." Next week will close the engagements of Eddie Leonard and Company, James Harrigan, and the Ollivotti Trobadours.

The Antonia Dolores Concerts

Manager Will Greenbaum announces two concerts by Mlle. Antonio Dolores (Trebelli) who since her appearance here six years ago has won her laurels in the music centers of Germany, Russia and Austria, and who is unquestionably one of the greatest living concert sopranos and an exponent of the true art of 'bel cante" without a peer. The first concert will be given Monday night at the Garrick Theatre when songs by Schubert, Schumann, Tschaikowsky, Debussy, Beethoven and a group of rare old English works will be given besides the beautiful "Recitatives and Arias" from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and Donizetti's "Linda di Chamounix." The second and last concert will be given Thursday night when a group of rarely heard songs by John Sebastian Bach, works by Pergolese, Haydn, Saint-Saens, Massenett, Gounod, MacDowell, Grieg and McCoy will be given and the operatic numbers will be from "Bellini's "I Puritani" and the modern French work "Louise" by Charpentier.

"The Pit" at Ye Liberty

The offering of the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, next week will be "The Pit," the play made by Channing Pollock from the Norris novel. Sydney Ayres and Elizabeth Stewart will appear in the leading roles, surrounded by all the favorites of the company and the usual attention will be given to the scenic end of the production.

Good Music at Idora

The Le Brun Grand Opera Company which has been creating a sensation among the music lovers at Idora Park during the past week, closes its engagement at the big pleasure park this evening. Paul Steindorff and his great Symphony Orchestra will remain over Sunday and render two interesting programs for the big Sunday crowd of Idora patrons. Beginning with the matinee on Monday Harry Ohlmeyer and his famous band will be the attraction for the next four weeks. Ohlmeyer has the distinction of being the leader of the only California band which has won national recognition. He carries many noted soloists, among them being Herbert L. Clarke, the world's greatest cornetist, for many years Sousa's star performer. As usual the concerts will be free, matinees being given daily.

There are twenty principals in the cast of "The Pillars of Society" in which Mrs. Fiske is appearing this season. Holbrook Blinn plays the leading male role, that of Karsten Bernick.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—In the sudden death of King Edward our security market never faced a better condition to meet a bad shock, having been through a long period of liquidation, uncertainty and very recently, bear raiding which cleared away many weak speculative accounts. In fact, what appear to have been the lowest days for security values, for some time at least, were last Monday and Tuesday; hence the market was never better prepared for a critical moment. Some banking support was necessary but we believe little stock was taken to steady values. What looks like the turning of the corner in the down trend of values for a month or so has come this week through the announcement from leading banking sources of the negotiation for the taking of some large amounts of American securities by Europe this spring and summer and it is said from authoritative sources that the sum represented in these transactions would possibly aggregate over $500,000,000. Hence we have the foundation for the relief of our money situation during the crop moving period later in the year.

Wheat—Muscle supplied by wealthy speculators has been a vastly better help to wheat values in the last few months than the milling demand. Millers and speculative flour buyers evidently supplied earlier in the crop year and have been trying in the last few months to wriggle out of the difficulties in which their overbuying placed them. There is plenty of evidence from the best of trade sources that their troubles are by no means at an end. The prospect of any material improvement in the cash demand from millers this week is at the present writing exceedingly slim.

Corn—May corn at the close of business Saturday was at a discount of 1⅞ cents from the July delivery price. A local industry bought and took in a lot of May corn on delivery as the cheapest method of securing a supply to run plants here and elsewhere. Meanwhile the receipts from the interior have been very light and prices current for cash corn below contract in grade show that the supply at present is below the demand for the freshly shelled corn. Eastern demand, however, is by no means up to normal for this season of the year. A good part of it is holding off on expectation of larger receipts following the close of the corn planting season, which is now not far away.

Cotton—The receivers of cotton on New York May contracts have begun to move it out into consumption on a big scale. In all, over 175,000 bales were delivered to the bulls and were taken up and paid for last week. Of this 10,000 were taken up for Fall River account and 40,000 for Southern Mill account. The cotton market continues very nervous and during the late trading Monday and early Tuesday had a sharp advance on the old crop months. Weather advices were rather better than expected as temperatures were not as low as feared, but conditions were not considered altogether satisfactory and while the new crop months were relatively quiet, they worked higher in sympathy with the old crop's strength. Mr. Hebersham King's report on condition says there has been no setback to the crop west of the Mississippi River and the damage was confined to the middle and southern portions of eastern Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama which will necessitate replanting of 25 per cent of an area producing a million and a half bales. Then again statements and reports coming from Texas say that the damage there will be more than made good and belated crops are insured speedy and vigorous growth to maturity. The weather reports all over the cotton belt are quite favorable and judging from them there are prospects of good rains in the near future.

Copper—The outlook for copper at the moment does not seem very bright but it is evident that the invisible supply abroad has been very largely reduced, if not wiped out, and another large buying movement may be looked for. In this country the consumption is believed to be increasing and we have ahead of us the movement for the electrification of the railways, which will come gradually and add to the demand for the metal. Furthermore it is expected that if copper metal prices go lower there will be a forced restriction of the output here and in other parts of the world, and also that the surplus will be spread out among the consumers. This would naturally have the effect of strengthening the market price. One strong feature in the Anaconda situation is that it will have about $15,000,000 of cash assets above all liabilities when the merger is completed, and this financial strength is apt to prove a very important factor in the situation.

Local Securities—The greater part of the trading in the local investment-stock list continues to center around a few chosen issues. Associated Oil remains a feature in point of activity with a marked steadiness in price. It is said that this stock will be regularly dealt on the New York Stock Exchange by the first of June and this fact, together with the rumors of the oil company's immense earnings, is responsible for the heavy transactions. Spring Valley Water has lost both in price and in dealings during the past week or so. The uncertainty that surrounds the probable purchase price for the company's local distributing system that will be paid by the city, is causing the late neglect of Spring Valley stock in the local market. Pacific Gas & Electric common (unlisted) continues to feel the effect of the tone of the New York Stock market but it is a noticeable feature that when a decline occurs in these shares, there is very little stock actually brought out. At the present writing Pacific Gas common is very firm and bids fair to soon become the local leader again. The balance of the stock list shows activity in spots without any marked fluctuations. In the Hawaiian Sugar group a new record in Union Sugar was made. The bond list remains dull with practically no important changes, outside of a slight reaction downward in some of the better know securities. It is generally conceded that the present is a good time to make purchases of Associated Oil and Pacific Gas common, for it is thought that both of these companies will be on a dividend basis early next year and in that event will command much higher figures.

in two months I am unable to say; nothing had occurred since the organization of the Committee more likely to lead them to join it than the event which brought it into existence. One significant fact, however, is that Frederick A. Woodworth was elected to represent San Francisco in the State Senate, last winter, by the vote of the Vigilantes.

Gen. Covarrubias did not remain long with me, as he had to return to Santa Barbara, a distance of thirty-five miles, before day, to prevent his visit to the Arroyo from being known. Thus that generous hearted old gentleman had taken upon himself a ride of seventy miles in one night, to give warning to a poor outcast, against whom it seemed the whole world was in arms. May years of honor and happiness be still in store for him, and his old age as green as will ever be my grateful recollection of his kindness. He gave me a bottle of really good brandy, which he brought from Santa Barbara for me, and, after telling me to be sure to get out of the way as soon as it was light, he rode back to town. I have been since informed that he was seen that night going to the Arroyo Honde by one of Don Pablo de la Guerra's people; on being informed of which, that gentleman immediately sent the man to one of his ranchos in the interior, to prevent his telling it.

As soon as it was light, I took my blankets and water, with provisions sufficient to last me several days in case circumstances should cut off my communication with the house, and went out with little Avellino, who carried the things on his pony, in search of a good hiding place. I selected one at no great distance from the house, on the mountain side, where, from its steepness and the thick growth of chapparal it was impossible for a horseman to approach me. No one but Avellino, who was to visit me as often as possible, knew the place of my retreat. I remained in the place five days without interruption, Avellino visiting me every day, and bringing from his good mother warm tea, eggs, etc. During the first part of my sojourn here, Avellino, who daily brought me the news, informed me that several of "los yankees," as he called them, had been riding about the neighborhood, but as yet, none of them had approached the house. One morning, however, he brought me the intelligence that a stranger, who was an American, and armed with a six shooter, was at the house. Avellino said he talked a great deal about me, and professed to be my friend. The little fellow did not return to me that day as usual with my dinner. From this I suspected that there must be something wrong. About the middle of the day I heard loud shooting in the vicinity of the house. First there were six shots fired from a pistol in rapid succession, and then no more shooting for a long time, when I heard three or four tremendous reports nearly as loud as would have been made by a cannon. This threw me into great consternation. I did not know what on earth to make of it. I surmised all sorts of things. I was in a dreadful agony of suspense, and sometimes fancied that perhaps the Committee had received proof that Pedro had sheltered me, and not finding me on his premises had battered down his house and killed him and the Senora and possibly the little children and old Konoya and his two black dogs, and everything else about the place. I lay still, however, in my hiding place without stirring out of it till night came. Still no one came near me, and I now made quite sure that something unfortunate had occurred. I slept none the whole of that anxious night, and the morning found me still unvisited. At length, about noon, to my great relief and joy I saw little Avellino coming to me with my food, and so great was my delight that I could not refrain from taking him in my arms and kissing him. I tried to learn from him what had happened; but though the child did his best to make me understand him, he could not succeed. I could only learn from the Spanish word which signified it that something had been killed, and could also make out that everybody about the house was safe. I made him understand that I wanted to see his father, to which he replied "poco tiempo," and gave me to know that the American was still at the house. Avellino left me and toward evening he guided Pedro to my hiding place. The whole mystery of the preceding day was then explained. Pedro told me that the American was traveling from Santa Barbara according to his own story, to San Luis Obispo, and had stopped at his house to rest himself for a day or two. Shortly before dinner time the dogs had started a California lion in the orchard and run him into a tree. The stranger had expended all the shots of his six-shooter on him without killing him, and they had then sent over to the Refugio for an escopet with which he was finally dispatched. This accounted for the loud reports I had heard. Pedro gave me a copy of the San Francisco Herald, and another of the New York Spirit of the Times which the stranger had left behind him. Whoever that Vigilante was,I beg leave here to return him my thanks for the news with which he so kindly supplied me. Pedro told me that the fellow talked a great deal about me, and professed to be my friend, telling him that I could return to San Francisco after the excitement had died away without molestation, etc. I told Pedro that the man was a spy, and had only been endeavoring to draw from him some information as to my whereabouts. There was no good reason why he should require to rest nearly two whole days after riding only thirty-five miles, the distance from Santa Barbara, and I of course understood that his protestations of friendship for me were only intended to throw Pedro off of his guard, and induce him to be communicative. Pedro agreed with me, and after some little further conversation returned to the house. Two days after this, and after the steamer had gone down the coast, I came down from the mountain and prepared to sleep in the canyon, which was much warmer and pleasanter. After I had spread out my blankets, it being quite dark, I went to the house to pay a visit to the Senora. I staid some time there before I returned to my sleeping place. It was very dark when I got back, and as I was about getting under my blankets, I felt something crawl along my body and coil itself up beside me. I of course knew what it was, and as I was springing from the blankets the reptile began to rattle. I ran off a short distance, and peering through the dim starlight, I could see its outlines as it lay coiled near the blankets rattling its tail. Thank Heaven, however, it had given me warning, and I could not help thinking that, in that respect, it was more chivalrous than the blood-hounds of the Committee, who were trying to steal upon me night and day to murder me. This was really one of the worst frights I had during my campaign. I did not go near my blankets again that night, but returned immediately to the house and informed them of my narrow escape. The Senora put me up stairs in the bed with her oldest boy, Chino. After I had got into my little friend's bed I could not sleep. It was not half as comfortable as my blankets on the ground; and I had been sleeping in the open air so many nights that the air of the room was disagreeably close. The bed too was full of fleas which were devouring me. Toward day, however, I succeeded in getting to sleep, and so remained till about eight o'clock in the morning, when Avellino came to call me to breakfast. It had been ready some time and waiting for me. I got up and dressed, but felt so badly from the loss of sleep and the bites of the fleas, that I told the Senora I would take a bath before I breakfasted. About an eighth of a mile from the house there was a clear cold spring in which I bathed every day to make myself tough and hearty. To this spring then, I went, and enjoyed a most delightful bath. I had just got out of the water when I heard the voice of Avellino calling out to me Paisano! Paisano! I replied Aqui! Aqui! muchacho. He came running up to me breathlessly exclaiming, "Los hombres en el casa! mucho mala! Vigilantes! escopetas! vamos! vamos! making motions with his hand to me to run up the mountain. At the same time he gathered my blankets which lay where I had spread them the night before and put them in a hollow of a tree. I knew that the little fellow was in earnest and hastily throwing on my clothes, I moved off as fast as my legs could carry me, while Avellino ran back to the house.

I had not been long on the mountain before Pedro came and informed me that I had scarcely left the house before two men, armed with guns, rushed into it, and went directly up stairs to the bed where I had slept. Then they searched the house thoroughly, and afterwards old Konoya's hut. While they were ransacking the hut, the Senora, fearing that I would come back, despatched Avellino to warn me of my danger.

He told me that one of them was known to him, and that he was a keeper of the light house, named Meacham. The other one he said, was a large man, with sandy whiskers, probably from San Francisco, and a stranger to him. They told him they had ridden from the light house that morning, a distance of twenty miles, Meacham acting as guide. He said that they were then eating the breakfast that had been prepared for me. Here was an unexpected state of things! As there were only two of them, I suggested to Pedro the idea of capturing them. Pedro having no gun, however, I concluded that if we took them at all it would have to be done singly. One of the men, Pedro, told me, had left his gun leaning against the house, outside the door when he went in to breakfast. I proposed to Pedro to walk into the house and engage them in conversation while I should manage to get the gun and shoot the San Francisco man, and we would then capture Meacham.

Reader, be not startled at this avowal of so bloody an intent. I deliberately declare to you that if it had been feasible I would have done it, and felt now no pang of remorse or upbraiding conscience on account of it. A cruel and relentless war was being waged against me by a set of lawless miscreants; I was myself hunted with guns like a wild beast, and it was as much my natural right to turn and rend my pursuers if I could, as it is that of a bear or a wolf to destroy, if he can, the huntsman who has wounded him. The question of murder or manslaughter or any other legal phrase which designates the killing of man by his fellow, enters not into the consideration of what I was about to do. These men had placed themselves outside the pale of the law, and even of civilization, by their barbarous persecution of me, and I would have killed one of them with as little compunction as I would a wild Indian who was pursuing me in a hostile wilderness. I offered Pedro half of the money I had if he would assist me to carry out my plan, but he would not listen to it. He said that Meacham was his friend and harm might befall him in the melee; and, besides, it would be very sure to bring trouble on himself.

Finding that there was no chance of carrying out my design I was obliged to give it up, and let the blood-hound live; and bitterly do I still regret that it had to be so. I was anxious to get a look at them, and Pedro and I walked cautiously down toward the house. The gun had by this time been taken indoors and I did not see it. Pedro said that the San Francisco man talked a great deal to Meacham about me, expressing his surprise that I had not yet been taken. He would have talked on about the plans of my pursuers, but Meacham checked him by telling him that Pedro understood English. Meacham himself spoke Spanish. They asked the Senora a great many questions about me. She told them she did not know who the man was that had been to her house (the Refugio people had given the information of my having been positively seen there) nor where he had gone, and asked Meacham if he had not been to the light house where he started to go when he left her house. They evidently suspected that she knew more than she chose to tell, and finally they told her that if she would tell them where I was they would give her three thousand dollars. But the faithful woman, though very poor and with a large family of children and a drunken husband, persisted in denying that she knew anything about me.

Finding that they could make nothing out of her, and probably giving up the idea that I was about the premises, they finally mounted their horses and rode toward Santa Barbara; Meacham stating before he left that he would be back the next day on his way to the light house. As they rode away I had a full view of them, but they were too far off for me to distinguish the features of the large man from San Francisco, with the sandy whiskers. After they were gone I did partly persuade Pedro into a plan by which if they came back I could get a chance at the large man from San Francisco. Meacham only returned, however, and he did not stop at the house, but rode directly on.

The occurrence of the morning convinced me that there must be something foul going on about the premises, and I confess I had begun to suspect that Pedro's avarice could not stand much more temptation. The fact of those two men rushing directly to the bed I had occupied, and one of them being a great friend of Pedro, looked very badly. However, I did not communicate my suspicions to any one of the family, and determined to keep a sharp look out, and at least not come so near being caught napping again.

About the time of this attempt to kidnap me, another cargo of "Reformers" landed at Santa Barbara in the schooner "Exact." They were under the command of T. D. Johns, a Colonel of one of the Vigilance Committee regiments. Whether this man's antecedents in California peculiarly fitted him for the task of reforming the morals of his fellow citizens or not is a question which at some future day I propose to investigate for the enlightenment of our own day and generation, as well as of posterity. This immaculate "purifier" had under his command James F. Curtis, now Chief of Police in San Francisco, an office bestowed upon him by the Vigilance vote as a reward for his zealous and self-sacrificing efforts to subvert the constitution and insult the laws. There were also in the party D. W. C. Thompson, Charles H. Gough, and a score or two of obscure lunch-eaters, hired by the day to do the Committee's dirty bidding, whose glorious names I regret to be unable to hand down to posterity with befitting honor. They landed part of their force at the light house at Point Conception, and placed them under the command of Meacham, who, enjoying the position of light house keeper, merely to vary the monotony of his existence, amused himself by perpetrating treason against the Government, upon whose bounty he lived. They landed in a small boat which they presented to Meacham, and I afterward understood that he had promised to give it to Pedro. As they never found me, however, at Pedro's house, I scarcely think he made good his promise.

The "Exact" remained but a short time at Santa Barbara and then proceeded down the coast, stationing men at San Pedro, San Diego, and all the important points on the coast, even as far down as the Rio Colorado. I have reason to believe that by this time my friend Jack Power had managed to get most of them on the wrong scent, for by far the greater portion of the party in the "Exact" went down the coast.

Most of the above information as to the movements of my pursuers, I received from a nephew of Don Pablo de la Guerra, who visited me at the Arroyo a day or two after the visit of Meacham and his San Francisco friend. This young gentleman spoke English very well. His father was an Englishman named Hartnell, who had married into the De la Guerra family. He informed me that the San Franciscans reported all sort of stories as to my whereabouts.

I had forgotten to state that, while General Covarrubias was making the night ride to give me warning of the arrival of Woodworth's party in the steamer, Don Pablo, not being very anxious for them to commence the hunt after me that night, entertained them at a sort of evening party at his house. This young gentleman had been present on that occasion, and gave me an account of it. He said that Dr. Den was present and asked "little Woody," as his friends called him, if he had turned "rat catcher." Woodworth replied that he was there in the capacity of a deputy sheriff, and that if he succeeded in capturing me, he should of course hand me over to the officers of the law, (of course he would!) and actually exhibited a bench warrant. Here then was the first gun fired at me from a legitimate quarter. How these persons came into possession of those warrants is a mystery to me to this day. I have ascertained that David Scannel, the Sheriff of San Francisco, did not depute them, and he alone had power to do so. Thomas Hayes, the County Clerk, has assured me that there is no record in his office of the issuance of any such warrant, and none of the newspapers of San Francisco appear then to have known that any members of the Vigilance Committee were in the possession of authority to arrest me under the law. Probably Mr. District Attorney Byrne is able to solve the mystery. His brother, Lafayette Byrne, was the deputy sheriff attending on the Court of Sessions, and it is a little remarkable that when Mr. District Attorney Byrne was called upon to give new bonds under the Consolidation Act, Selim E. Woodworth and his brother, the Senator, became his sureties. Since my return I have endeavored in vain to discover who it was that deputed these people, and thus put an additional weapon into the hands of my enemies. It is almost as difficult to solve this matter, as it was for my enemies to discover the "white hat," which was supposed to cover the head of the ubiquitous author of this narrative. One thing is very certain, they had the warrants, and it is equally certain in my mind, that had either Mr. Selim E. Woodworth, or any of his gang, succeeded in capturing me, the officers of the law would have had very little chance of exercising their functions in my case. Under the circumstances which so notoriously surrounded me, it can scarcely be insisted that giving me aid and comfort, even against these warrants, could be construed into the compounding of a felony. On the contrary, all aid extended to me under the circumstances, was only so much done toward preventing the perpetration of a felony on me.

I also learned from Mr. Hartnell that placards offering large rewards for my body if, as was by some supposed, I was dead, were posted in conspicuous places throughout Santa Barbara. They were printed in both English and Spanish. The description of my person was very bad, though it must be confessed I was not in a situation to be remarkably cleanly or neat in my apparel. Among other things the placards set forth that I chewed tobacco, and did it in a filthy manner. I have never chewed a piece of tobacco in my life. In my age too, they made a mistake of seven years. I tried very hard afterwards to get one of the original copies; but could not succeed. Mr. Hartnell informed me that the name of Wm. T. Coleman, President of the Vigilance Committee, was appended to them. The following is a copy of one of them which was published in the Santa Barbara Gazette:

"300 DOLLARS REWARD! !

It being rumored that one EDWARD McGOWAN, a fugitive from justice, on the charge of murder, from San Francisco County, who was last seen in Santa Barbara, has been murdered for a sum of money known to have been in his possession, the above reward will be paid for the recovery of his body, or for information that will lead to his discovery, by applying to the office of Russel Heath, Sheriff of Santa Barbara County.

Description of McGowan.—He is about five feet, nine inches tall; tolerably stout; his weight about a hundred and seventy pounds; somewhat more than fifty years of age, and accustomed to chew tobacco to excess. He has grey eyes and hair and is very dirty in his person. July 14, 1856."

I remained concealed in my hiding place, making an occasional call on the family at the house, until Saturday, the twenty-sixth day of July. Things were so quiet, and so few persons visited the Arroyo, that I began to think a storm must be brewing, and became uneasy. On that day I made arrangement with the Senora to send her to Santa Barbara with a note to General Covarrubias; and she was to make a careful reconnoisance, and pick up any information she could with regard to the movements of the enemy. Accordingly, she cooked me a chicken stuffed with eggs, etc., and gave me enough food to last four or five days. I gave her twenty dollars, and some money to Chino to spend in town for himself and buy me a bottle of brandy. She had five horses saddled, and took all of her children with her. After giving me strict instructions on no account to come near the house for fear of a surprise, she rode off. As soon as they had gone, I betook myself to my retreat on the mountain, and prepared to lie close until my good hostess should return. When night came I hung my chicken and other food on a limb and supposed that it would there be safe. But what was my consternation on awakening in the morning at finding that it had all mysteriously disappeared! Some sneaking coyote, with which that portion of the country abounds, had stolen it in the night. Here was a dilemma! I was without food, and knew that the Senora would not return for several days, and was at a loss what to do. Finally I walked down the canyon toward old Konoya's hut, but no sooner came in sight of the orchard, than to my great surprise and alarm, I espied a man with a red shirt on, lying down with his face to the ground. I instantly started back into the chapparal and escaped his notice. I returned to my hiding place at once, and remained there till dark when I again came down and entered Konoya's hut. I got from the old man some jerked beef and immediately started back to my retreat. This was on Sunday evening, the 7th of July. I had not gone far before I heard footsteps and immediately got out of the way. I observed two men, one of whom was Pedro, go to the place where I usually hid. I followed on after them and when they arrived at the spot, Pedro said "come." This was the usual word to signify to me his approach. I appeared before him wondering who could be the stranger with him. I saw that Pedro was very drunk. He told me the man lived at Las Cruces where he had been spending the day with him, but did not give me his name. I was very angry at Pedro's conduct, for he had promised Power when he put me in his charge that no one should know of my place of concealment outside of his own family. He pressed me to drink some bad brandy out of a bottle which he had with him which I declined, and he and his companion fell into a conversation in Spanish of which I could understand that I was the subject. The stranger apparently did not believe that I was the person that Pedro was representing me to be, but the drunken wretch assured him that I was, and spoke to him in the most imprudent manner about my friends in Santa Barbara, telling him their names. After they had conversed some time, the stranger asked me in Spanish for sixty dollars. I understood him perfectly well, but pretended that I did not, and asked Pedro what he said. He replied, "He wants you to give him sixty dollars, and he will not tell any one that you are here." My first impulse was to take out my purse and give him the money; but a moment's reflection prevented my committing that act of folly. I remembered that Pedro had never seen my money, and thought it best that he should not. I told him that I had hid my purse in the mountain, but that if they would come the next day, I would give the man what he demanded. This did not appear exactly to satisfy them; nevertheless, after some further conversation they left me.

I knew there were others about the house; for the appearance of the red-shirted man I had seen in the orchard was as yet unaccounted for. I determined not to sleep in my usual place, and accordingly I moved a short distance from it, where I could see anything that might transpire without being visible myself, and kept watch all night.

Just before daylight I saw three men coming up the canyon. They were conversing in a low tone, and I could gather that it was about me. They went to the spot where I had slept the night before, and, not finding me there, again went away.

My mind was now made up that beyond all doubt Pedro had some hellish design on me, and I concluded that the Arroyo Honde was no longer a safe refuge. Accordingly, as soon as it was sufficiently light I went down to old Konoya's hut, and got the only remaining piece of jerked beef he had—and a very small piece it was—and leaving there a blanket the Senora had loaned me, took the one that Power had sent me, and with many a bitter imprecation as I contrasted in my mind the treachery of the scoundrel Pedro, with the fidelity of his good wife, I took my way up the mountain and became once more a friendless wanderer.

Twelve thousand eight hundred miles from two Diamond Tires on the front wheels, six thousand miles from one on the rear and eight thousand miles from another on the rear is the experience of G. B. Lumbard of San Jose who owns a Rambler car. Needless to say Mr. Lumbard is highly satisfied with the service from Diamond Tires and has so written The Diamond Rubber Co. of this city.

Among the recent purchasers of the Ford cars as reported by Ivan L. de Jongh, sales manager of the Standard Motor Car Company, is Robert Bonner of San Mateo. Mr. Bonner purchased one of the latest models of the Ford Touring Car and he expects to do a great deal of motoring this season. He has taken delivery of his car.

E. E. Jones of Bakersfield has been visiting the Winton branch and has taken delivery of his eighth "Little Six" Winton this season. Mr. Jones uses the Wintons to traverse his immense oil interests in the vicinity of Bakersfield.

Mr. W. G. Selby and Mrs. Selby who last summer motored from Ohio to the Pacific Coast in their "Winton Six" roadster, are now planning a trip from their home in Marietta, Ohio, to the City of Mexico by the way of New Orleans in Mr. Selby's 1910 "Winton Six" toy tonneau. Mrs. Selby is an expert chauffeur and will relieve her husband at the wheel frequently during the trip to Mexico which is to commence June 1st.

Senator J. B. Sanford of Ukiah who recently took delivery of a Chalmers "30" reports the Chalmers a very popular machine in Mendocino County. Speaking of his own car the Senator says: "I have had my new Chalmers '30' about a month and have never had the least bit of trouble with it. I have now mastered the driving art fairly well and am a regular 'Barney Oldfield.' I have traveled over a thousand miles so far without an accident of any kind, not even a puncture. I start next week in my machine on a tour through the Sacramento Valley and when I return I will be able to say, I am sure, that the Chalmers is still the boss of the road. It is a great machine, is easily kept in condition and runs perfectly."

The Hudson car received another big endorsement recently when the Fairbanks-Morse Gas Engine Company of this city placed their second order this season for a Hudson runabout. This will be appreciated when it is known to the public that the Fairbanks-Morse people are probably the largest gas engine builders in the country, and the motor on the Hudson car meets their approval in every way.

E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company received a surprise recently in the way of a telegraphic order from United States Senator Nixon at Washington, D. C., for a six-cylinder Lozier car to be delivered in Reno, June 15. The senator is buying this car for use in Nevada, particularly for his family in making the run from Reno to Lake Tahoe. This is another endorsement for the Lozier car, as Senator Nixon was in New York City at the time of the National Automobile Show and made a thorough investigation of all cars.

Dr. Joseph Hyde Pratt, State geologist of North Carolina and president of the Southern Appalachian Good Roads Association, which includes the two Carolinas, Georgia and Tennessee, has just purchased a Chalmers "30" touring car in Richmond, Va. Dr. Pratt was the official road judge in the New York to Atlanta good roads endurance run and was so impressed with the performance of the Chalmers cars in this run that he has chosen a "30" touring car for use in his good roads work.

The Buick has carried on a very active and surprisingly successful racing campaign this season on the coast. Its victories were features at both the Motordrome in Los Angeles and the Shriner's Ingleside meet here. R. K. Roberts who has charge of these racing departments in C. S. Howard's absence, declares that the car has no intention of resting on laurels won, and consequently Buick models 10 and 40 were entered in both the Coalinga auto field meet of May 1 and 2 and the Santa Rosa auto meet of May 6 and 7. Ed. Waterman and Nikrent did the driving in the former meet, while Frank Murray will be the man at the wheel in Santa Rosa. On the opening day of the Coalinga meet there was a road race from Fresno to Coalinga starting at 7 a. m. Nikrent and Waterman both drove Buick "40's" in this event.

One of the most astonishing features of the Hupmobiles popular growth is the manner in which the little car has held its own in competition with more powerful makes. The remarkable record of the "Little Pal" in last year's Glidden, and the wonderful trip of the four little Hupps through snow drifts from Detroit to New York last winter are some of the achievements that have drawn attention to the diminutive machine's great endurance. Now announcement is made that E. W. Swanbrough of Denver has entered a Hupmobile in the famous flag to flag race from Denver to the City of Mexico. A harder course than this contest offers is scarcely conceivable. Steep mountain roads, unbridged streams and baffling desert sands all go toward making the route the most strenuous known. The Hupmobile will be put to a test such as no car of its class has ever been called upon to stand and should it succeed in its audacious attempt its reputation will exceed anything before achieved by two passenger runabouts

H. E. Doty, Pacific Coast manager of the White Co., and Frank Davis, local sales manager, recently drove a seven passenger 40 horsepower White Steamer and a White Gasoline Car to Modesto. There was a full party in each car during the tour. The trip down from San Francisco was made in four and one-half hours. Doty reports roads in fair condition all the way and exceptionally fine between Livermore and Dublin.

According to Bob Weinstock, the Morgan & Wright Nobby Tread Tires are giving excellent service in Sacramento and vicinity. During the winter season these were the first tires after the high water receded to negotiate the overflow sections without the use of chains. Consequently they sprang into an immediate popularity that has continued to grow.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 28,044.

WILLARD A. GARDNER, Plaintiff, vs.
JENNIE A. GARDNER, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to JENNIE A. GARDNER, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE UPON PETITION TO MORTGAGE REAL PROPERTY

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8903, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of G. G. BURNETT, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of Jennie S. Burnett, G. W. Burnett and Jennie P. Gruver, in the above entitled estate, wherein, as executors of the estate of G. G. Burnett they ask permission to borrow Fifty Thousand (50,000) Dollars upon certain real property hereinafter more particularly described,

It is ordered that all persons interested in the said matter be and appear in this Court Tuesday, June 14, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m., then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be made granting permission to mortgage the said property hereinafter described,

And it is further ordered that notice of this hearing be published for four successive weeks prior to said date in "Town Talk."

The following is a particular description of the property desired to be mortgaged:

1st. Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly line of Turk Street with the westerly line of Larkin Street, running thence southerly along the said westerly line of Larkin Street eighty-two (82) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles westerly eighty-seven (87) feet six (6) inches; thence at right angles northerly eighty-two (82) feet six (6) inches to the southerly line of Turk Street, and thence easterly eighty-seven (87) feet six (6) inches along the said last named line to the point of commencement; being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Six (6).

2nd. Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the westerly line of Larkin Street with the southerly line of O'Farrell Street, running thence southerly along the said westerly line of Larkin Street fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles westerly eighty-five (85) feet; thence at right angles northerly fifty (50) feet to the southerly line of O'Farrell Street, and then easterly eighty-five (85) feet along said last named line to the point of commencement; being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Nine (9). ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE ON APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO MORTGAGE REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2736, N. S.—Dept. No. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN GEORGE BUECKER, also known as GEORGE BUECKER, Deceased.

SOPHIE BUECKER, as administratrix of the estate of John George Buecker, also known as George Buecker, deceased, having filed herein her petition in due form praying for an order of this Court authorizing and directing her to borrow the sum of Seventeen Hundred Dollars ($1700.00), or such lesser amount as to the Court may seem meet, wherewith to pay off and discharge a certain promissory note now secured by a mortgage on certain property belonging to said estate, and hereinafter described, and for the purpose of securing said loan to mortgage to the lender of said sum of money the undivided one-half interest belonging to the above named deceased, in and to that certain parcel of real property situated and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Folsom Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Twenty (120) feet Northerly from the Northerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Street; running thence Northerly along said line of Folsom Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly One Hundred and Twenty-two (122) feet and Six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly Twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly One Hundred and Twenty-two (122) feet and Six (6) inches to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block No. 172;

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court, at its Courtroom, Department Number 10, in the Grant Building, at the Southeast Corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in said City and County, at 10 o'clock a. m. on Friday, the 10th day of June, 1910, then and there to show cause why the prayer of said petition should not be granted and the real property above described mortgaged as prayed for.

It is further ordered that service of this order be made by publication thereof once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation published in said City and County of San Francisco.

For further particulars reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein.

Dated May 4th, 1910. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 28,088.

MARIA ROMEI, Plaintiff, vs.
GIUSEPPE ROMEI, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Giuseppe Romei, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1910.

Shaw on Women

The ordinary woman's business is to get married.

Women begin to be socially tolerable at thirty, and improve until the deepening of their consciousness is at length choked by the decay of their faculties.

In every case the relationship between the woman and the man is the same; she is the pursuer and contriver, he the pursued and disposed of. When she is baffled, like Ophelia, she goes mad and commits suicide; and the man goes straight from her funeral to a fencing match.

"Womanly self-sacrifice" is an essentially manly weakness.

He who desires a lifetime of happiness with a beautiful woman desires to enjoy the taste of wine by keeping his mouth always full of it.

The formation of a young lady's mind and character usually consists in telling her lies.

Women do not mind ill-usage so much, because the strongest position for a woman is that of a victim.

It is the self-sacrificing women that sacrifice others most ruthlessly. I know a poor wretch whose one desire in life is to run away from his wife. She prevents him by threatening to throw herself in front of the engine of the train he leaves her in. That is what all women do.

No woman looks her best after sitting up all night.

A lady who is invariably exceedingly disagreeable is, in consequence, held to be exceedingly good.

"Mrs. Tanqueray" was received with delight by the public; St. Teresa would have been hissed off the same stage for her contempt for the ideal represented by a carriage, a fashionable dressmaker, and a dozen servants.

In the past women have rather liked being worshipped on false pretenses. In America they still do.

Women spend half their lives telling little lies for men, and sometimes big ones.

A man who discusses his conscience is much like a woman who discusses her modesty.

If women were as fastidious as men, morally or physically, there would be an end of the race.

When a lady, because she is a lady, will face an extremity of parasitic dependence rather than take a situation as cook or parlor maid, we make large allowances for her.

"I cannot understand why she is so unlucky; she is such a nice woman!" That is the formula. As if women with any force in them ever were altogether nice!

The whole world is strewn with snares, traps, gins, and pitfalls for the capture of men by women.

Queen Alexandra a Lover of Dogs

Queen Alexandra of England has been paying great attention to her dogs while she has been staying at Sandringham Palace lately, and several changes are to be made among these animals. Her Majesty is warmly attached to her four-footed friends, and it is with the utmost regret, and no small grief, that she parts with any of them. She realizes to the full, however, that it is little short of cruelty to keep an old dog alive to drag out an ailing existence when approaching the end of its days, and her pets are all destroyed, therefore, as soon as they show signs of failing health. The kennels at Sandringham are models of their kind, and are visited by the Queen almost daily when she is staying at her Norfolk residence. Her Majesty still maintains her preference for Russian wolfhounds, and has just added two well-nigh perfect specimens of this breed to her stud, and hopes to show these in due course. It was largely due to the Queen's example that these dogs were introduced into England, and the first one of these dogs that she possessed was presented to her by the Tsar of Russia. She is also an ardent admirer of the toy "Pom," and possesses several of these charming little dogs. All dogs, however, appeal to the Queen very strongly, and at one time and another she has owned specimens of almost every breed.

Dead Sea Facts

The Dead sea is a remarkable lake—46 miles long and from five to nine miles wide—situated in the southeast of Palestine, and known from the time of Jerome (340-420 A. D.) as the "Dead" sea because no fish of any kind have ever been found in its waters. Its surface is lower than that of any other body of water known. At its northern end it has a depth of about 1300 feet, while the water at the southern extremity is only from 3 to 12 feet deep. The Dead sea is fed by the Jordan from the north, but has no outlet—the water being apparently carried off by evaporation. The water of the Dead sea contains a large amount of the salts of magnesia and soda; as a consequence its specific gravity is high, and bathers float in it with ease. According to tradition, Sodom and Gomorrah "the cities of the plain," stood on the site now occupied by the Dead sea. This view, however, is no longer entertained, and it is now considered certain that the Dead sea existed in its present state during the days of Abraham, and even much earlier.

Wieland's at home

Could you inspect every department of our brewery and witness every process in the making of Wieland's Beer; look into all the intricate machinery of the biggest bottling plant in the West—the most modern in the world; peer into every nook and corner and examine every detail for cleanliness, you would marvel at the organization that keeps such an immense plant so spotlessly clean. If then you would enter our store-rooms and note the quantity and quality of the plump, ripe barley malt and hops used in the making of

if you would submit the water used in the brewing to a chemical analysis; if you would witness the care and attention of experts in every period of manufacture and aging, if finally you could follow each bottle through the various stages of cleansing—nine different washings—note the scientific method of pasteurizing, you would then be fully convinced that the beer that bears the "Wieland" label is the peer of any and most fit to be your HOME BEER.

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

A New "Breakfast Food" Is Born Every Day

Imitation is the most sincere flattery.

H-O oatmeal has been imitated but never equaled. If you are a user of H-O oatmeal, just try the other "Rolled Oats" and see how quickly you will miss the delicate flavor, the tender kernels, the satisfying result of a dish of H-O oatmeal. If you are not a user of H-O oatmeal, better try it at once, and after convincing yourself of its superior quality, you will wonder how you ever used any other.

It is dangerous to experiment; stick to the tried and true H-O oatmeal—that is steam-cooked, easily digested and nourishing. Contains more real nutriment than meat or eggs, and more muscle-building material than Corn Meal, Rice, Wheat Flour Bread or Soda Crackers.

Do not confuse H-O oatmeal with the ordinary raw oats sold under the name of "Rolled Oats" or "Crushed Oats." H-O oatmeal is never sold in bulk; it is free from dirt, germs and all impurities.
H-O oatmeal is manufactured from the highest grade of selected stock. After removing all foreign matter, the meat of the oat is subjected to a very high temperature, and by our own patented process is cooked for several hours under heavy steam pressure. This steam cooking dextrinizes the starch and renders the oats easily digestible.
H-O oatmeal is ready for the breakfast table after from ten to fifteen minutes boiling and provides an inviting dish of sweet, clean, separate, tender kernels in place of the sticky, soggy, indigestible mass obtained in cooking the usually "Rolled Oats."

Possibly the "other" kind may be cheaper; but as soon as you have tested and appreciated the quality of H-O oatmeal, you will gladly pay the few cents difference.

Our Wide-Open Town

The cabal organized to discredit the McCarthy administration is presenting some pretty severe indictments against this feud-ridden city. If the superheated promulgations of this civic propaganda are to be accepted as authoritative Mayor McCarthy must be suspected of having constituted Venus Pandemos the tutelary goddess of the metropolis. The whole tone and substance of current protest against conditions gives the impression that the city is wallowing in wickedness. To judge of the state of affairs from the emotions of our uplifters is to be impelled to the conclusion that the whole community has been plunged into the atmosphere of a Circe's palace. Shocking and humiliating are the pictures that have been drawn of the debauched and demoralized city. But are these pictures works of the imagination, or are they counterfeit presentments of a modern Babylon abounding in orgies and crimes and scarlet scenes of wantonness? Our own opinion on the subject is that the pictures do San Francisco injustice. We suspect the anti-McCarthy cabal of having worked itself into a spurious spasm of morality for the purpose of playing on public sentiment in the interest of the tireless patriots who were repudiated at the polls last November. We know San Francisco pretty well; we have seen it grow through the years; we have been in close touch with the administration of municipal affairs since the days of Mayor Bartlett, and in our judgment the city is not degenerate in the sense of its having become more tolerant of vice in its visible forms. It is not to be denied of course that San Francisco has a surplus of depravity. The only point we desire to make is that the city is not growing worse and that the distinguished publicists who are holding up their hands in holy horror, affecting to be scandalized at unrestrained indecency and unconfined lubricity are indulging in the pharisaical brand of emotion. We are not in sympathy with the McCarthy administration. We believe that it is injurious to the city to have our municipal government under the control of a party that is devoted to the interests of a class, and we suspect that the cabal now engaged in a campaign of misrepresentation are too cowardly to express their true sentiments on this subject.

The Platform Echo

San Francisco is what is known as a wide-open town. So is every big city in the world. The only difference between San Francisco and other big cities is in the degree of homage which vice pays to virtue. There is more hypocrisy here than in other cities, and consequently more cant about the things that a Christian civilization has yet to extirpate from society. The McCarthy administration has been more frank in its attitude toward these things than any of its predecessors, and hence the impression that Vice has been given the freedom of the city. Mayor McCarthy has blundered. He has sinned against discretion not only by his candor but by some of his appoinments, notably that of Harry Flannery. He is justly to be censured for the tone which has been given to his administration. And so are those of his critics who are spreading the impression broadcast that San Francisco has become so depraved that it is almost impossible for Innocence to escape contamination. We doubt the sincerity of these critics. Conspicuous among them is Mr. Harris Weinstock, a distinguished representative of a coterie of jawsmiths which echoes Bulletin editorials on public platforms. Mr. Weinstock was one of the speakers at the banquet of the Unitarian Club last week. His theme was the Bulletin's favorite, "Hurting Business." He said among other things that business was hurt by a wide-open town and that Los Angeles is now much more prosperous than when it was wide open under Mayor Harper. Now there is much to be said against a wide-open town on moral grounds, but it savors of cant to hold that the business of a city is to be improved in proportion to the restrictions that are placed upon its citizens in the interest of a certain species of morality. If such was the case Los Angeles would be more prosperous than Chicago, New York, London, Berlin or Paris. It savors of cant to attempt to account on a purely moral postulate for the difference in business conditions in two cities temperamentally so dissimilar, so distinctly and obviously incompatible as Los Angeles and San Francisco. Industrial affairs in these two cities, as Mr. Weinstock knows, are affected powerfully by an economic factor which makes for the advantage of one and the disadvantage of the other. Manufacturers in Los Angeles are today receiving a good deal of business which they can handle much cheaper than it can be handled in this city, the reason being that organized labor is strong in San Francisco and weak in the metropolis of the orange belt. This is a matter, however, that Mr. Weinstock and the Bulletin prefer not to discuss. Mr. Weinstock is a merchant who caters to union labor, and therefore he has nothing to say against the McCarthy administration on the score of the prestige which it gives to union labor. He prefers to pose as the friend of union labor and the uncompromising foe of the tenderloin.

The Old Town

Let us refresh our recollection with a view to comparing the San Francisco of former years with the San Francisco of today with especial reference to those features that are regulated by the police. Patrick Crowley, as Chief of Police, was respected and applauded by some of the gentlemen who are now appalled at the licentiousness of the city. Was the lid on the town in those halcyon days? Was the tenderloin isolated as it should be from the precincts of pink propriety? Were no attempts made to seduce the unwary with sweets and spices mixed with pale honey and Pramnian wine? Was there no libidinous dancing on the Barbary Coast, no paphian posturing in the slums? In short, was the night life free from contamination? Impressions of that period in the history of the old town we still retain. Through the shadowy past memory runs and pictures rise. We see Morton street, the centre of the shopping district, lined with rookeries from Kearny to Stockton; from the windows, leering forth, paint-bedaubed outcasts of society brazenly employing their vulgar devices of seduction. Next, a Sabbath picture—pious people on their way to church along Dupont street from Bush to California, and every house they pass a harlot's haven. How far removed was that thoroughfare from the homes of respectable people? The Nob Hill residence district extended almost to the doors of the Dupont street dens. How singularly complaisant we were in those days!

Ellis street from end to end was a residence street, but it was dotted with houses of ill-repute as far west as Taylor. The tenderloin of that period abounded in dives. Women were employed in them as waiters, and ribald and obscene vaudeville performances were given. It was in those days that boys and girls learned to smoke opium in Chinatown and that Chinese lottery agents peddled tickets everywhere. Anti-gambling crusades were of frequent occurrence, but neither Captain White's faro game on Third street nor Billy Briggs' faro game on O'Farrell street was ever closed. Thick and stifling was the moral atmosphere of San Francisco in the eighties and early nineties. In the course of time concessions to decency were slowly exacted, but even during the regime of that sacrosanct moralist, the Hon. James D. Phelan, there was more to be horrified at than there is today. Mr. Phelan was tolerant of the Cremorne, a dive in Market street, the worst, perhaps, in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. Mr. Phelan gave protection to the Cafe Royal where stud-horse poker was conducted day and night. And in his day saloons with side-entrances for girls flourished until the shocking murder of a woman in one of them aroused a hostile public sentiment. The Boughten Bulletin didn't moralize much about iniquity at that time, nor was it throwing any conniption fits when the good Dr. Taylor was Mayor and Detective Burns was scattering the largess of political favor through the tenderloin. It was not until after Dr. Taylor returned to congenial obscurity that Jerome Bassity excited the virtuous indignation of Mr. Fremont Older, promoter of publicity for the cabal that is now trying to uplift the town; the same Older, who, according to William J. Biggy, acted as sponsor for certain enterprising citizens who wanted protection for a brothel. What amazing transformations are occurring in the development of our parochial comedie humaine! For the philosophical observer there is a world of entertainment in the farcical and pharisaical elements that predominate. But for the average citizen perhaps there is nothing but grim tragedy in San Francisco's plight as pictured by the uplifters.

Greater San Francisco

The "Greater San Francisco" project that has been taken up with considerable earnestness ought to receive hearty encouragement and evoke boundless enthusiasm. We are living in an age that is notable at once for a universal passion for big things and a childish love of illusion. It doesn't matter whether a thing be actually big provided that it appear to be so. The illusion of bigness is as grateful as the reality. From which circumstance we may account for the popularity of small men that cavort on stilts; for the effectiveness of preposterous pretension and for the impressiveness of ponderous platitudes. When a city attains metropolitan proportions along with prosperity and all the creature comforts, there is really no reason why its inhabitants should be eager to have it appear to be more populous than it is. There is no intrinsic merit in a crowd. Nevertheless in all large cities there is breathless interest in the census returns. Moreover it is a curious phenomenon that profitable prestige attaches to a city in proportion to its reputation and size. And hence the passion for expansion which has been given expression in ways extravagant that make the angels weep. Think of Los Angeles in its passion for population reaching out over the heads of a recalcitrant community and with indifference to this impediment in the middle distance assimilating a complaisant village in the dim perspective. Topographical considerations nor intermediate townships give the enterprising expansionists of Los Angeles pause. If they cannot divide the State they will embrace it. In their philosophy boundaries must be far-flung despite all hurdles. So if we would not dwindle into insignificance by comparison we must stretch across the rolling waters of the bay and make Goat Island the geographical center of the metropolis. But to expand toward the rising sun we must have the consent of the commuters of Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda. 'Tis said they are disinclined to the proposed political coalition. But we are not to be misled either by the noisy asseverations of selfish politicians or the stentorian protests of a little coterie of meticulous mortals who would guard their exquisite souls from contact with the unlovely things that abound in the metropolis. We are confident that when the question is submitted to a plebiscite it will be found that there is an accordance of sentiment on both sides of the bay. The chief objection to the proposal is that which is voiced by the superlatively good people of Oakland. They are in dread of contamination. But these over-righteous ones do not preponderate in the community across the bay. They are not the leading, most active spirits of the community. A very large number of the inhabitants of Oakland who do anything go away each morning and do it elsewhere. Nor is Oakland as some Oaklanders would have us believe a focus where the greatest number of good forces unite in their purest energy. Oakland is no better than it ought to be. Oakland is tolerant even of the intolerant. Oakland is the refuge of the oppressed. It is the town where bad chinamen go when cant and the police drive them out of San Francisco. Oakland has many of the accessories of joyousness that mark the true metropolitan spirit. Oakland is austere only in spots. A man may live in Oakland without being eternally addicted to mortuary musings and melancholy morals. On the whole Oakland is a live, energetic and very decent city. We can think of nothing that it is in need of except a more intimate relationship with San Francisco. The coalition proposed would be mutually beneficial.

inspiration of their zeal we have no patience with those cynical critics who occupy the seat of the scorner and prate about the futility of tinkering with the charter. Though we are by no means certain that the charter menders will see their fond expectations realized, we are aware that nothing is accomplished in this world without trying. "For forms of government let fools contest," says the poet. In this sentiment we acquiesce. We would not therefore encourage either the cynical critics or the carping ones, in the category of which we place the Examiner. This journal is not strictly in accord with Supervisor Murdock who has proposed a charter amendment to shorten the municipal ballot. Mr. Murdock believes that to the inordinate length of the ballot may justly be attributed many of the evils of our government. By reducing the number of inches, in Mr. Murdock's opinion, there will be less margin for the things we abhor. "A shorter ballot" is Mr. Murdock's shibboleth. Give us a shorter ballot and thus shall we acquire another palladium for our liberty. The problem, how to shorten the ballot, is one that the average citizen, in these progressive direct primary days made raucous by the clamors of candidates, would have some difficulty in solving. But Mr. Murdock having brought his intellectuals to bear on the perplexing subject the solution is easy. Extend the terms of supervisors to four years and elect half of them at a time, and presto! your ballot shortens perceptibly and the task of differentiating the sheep and goats is simplified. The theory of this new scheme is that the easier the task of voting be made, the more difficult it shall become for bad men to get into office. Now the Examiner, though it is in favor of a shorter ballot, is not altogether satisfied with the proposed amendment. The Examiner conceives it to be possible for bad men to get into office despite the shortness of the battot. And with this possibility in view the Examiner would reinforce the abbreviated ballot with mechanical facilities for reducing the term of a supervisor on provocation. If voters are to have voting made easier they should be willing to vote oftener. This is the Examiner's opinion on the subject. In other words if we lop off inches that make for confusion we should multiply political campaigns. The whole subject is one of absorbing interest, but the more we study it the more inclined we become to the conviction that for all purposes pertaining to government we should have automatic machinery, something as infallible as the new fangled telephone. If this can be secured by an amendment to the charter it will receive our unqualified endorsement.

The Sadness of the Moon

By Charles Baudelaire

(Translated by F. P. Sturm)

The Moon more indolently dreams tonight
Than a fair woman on her couch at rest,
Caressing, with a hand distraught and light,
Before she sleeps, the contour of her breast.

Upon her silken avalanche of down,
Dying she breathes a long and swooning sigh;
And watches the white visions past her flown,
Which rise like blossoms to the azure sky.

And when, at times, wrapped in her languor deep,
Earthward she lets a furtive tear-drop flow,
Some pious poet, enemy of sleep,

Takes in his hollow hand the tear of snow
Whence gleams of iris and of opal start,
And hides it from the Sun, deep in his heart.

Perspective Impressions

President Taft has been introduced to the frame-up.

Hetty Green has been dramatized in a play called "The Spendthrift." The title is enough to make Hetty laugh.

The prize-fight managers have had an attack of religion, and it doesn't seem to have done them any good.

The Direct Primary seems to have simplified things so far as the Democratic Party is concerned. It has bought about the substitution of a piece club for a convention, and Theodore Bell, the one and only candidate for Governor, is the result.

George the Fifth gives the impression that royalty in his opinion should consist not of vain pomp but of great virtues.

A nude of Mother Eve accompanied by a naked serpent has been donated to the Park Museum. Let us hope the fig leaf is large enough to avert protest.

From recent developments at Washington it seems clear enough that the main object of Secretary Ballinger's traducers is to besmirch the President. And it must be confessed that by the Roosevelt-Heney method of producing results they have succeeded in forcing the Chief Magistrate of the nation into a most humiliating position.

Ned McGowan's Narrative

(In the preceding chapters the hero of this serial story tells of the assassination of the Bulletin's first editor, of the organization of the Vigilantes, of their pursuit of him, and of his flight to Santa Barbara, where after many vicissitudes he was conducted to a place of temporary safety by Jack Power, a highwayman who figured in the romantic history of early California. In the sixth instalment he tells of the arrival of some of the Vigilantes at Santa Barbara and of the search that was made for him in vain.)

(Seventh Instalment)

My determination was to go as speedily as possible to the residence of Dr. Nicholas A. Den; I had learned from Mr. Hartnell that he had no sympathy with my persecutors, and I knew that if I could but get under his protection I had nothing to fear, at any rate, from treachery, and I believed that his knowledge of the country and its inhabitants, together with his high standing in the community, would enable me more easily to baffle my pursuers.

After leaving the Arroyo Honde, on the morning of the twenty-eighth, I struck out toward Santa Barbara, between which place and the Arroyo Dr. Den's place was situated. I did not go far, however, merely crossing the point of the hill where I had my hiding place, and coming to a small gulch filled with a thick growth of wild mustard, I halted by the side of a little stream which I found there, and lay concealed until night-fall. As soon as it was quite dark, I took to the sea-beach and walked to the southward about twelve miles, when I came to the ranch of Senor Ignatio Ortega, before mentioned as being between the Arroyo and the Doctor's residence. Here I got among some bushes, and slept soundly until day. Before it was quite light I again took to the sea-beach, and had good walking until I arrived at the Doctor's house. As I approached I saw no one but a few of the Doctor's people, mostly Indians. The family were not yet stirring.

My appearance seemed to cause them much astonishment. They eyed me very closely as I went boldly toward the house and inquired for Doctor Den. With difficulty they made me understand that the Doctor was absent from home, on a visit to Santa Inez. They also informed me that his lady, whom they called Donna Rosa, had not yet arisen. I sat down on the tongue of a wagon near the house, and keeping a good look-out, determined to wait until the family were moving. While I sat here I was very unpleasantly scrutinized by a tall, gray-haired, old Spaniard, who, I afterward learned, belonged to Monterey. I sat for about an hour and was becoming quite uneasy under the stare of the old man, when the door of the house opened, and a very gentle and amiable looking lady appeared. Her complexion was much fairer than that of the generality of California ladies, and she had a remarkably sweet expression of countenance. I at once decided in my mind that she was the wife of my friend, the Doctor. I addressed her in English, but discovered that she did not speak the language. I then tried French, and was equally unsuccessful. Directly, however, she said to me—"poco tiempo," and entering the house, she presently returned with a beautiful little child who proved to be her daughter. I took her to be about ten years of age, though I afterward ascertained that she was exactly twelve. There was something about the child which made her appear to my eyes like an Angel of Mercy, as she fearlessly approached me and said to me in silvery tones and in perfect English—"What is your will, Sir." I replied to her, my dear I am very hungry and want something to eat; and then if you can get it for me, I want a pen, ink and paper to write a note to Gen. Covarrubias.

As soon as I mentioned Covarrubias, Donna Rosa hastily beckoned me to come at once into the house. I saw at a glance, that she had heard of my persecution, and suspected who I was. She appeared to be in the greatest trepidation, and I at once entered the house and informed her who I was. Her sweet little daughter Kate, informed me in purer English than I could use, that the road had been lined for many days with armed horsemen, who were hunting me, and that her mother was fearful I would yet be captured unless I was very careful. Donna Rosa at once set her servants to work to prepare a breakfast for me, and informed me through her little interpreter, that her husband the Doctor had gone to the College farm at Santa Inez, to attend to some business for the Archbishop, and would not be at home for four or five days. She expressed her fears that it would be unsafe for me to remain there, because, although she could be responsible for her own people, she feared that the old Californian who had eyed me so, and who she informed me was from Monterey, would betray me. Her own family consisted of herself and daughter, and a very handsome young lady whom she introduced to me as her sister, Miss Hill. There were also some twenty to twenty-five farm and house servants about the place with their children. They were mostly Indians. Donna Rosa told me that there was nothing to be apprehended from any of these, but that the old Californian suspected who I was, and had just said to her when she had stepped out a moment before, that she had enough persons about the place to arrest me if she felt disposed to do so. I agreed with my kind hostess that I ought to leave as soon as possible, and determined, as soon as I had eaten breakfast, which was now ready, to do so.

At this time, I had not shaved for two months; my beard was perfectly white and untrimmed, my clothes in a very dilapidated condition, and altogether I must have presented a most wretched appearance. I suppose I looked with my long, white beard, at least sixty years old, and what with that and my torn and travel stained garments, the Vigilante description of me as regarded age and dirty personal appearance, was not so far out of the way after all. While I sat enjoying my excellent breakfast and hot coffee, Donna Rosa kept watching me, and giving expression to her sympathy, frequently murmuring to herself—"pauvre cito," and other words of her own language, expressive of her feeling for my misfortunes. Everything that could be done to accommodate me, was done by the kind lady. Although it is not, I believe, customary for the native Californians to eat meat at their breakfasts; still an abundance of it was cooked and placed upon the table for me. I observed that the servants seemed to wonder "what manner of man" I was, to be seated in that garb with ladies at the table, and treated with such respect. After breakfast I asked permission of Donna Rosa to give a piece of money to her daughter, little Kate; but she nobly replied that no money was taken in her house for food given to any one, and particularly to the unfortunate. I begged to be permitted to give the child a small piece, only to keep as a memento of the forlorn stranger, and after a great deal of hesitation, Donna Rosa merely to please me consented. Little Kate now brought me writing materials and I indited the following note to my friend Gen. Covarrubias:

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

"Tuesday morning, July 29, 1856.

To General Covarrubus,
Santa Barbara City.

My Dear General: Circumstances over which I had no control, forced me to again become a wanderer, 'houseless and helpless.' I am writing this from the Doctor's, and will endeavor to be in this vicinity next Sunday. Try to see me.

Your friend,
LE JUDGE."

Having given this in charge of my hostess, to be delivered to the General, by a sure hand, I again prepared to betake myself to the mountains. Donna Rosa provided me with an extra blanket, a bottle of water, a beef tongue and some bread, and then, bidding me God speed, saw me depart from her hospitable door. I at once bent my steps to the canyon back of the dwelling, but had not proceeded far when one of the servants, whom they called Santiago, thinking that I wanted to go to Santa Barbara, and had mistaken the road, ran after me to set me right. His mistress had seen no necessity of telling him who I was, and, although I of course knew where I was going, in order to avoid exciting his suspicion, I said to him "gracias," and came down into the main road and proceeded along it about a mile and a half, when I came to another canyon, and at once followed it up into the mountains.

The day was very warm, and my journey up the mountain extremely fatiguing. I penetrated into the thickets I should judge some four or five miles, frequently being obliged to cut my way through the chapparal with my knife. Toward dark I reached a point where I knew no horse or mule could ever come, and where I doubt whether any human being had ever been before, and feeling perfectly sure that no one would pursue me that far on foot, I resolved there to halt. After drinking all the water that remained in the bottle, I lay me down to sleep. So high was my elevation, that notwithstanding my blankets, I was for a long time too cold to sleep. At length the fatigues of the day overcame the coldness of the atmosphere, and I fell asleep and did not wake till morning.

As soon as I had risen, a desire for water reminded me that I had exhausted my supply of that necessary the evening before, and my first and only task for the day must be to travel until I found more. Accordingly I ate nothing, lest it should increase my thirst before I came to water, which might not be for hours, or even the whole day. There was an arroyo that came down from the mountains back of Dr. Den's house, from which his crops were irrigated. In my desire to avoid arousing the suspicions of the man who followed me from the house, I had foolishly wandered away from this stream, taking it for granted that, as heretofore, I should find no difficulty in getting plenty of water almost anywhere in the mountains. I commenced my search, and continued it for some hours without being able to find a drop or any signs that might lead me to dig for it. The fatigue of making my way through the chapparal,

The Physician at the Supper Table---V.

By the Sybarite

The Doctor was in his usual amiable mood; and he and his friend were indulging in frogs' legs a la poulette, apple fritters, dry toast spread with bloater paste, and a pint of well-mellowed Port sent him by an old navy friend, who had lately arrived from Lisbon.

"I have been greatly interested in hospitals for poor consumptives to which many physicians are so humanely giving much of their attention, Doctor."

"The wine you are tasting, although it has not 'been sent twice around the Cape, by my father, Sir,' will not suggest itself as a compound of Worcestershire sauce and treacle. This is something in which a proper age has developed its virtue, mellowed its crudity, and allowed its early acids to be transformed into the beneficent and palatable ethers which constitute the charm of a perfect wine. One of the highest compliments ever paid one of the finest and most healthful wines that ever flowed from the veins of the vine was that by a certain Pope who, having halted at a spot famous for its port wine, exclaimed, as he passed to his apartment in a rosy condition, at night, 'I excommunicate the whole world except red wine.' The world slept tranquilly, ignorant of its condition; and when his Holiness arose, refreshed, in the morning, he kindly took off the ban."

"As I was saying, the many movements toward the building and equipping of hospitals for poor—"

"Do you know, there is coming a time in our country and in England when the moderate consumption of wine will go a great way toward lessening intemperance and sales of fiery liquors? It should be the duty of physicians and lawmakers, and all educators, to encourage the use of pure wines and beers and to discourage the use of spirits except as medicine or possibly a really necessary stimulus on some occasions. So far back as we can go there was winemaking, and generally temperance among the common people, both Hebrews and Egyptians. The whole process of wine making is delineated in Egyptian pictures. We see the vines very carefully trained in bowers formed by columns and rafters; the vineyards were walled in and frequently supplied with a reservoir of water, together with a building which contained the wine press. The grapes when gathered were put into deep wicker baskets, and conveyed on the heads and shoulders of men to the press, where the wine was squeezed out of a bag by means of two poles turned in contrary directions, an earthen pan receiving the juice. The Egyptians also had large presses in which they trod the fruit with their naked feet, supporting themselves by ropes suspended from the roof. The grape juice having fermented, it was put into earthen jars resembling the Roman amphorae, which were closed with a lid covered with pitch, clay, mortar, or gypsum, and sealed, after which they were moved to the storehouse and there placed upright. The Egyptians had a habit, which afterward became general in Italy and Greece, and still obtains in the islands of the archipelago, of putting a certain quantity of resin, or bitumen, at the bottom of the jar before pouring in the wine. This was supposed to preserve it, but it was also added to give an acceptable flavor. As early as the fourth dynasty (which, according to the reckoning of Mariette, should be referred to upward of 6,000 years ago), the Egyptians are known to have had four kinds of wine. The soil which lay beyond the reach of the alluvial deposits suited the vine, and extensive remains of vineyards near the Qasr Karoom show whence the ancient Egyptians obtained their grapes. Pliny cites the Sebennytic wine as one of the choice Egyptian crus, and says that it was made of three different sorts of grapes. Athenaeus says that the Mareotic grape was remarkable for its sweetness, and he describes the wine made from it as white, the quality excellent, and sweet and light, with a fragrant bouquet. It was by no means astringent, nor did it affect the head. He added, however, that it was inferior to the Teniotic, as the latter's color was pale and even white, and there was such a degree of richness in the wine that when mixed with water it became diluted only gradually, much in the same way as Attic honey does when a liquid is poured into it. Besides the agreeable flavor of the Teniotic its fragrance was so delightful as to render it perfectly aromatic, and it had the property of being slightly astringent. Nevertheless, in Egypt wine was the drink of the wealthy or well-to-do. The poorer people had a beer which can be traced as far back as the fourth dynasty, and, according to Diodorus, was scarcely inferior to the juice of the grape. This beer was made from barley, but hops being unknown, it was flavored with lupins and other vegetable substances. Egyptians also had palm wine, and another wine called baga, which was made from dates or figs; they likewise made fermented beverages from pomegranates and other fruits and from herbs, such as rue, helebore, and absinthe, which apparently answered the purpose of our modern bitters.

"The Assyrian bas-reliefs bear witness to the prevalence of wine drinking among the ancient Assyrians. The well-known Assyriologist, W. St. Chad Boscawen, has furnished a list of ten wines found engraved upon a terra-cotta tablet from the palace of Assur Banipal, the Sardanapalus of the Greeks. Wines constantly figure in the Assyrian inscriptions among the booty carried off from conquered countries or among the products received as tribute. Nor were the Assyrians contented with the fermented juice of the grape; they, too, had palm wine, date wine, and beer, as the Egyptians had. There is likewise evidence of a knowledge of fermented liquors on the Hittite rock carvings. That wine, and even the abuse of it, were well known to the Hebrews is clear from their sacred writings. Only two varieties, however, are specified, viz.: The wine of Helbon, a fat, luscious, syrup-like liquor which was an article of merchandise at Damascus, and the wine of Lebanon which was celebrated for its bouquet. That the Hebrews mixed water with their wine may be inferred from two verses in Proverbs: 'She hath mingled her wine'; 'Drink of the wine that I have mingled.' Their grapes used to be trodden in the press, and the juice after fermentation was put into bottles or wine skins."

"You must have given this subject a good deal of earnest investigation, Doctor."

"I am glad to see you interested in humane movements. I could have told you would have been. And I hope some of the over-rich that we have among us will help out from the abundance of their means. Those who are so successful as to turn everything into money owe something to those less fortunate. Tuberculosis has taken away more lives than any other scourge. It has the whole world for its field and the records of its ravages are set up in ghastly figures in every country where man has had a footing.

"This dreadful disorder, which sweeps away nearly four million of the earth's inhabitants yearly, has puzzled the brains of medical men ever since the first professor of the art of healing brewed his first decoction of herbs or chanted his first incantation, or did something else to show that he had gone into the business of curing people's ailments. The first doctor, beyond doubt, had to face a case of consumption; and, beyond the shadow of a doubt, his patient died of the disease. Ever since that time the original physician's successors have been battling with the same disease, and the difficulty they have met in carrying on the combat is shown clearly by the popular idea that consumption is incurable.

"So far as anybody can discover, nowadays, consumption has existed in all ages and in all countries. As far back as the records of civilized peoples can be traced, they tell of the existence of the disease and of its serious character. In coast lands and plateaus, valleys and hillsides, marshes and mountains, the bacillus has been carrying off its thousands ever since mankind has been on earth. German statisticians have figured it out that in any population on the average the proportion of deaths by consumption is to the deaths by all other diseases as 1 is to 7. My own impression is that this ratio is slightly high.

"Here are some figures showing what the death rate from consumption has been in some of the principal cities of the world: From 1877 to 1880 all the German cities having over 15,000 inhabitants showed yearly 3.6 deaths from consumption for every thousand of population. From 1869 to 1882 Berlin's rate was 3.8 per thousand per annum. Hamburg's record was 3.4. In Frankfort-on-the-Main the fatal cases each year were 3.5 for every thousand inhabitants. From 1865 to 1874 the rate in Vienna was very high, reaching no less a percentage than 7.7.

"London does not make so poor a showing as might be expected from a city having a bad climate. From 1848 to 1855 its rate for consumption was 3.7. In the ten years from 1859 to 1869, however, the rate went down to 3.2. Edinburgh's record for four years about 1860 was 3 fatal cases for each 1,000 inhabitants. In all four years up to and including 1855 Belgium made a showing of 3.5. For the Netherlands from 1869 to 1874 the figure was 2.46. Switzerland, from 1865 to 1869, showed 1.86. In Berne the rate was far higher than this, reaching 3.9. Among the cities of Europe the rate was lowest in Geneva, where it was 2.2. The country districts brought down the average for the Confederation. In Paris, from 1845 to 1851, the showing was 4.1; from 1872 to 1877 it was 4.2. Italian records give variations from 3.73 to 4.04. The rate in Rome is given as 3.52.

"In Rio Janeiro there is a rate which is rather surprising to persons who have looked upon that town as enjoying a very warm climate. The city, according to the statisticians, loses five of each thousand of its residents each year through the ravages of consumption. Pernambuco makes even a more unfavorable record, for there the figures run to 5.2. The rate for Australia is given at 2.22.

"A few statistics of American cities convey the acceptable fact that if consumption cannot be totally stopped it can be greatly reduced, which I attribute to our generally better sanitation, better climate, and many other better conditions than exist in other parts of the world, Europe included. In New York from 1805 to 1837 the rate was 5.3. By 1870 it was down to 4.1. Albany in that year showed 2.9, and Buffalo 1.4. Between 1807 and 1840 the rate in Philadelphia was 5.6. In 1870 it stood at the comparatively low figure of 3.1. Chicago in the same year was returned at 1.6, Richmond (Va.) at 3.9, and St. Louis at 1.7. In Charleston (S. C.) the rate for the whites was 3.07, and for the blacks 4. The rate in Memphis was 2.82, and in New Orleans 3.9. I am sorry that I have no noteworthy statistics of San Francisco or Southern California; and, yet, they could not be satisfactory, as the larger number of deaths from consumption in California are of persons who come here in advanced stages of the disease.

"Chauveau of Paris, in 1890, made three experiments to show the identity of—"

PORTLAND SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES

Keeping the City Back

What Organized Labor Has Done to the Manufacturing and Building Business of San Francisco with a Few Remarks on Conditions by Mr. Henry T. Scott

By Edward F. O'Day

Is San Francisco getting her share of the prosperity of the Pacific Coast? Is her industrial progress keeping pace with the industrial progress of Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle and Tacoma? Is the volume of manufacturing and building business here as great as it ought to be? In a word, is this city advancing stride for stride with the big cities to the north and south of her?

These are serious questions, questions which must be carefully considered if San Francisco is to maintain her supremacy as the metropolis of the Pacific Coast. They are questions, however, which the student of conditions cannot answer in the affirmative at the present time.

While pessimism should not be encouraged as a state of mind conducive to the wise study of industrial conditions it must be admitted that many local men of big affairs have fallen into this gloomy habit of thought when pondering the status of this city. It is difficult for the local manufacturer to cultivate an optimistic outlook when he sees business which used to be done in this city and which by all industrial rules, should continue to be done here, diverted to, let us say, Los Angeles. It is equally difficult for the land owner to regard the situation with favor when he finds that the obstacles to improving his property are so forbidding that he does not feel called upon to overcome them. These are the difficulties which confront the big men of San Francisco at the present time. There is a great deal of manufacturing in San Francisco, but the manufacturers will tell you that there is not nearly as much in proportion to population and the opportunities for work as there used to be. The rehabilitation of the city is proceeding, but those in touch with building operations assert that it is not going forward as rapidly as it should. The buildings which are being erected are going up under the stress of absolute necessity, in spite of adverse conditions, not because conditions are favorable.

The cause is not far to seek. Labor conditions are at the root of the matter. The most formidable bill which the manufacturer or the builder has to meet is his bill for labor and the price of labor is so prohibitive in San Francisco that the local manufacturer cannot compete for the work with the manufacturers in other cities, while the land owner is delaying all but the most necessary improvement of his property until such time as labor conditions shall improve.

Let us take a specific instance. The great boom in the Bakersfield oil fields has resulted in big orders for machinery, for oil tanks and all the other apparatus of this important industry. According to the rules of trade these manufacturing orders should be filled in San Francisco. In former years they were filled in San Francisco, but not today. Local manufacturers have found it impossible to compete against Los Angeles for this business and the result is that the equipment for the Bakersfield oil fields is being manufactured in Los Angeles. There is no difference in the cost of iron; it can be laid down in San Francisco just as cheaply as in Los Angeles. But there is a difference of from twenty to twenty-five per cent in the cost of manufacturing and the difference is all in favor of the southern city. The San Francisco laborer demands higher wages and shorter hours than the Los Angeles laborer and the consequence is that the San Francisco manufacturer cannot compete with the Los Angeles manufacturer. So the Los Angeles laborer is busy while the San Francisco laborer is idle.

What is true of the manufacturing business is equally true of the building business. In Los Angeles the building business is booming; it is booming in Portland and Seattle. In San Francisco it is limited to the absolute needs of our natural expansion and rehabilitation.

The leaders of organized labor are accustomed to make the boast that this is the most thoroughly organized city in the country. There is no doubt that they are right. The city is so thoroughly organized that its labor organizations have become a menace which capital is unwilling to face. When it is a question of manufacturing, capital goes to other convenient cities less efficiently organized; when it is a question of building, the blue prints are laid away for a more favorable time. It stands to reason that if better returns on investment can be obtained in Los Angeles or Portland than in San Francisco, capital will make its investments in one of those two cities. Being absolutely devoid of sentiment capital is guided hither and thither merely by the laws of trade and at the present time the application of the laws of trade, thanks to the short-sighted policy of the labor unions, is working to the detriment of San Francisco.

Some of these reflections, not pleasant for a San Franciscan to make, came to me as the result of a talk with Mr. Henry T. Scott, now the president of the Pacific Telephone Company, formerly one of the largest employers in this city as president of the Union Iron Works. Mr. Scott is familiar with local conditions—it is his business to be so—and he is frank in the expression of his opinions.

"I would not think of putting up a building in San Francisco at the present time," said Mr. Scott. "Labor conditions are such that I consider it out of the question to do so. The labor unions are masters of the situation. The contractor is no longer independent. He must consult the labor leaders at every turn and must do as they say."

Mr. Scott pointed to the telephone on his desk.

"Ninety-five per cent of the cost of that," he said, "was for the labor expended in putting it together. It is so in nearly everything and the prices which labor asks are prohibitive. San Francisco is being held back by labor. It is not making the progress in building which other cities are making. Los Angeles, Portland, Tacoma, Seattle are booming. I was in Portland recently and was surprised by the volume of building there. These cities have not our labor problem. The unions are not in control of the situation. What is the result? In Portland a man can put up a building and get a return of seven per cent on his investment. I should say that a man would get the same return on an investment in Los Angeles. In San Francisco you cannot get a return of more than four per cent—four and one-half at the outside. That is why I would not think of building in San Francisco at the present time.

"The labor unions in this city have bitten off their nose to spite their face. When I left the Union Iron Works there were six thousand men employed there. That was the highwater mark but we frequently employed five thousand—a pay roll of about $250,000 a month. Estimating five persons to a family we were supporting 25,000 residents of this city. Suppose there are one thousand men employed there now—that means that the iron works is supporting 5,000 residents. That makes quite a difference. There has been no government work done there in the last six or seven years. It costs more to do work there than it used to. Instead of working nine or ten hours, the men work eight and demand the same pay. It is no wonder that conditions have changed.

"The labor conditions of this city are the growth of many years. If they continue as they are at present the city cannot advance as it should. While the other cities on the coast are going forward steadily this city is being retarded. When will there be a change?—" Mr. Scott made a gesture eloquent of uncertainty.

The same uncertainty pervades the whole city. Nobody can say when the labor unions will be relegated to their proper place. Nobody knows just how the economic change so necessary is to be brought about. There are no signs of grace in the camp of organized labor. Only a few days ago the electrical workers employed by the city sought to force through the Labor Council a higher wage scale. These electrical workers are already receiving from the city more than the usual wages of their craft, but they are not satisfied. It became necessary for the more conservative leaders of the Labor Council to take the floor in opposition to their exorbitant demands.

Some day the city will awake to a full realization of the presumption of the lording labor unions. It is full time already. Local shipping firms do not build their steamers here; they contract for them in the East and bring them around the Horn. But Los Angeles does quite a thriving ship-building business, despite our sneers at her toy harbor. It is the same in many other industries. Work which should be done here is done elsewhere because it can be done more cheaply and with less annoyance elsewhere. The city is in the grip of organized labor and its vitality is being lowered all the time. When will that grip be relaxed?

An Earthquake Prediction Fulfilled

Gertrude Atherton is too busy making literature to be considered a seismic expert, yet she has to her credit an achievement which might well excite the envy of an earthquake specialist—she predicted accurately the recent temblor in Los Angeles. Just after the earthquake in 1906 Mrs. Atherton predicted that there would be a big one in Southern California four years later. Four years have past and the earthquake has shaken Los Angeles out of its usual complacency. I asked Mrs. Atherton on what she based her prediction and her reply was exceedingly interesting. "In 1808," she said, "there was a tremendous earthquake in San Francisco, the first California earthquake of which we have any historical knowledge. Four years later came the earthquake in Southern California which razed the Missions and shook the earth for four months. The next great earthquake in this part—the middle and north—was in 1868. Four years later, in 1872, were the earthquakes that moved Mount Whitney twenty feet off its eastern base and caused the earth to drop along the line of a fault in the Owens River country some forty miles. I am interested in observing whether there is anything like rotation in our California earthquakes, whether, perhaps, the strain in the fault causes it to give way four years later in the south than in the north. At all events I wouldn't care to go down there this year."

Comment on Our Monte Carlo

I was talking the other day to an Easterner who likes to hear the ivory ball rattling around a roulette wheel and is not averse from a little venture in faro or craps. He had just returned from an all-night session at the Northern, the gambling resort just over the boundary line of San Mateo County, and he criticised it from the standpoint of an expert. He found the glamor which adds so much to the zest of gambling absolutely lacking and thought the crowd that gained admission rather mixed. That the games were run on the square he made no doubt and had nothing but admiration for the courtesy and businesslike expertness of the gamekeepers. For the automobile service which whisks the devotees of chance down there and back free of charge he had words of praise. But in one particular he found the comparison of the Northern with the gambling places of New York working to the disadvantage of our Monte Carlo. "I noted that a man who was playing heavily at a faro table and who, I am told, is a good patron of the place, asked one of the proprietors who was sitting near him if he had a cigar. The proprietor searched his pocket and replied that he had not. They do things better in Thirty-third street. No gamester would have to ask for a cigar there and he would not leave the place, whether winner or loser, until he had been pressed to partake of an exquisite supper and a split of wine. Still the Northern people are unable to operate on a large scale and many allowances must be made. I should say that the play is fairly heavy there, though by no means hair-raising. Certainly they give you a run for your money and that is what every gambler wants. But the glamor that we gamblers love is altogether absent."

Pity the Hayes Brothers

Charles W. Davison has been re-elected Mayor of San Jose, the Hayes brothers to the contrary notwithstanding. Two years ago the Hayes brothers supported Davison, and he received a majority of eight hundred votes. This year the Hayes brothers opposed Davison, and through the medium of their two daily papers did all in their power to persuade the people of the Santa Clara Valley that it was to their interest to elect a gentleman by the name of Curtis; yet the people gave Davison a majority of thirteen hundred. Naturally the Hayes brothers are disgruntled and disgusted. They feel that the cause of reform has received a severe blow in the Garden City. They believe that the Powers of Evil are conspiring against them. They have tears and they are shedding them. Their distress is made acutely poignant because they know not where to look for condolence or sympathy. For though they have alienated themselves from the machine they have not been able to win the confidence of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League. For the present they are the Ishmaelities of politics. The only thing that reformers and practical politicians have been able to agree upon of late is that there is justification for unrestrained mirth in the San Jose election. They consider it a joke of the first magnitude that Davison when opposed by the Hayes brothers received five hundred more votes than when he was supported by them.

Curry Gets the Truth

It is said that the Hayes brothers lost confidence in Mayor Davison as soon as they found out that he considered himself able to perform his official duties without their assistance. Mayor Davison is not a politician of the commonplace type. He has no taste for the perplexing maze of the path of dissimulation. His frankness alienated the Hayes brothers. An exhibition of this frankness was given last week when Charley Curry went to San Jose to interest Davison in the gubernatorial campaign. The average politician might have found the situation somewhat embarrassing, but Davison at the risk of losing the support of Curry's friends in San Jose made no effort to dissemble his sentiments. "My friends are for Anderson," said Davison, "and so am I."

The Simple Tastes of a King

Dear Spectator: As I knew George the Fifth when he was at Oxford and also when he was in the navy I am able to tell you a few things about him that may prove of interest. He is a man of strong democratic sympathies, and therefore he ought to be regarded as the right man for the present crisis. His intimate friends are men that do things. He has no love for the new nobility of wealth that goes in for parade and show. He has no closer friend than Lord Strathcona who began life as Donald Smith, a trapper for the Hudson Bay company in Canada. Another of his friends is Lord Mount Stephen who was identified with the building of the great Canadian Pacific railway system. That he is a man of tact was proved by his conduct when the South African generals visited London after the war. King Edward received them politely but coldly. The situation was becoming embarrassing when Prince George took a hand and won the visitors by his amiability. He displayed an intimate knowledge of all that had happened in South Africa from the time that the first white settlement was made there and of all the problems that had arisen. In the judgment of British statesmen it was Prince George that reconciled the Boers to their defeat and caused their loyal acceptance of British rule. While the king is likely to surround himself with an aristocracy of intellect the probability is that court life will lose much of the brilliance for which it has been distinguished since the death of Queen Victoria. King George hates functions. He visits no clubs. He cares little for the opera. As Prince of Wales he spent his evenings at home. He read by the fire, with his wife at his side doing her knitting.

A Rare Work by Mark Twain

There is a bibliophile in this city whose name I will not mention lest his friends pester him, who possesses the rarest volume in the works of the late Mark Twain. It is only a small pamphlet and it does not bear the name of Mark Twain on the title page, for it was privately printed and a very limited number of copies made before the type was distributed. Very few know of its existence, fewer still have ever seen it. Collectors would give a small fortune for it, but I am sure that they will never get possession of the copy in the hands of my friend. So closely does he guard it that I have not been permitted to inspect it; no doubt never will be permitted. But my friend has described and explained it to me. Should any doubt as to the authenticity of this particular pamphlet ever arise, the copy I refer to would be the only one by which the doubt could be dissipated. It is the only copy which contains a presentation autograph from Mark Twain and on a fly leaf at the end is a bibliographical note outlining the reason which prompted the writing of the little work. This explanation is signed by Samuel M. Clemens.

What It Is About

This pamphlet was not printed by Mark Twain. It was printed from his manuscript by an army officer stationed at the time at West Point. A special font of antique type was cut for the purpose and the work was done at the national military academy. The composition is a dialogue of a most curious character. The talkers are Queen Elizabeth, Shakespeare, Sir Walter Raleigh, a couple of dowager duchesses and a young noble woman and the scene is laid before a roaring fire in the great hall of an old English castle. The conversation is of a most intimate description, couched indeed in the frank language that distinguished the Elizabethan period. Several subjects not now considered polite are roundly argued, much as they would have been argued at the Mermaid or at Kenilworth. That is the point of the whole thing. Mark Twain wrote the dialogue to show his mastery of the language, the ideas and the mental processes of the men and women of that spacious time. It is far from being a meretricious performance; it is a curious tour de force of scholarship, a scholarship which few people seem to know that Mark Twain possessed. The man who visualized the times of Joan of Arc, delving deep into the lore of remote antiquity, also mastered the Elizabethan age after a fashion that is supposed to be confined to a few dryasdust professors. In this pamphlet he wrote as Shakespeare and Queen Elizabeth and the rest undoubtedly talked; hence the work is a marvel of reconstruction. Because he had to touch on topics that are now outlawed from literature or sacrifice that fidelity for which he was straining, Mark Twain never intended that this work should reach the public and doubtless it never will.

Twain's literary career. It is nothing of the kind. What Balzac did for the whole world in reproducing the difficult French of Louis XI's age in the Droll Stories, Mark Twain did for a few scholars capable of appreciating his tour de force in reproducing the English of Elizabeth's reign. For those who are not convinced I will quote here a few lines from an early chapter in "The Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court." These lines contain the answer to any objection which might be raised on the score of the pamphlet of which I have spoken; and I would not be surprised if they also contain the germ of its idea. (It was written, I think, somewhere about the same time.) Mark Twain is speaking of the conversation at the Round Table: "Many of the terms used in the most matter of fact way by this great assemblage of the first ladies and gentlemen in the land would have made a Comanche blush. Indelicacy is too mild a term to convey the idea. However I had read 'Tom Jones' and 'Roderick Random' and other books of that kind, and knew that the highest and first ladies and gentlemen in England had remained little or no cleaner in their talk, and in the morals and conduct which such talk implies, clear up to one hundred years ago; in fact clear into our own nineteenth century—in which century, broadly speaking, the earliest samples of the real lady and the real gentleman discoverable in English history, or in European history, for that matter—may be said to have made their appearance. Suppose Sir Walter, instead of putting the conversation into the mouths of his characters, had allowed the characters to speak for themselves? We should have had talk from Rebecca and Ivanhoe and the soft lady Rowena which would embarrass a tramp in our day. However, to the unconsciously indelicate all things are delicate."

"Senator, how is the baby at your house?"
"Taking too active a part in the family affairs for a new member."

The Great Conspiracy

The methods employed by the men engaged in besmirching the character of Secretary Ballinger savor very much of those for which our own darling Graft Prosecution was distinguished. This is what might have been expected, for one of the leading spirits behind the Ballinger conspiracy is Norman Hapgood of Collier's Weekly, a journal that has been utilized by the publicity bureau of the Spreckels-Phelan cabal for almost any kind of dirty work essential to the promotion of its interests. Hapgood has been in touch with some of the handy men of that cabal ever since the conspiracy against Ballinger was organized, and therefore it is not surprising that the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation should have been characterized in the past week by some very curious developments.

A Universal Practice

These developments are in many ways reminiscent of the graft prosecution. For example a great hullabaloo has been made about matters of not the slightest importance—the ante-dating of a letter, the employment by the President of a memorandum made by a subordinate. Now there is nothing morally or essentally wrong in the ante-dating of a letter. There are circumstances as in this case that justify the practice. Nor is there anything essentially wrong in the use by an Executive officer of data furnished by a subordinate so long as he knows either that it is accurate or that the subordinate is trustworthy. Were this practice prohibited no executive officer having multifarious duties would be able to perform them. It is even in accordance with universal practice for executive officers to utilize wholly as their own productions documents drawn by their subordinates. This is not in the nature of deception since it is understood that the practice is unavoidable either in affairs of State or affairs of business. Everybody in England knows that it is customary for a Minister to write the official pronunciamentos of the Crown, but nobody regards the practice as discreditable to the Sovereign. Private secretaries in all departments of State in every State in Europe as well as in this country are writing letters for executive officers every day, and all the world is aware of the fact. But President Taft, because he used some data supplied by a subordinate, data which he had previously discussed, about which he was familiar and of which a memorandum was made merely to refresh his memory, is called upon for explanation as though the circumstance justified the gravest suspicions.

A Typical Frame-Up

The motive of the demand is obvious enough. It is akin to the motive that prompted many of the sensational frame-ups during the graft prosecution. The object is to create the impression that something underhanded has been going on. In the present case the object of the conspirators was facilitated by the apparent reluctance of the investigating committee and of the Administration itself to let the facts come out. This reluctance was quite natural. The facts had no bearing on the issue, and at the same time it was clear that the purpose of the conspirators was to avail themselves of a means to create misapprehension in the public mind. In trying to thwart them the Administration blundered. It put water on the enemy's wheel. But since the springing of the sensation other facts have been coming out, facts that shed a white light on the character of that ridiculous statesman of the Tennis Cabinet, the Hon. James A. Garfield, who will never forgive President Taft for failing to appreciate his amazing abilities. It appears that Garfield was instrumental in seducing Frederick Kerby, the unprincipled wretch who violated the confidence of his employers, and who confesses that the conspirators have promised him a position with a newspaper association. How Garfield and his associates can reconcile their virtuous pretensions with the enormity of Kerby's conduct for which they are responsible it is not easy to perceive.

European Comment on Roosevelt

The leading European journals agree that Mr. Roosevelt has a very large stock of platitudes. Some of them marvel at the almost childish simplicity with which he ladles them out. Does he really think that he is saying something new? is the question which is evidently on the tip of many a critic's pen. The London Times says that his platitudes are older than Christianity, and "Justice," a London weekly, says that he deals them out with "customary bounce." Speaking of the Sorbonne speech "Justice" says that the elite of the French literary and social world were undoubtedly glad it was delivered in English, as it would have disgraced an average Parisian. "Humanite," a French journal, refers to him as Tartarinvelt and "Justice" says "Roosevelt would certainly make Daudet's interesting hero—the famous Tartarin of Tarascon—green with envy were he able to appreciate the braggadocio and God-damned cheek as they call it in the States of this latter-day hunter in Africa."

The Passing of Finney

The wit of the wee sma' hours is no more. Finney the Hackman, legitimate successor of Tony Weller, has laid down the ribbons forever. He did that some time before his death, to adventure in the up-to-date field of the automobile, but it is as a hack driver that he will be remembered. Finney's hack was a store house of piquant memories. If its cushions could tell of those that had pressed them what tales out of school there would be! Or if Finney could have been induced to gossip of the gay parties of gilded men and silken women he carried between midnight and dawn, what scandals for the sweet tooth of chatter! But Finney was as dumb on these subjects as the horses he drove, the soul of discretion, the incorruptible chancellor of compromising secrets. They are telling over Finney's bon mots in the tenderloin these days and it is too bad that the best of them cannot be chronicled here. But they smack too strongly of the atmosphere in which he had his being. They must circulate subrosily like the best of Abe Lincoln's yarns.

The Paradox of Hard Times

I was walking along Post street a few days ago from Montgomery to Union Square. That section of Post street is lined with some of the handsomest shops in the world. Not Paris, not London, not Berlin can boast handsomer display windows than those which adorn our fashionable shopping district. I am convinced of this because far-traveled men of impartial judgment have frequently assured me of it. But this is not what I started out to say. As I sauntered leisurely along Post street it so happened that I met a number of managers of big retail shops. Why I should run into half a dozen of them in one stroll I do not know but so it happened and I was impressed by a curious circumstance. They all complained that times were hard, that the women were not buying heavily and that money was very difficult of collection. Mind you, these were men connected with big establishments that dispense as many necessaries as luxuries. Yet they all had the same story of hard times. This was sufficiently striking, but when I dropped into Shreve's the paradox of the situation was forcibly impressed upon my mind. As you know there are more clerks to the floor space in Shreve's than in any other shop in town. Yet every clerk in the big jewelry shop was occupied. In every department men and women were making purchases of a costly description. Now why is it that people are able to buy jewelry when they do not feel that they can afford to patronize shops where necessary articles are for sale? Why should a palace of luxuries like Shreve's be doing a thriving business when other merchants are complaining of the financial stringency? I pondered this problem the rest of the way to Union Square, but I had to give it up in despair. Probably Oedipus could unriddle it but it is too much for me. Surely San Francisco is a topsy-turvy town. Evidently it can do without the necessaries of life but refuses to dispense with the luxuries. When it is pinched for car fare it strains its credit to buy a limousine. When it needs a pair of shoes it compromises on a diamond garter. Where will the extravagance of Miss San Francisco finally land her? Again I invoke the aid of Oedipus, the solver of conundrums, for I must confess that I am stumped.

The Poems of a Suicide

I have been reading a volume of poems rich in promise, a volume that marks the debut of a poet; but, alas! the promise is never to be fulfilled. The debut is posthumous, the poet wearied of life before she learned the use of it. The book of poems is a tribute to her memory from one by whom she is held in affectionate remembrance. Nora May French, the poet whose poems are thus presented to us, was a young woman of the highest artistic temperament, who gave expression to her moods and feelings in exquisite verse whenever the impulse seized her, but with no purpose other than that of linking words to make color and melody. In this she was eminently successful. She pleased herself and her friends, and that was all she cared to do. One day at Carmel where she mingled with friends of congenial taste, yielding to the pressure of despondency she ended her life. And now one may read her poems and find therein vivid delineations of a discontented, hopeless spirit. Melancholy is the habitual mood, the pervading emotion. But over all is an esthetic charm and through the poems run many dainty and delicate conceptions, as for example in the following lines:

As down I bent with eager lips
The yellow tent, the little moon
  I found within my twilight pool.

The fringing trees, the floating moon,
  The bubble tent—I passed them by,
And sipped a tiny, shattered star,
  Deep drinking from that mirrored sky.

The poems are marked by sincerity, spontaneity and by occasional buoyant chords, as in the sonnet of The Rose written for Mr. Porter Garnett on the occasion of his marriage:

Ay, pluck a jonquil when the May's a-wing!
  Or please you with a rose upon the breast,
A sweeter violet chosen from the rest,
To match your mood with blue caprice of spring—
Leave windy vines a tendril less to swing.
  Why, what's a flower? A day's delight at best,
A perfume loved, a faded petal pressed,
A whimsey for an hour's remembering.

But wondrous careful must he draw the rose
  From jealous earth, who seeks to set anew
Deep root, young leafage, with a gardener's art—
To plant her queen of all his garden close,
And make his varying fancy wind and dew,
  Cloud, rain, and sunshine for one woman's heart.

The commonplaces of poetry are not here. This is the poetry that never expounds a sentiment but always suggests a delicate shade of feeling. If through these disconnected poems one may find that the dominant note is that of a heart drowsy with the abiding sorrow which knows no cure, one must also be impressed with the sweetness of them, with their quiet beauty. If they reveal a distempered brooding, they are also full of an unaffected joy in field and flower, of a keen sensitiveness to the delights of nature, of expressions that haunt the mind such as "a silver space between two rains" as descriptive of the lulling storm; when "the world is drained of color." To Henry Anderson Lafler we are indebted for this collection of poems and for a very artistic specimen of bookmanship.

The Story of a Masterpiece

At several concerts recently I have had the pleasure of hearing Nat Landsberger, than whom we have no greater violinist, render a composition by Dvorak called "Humoreske." It is a piece of most delicious fantasy, bubbling with humor, full of sentiment, almost sugary at times in its sweetness, but withal so beautiful that to hear it once is to desire to hear it again and again. I asked Landsberger about this composition a few days ago and found that there was an interesting story connected with it. "Dvorak wrote the 'Humoreske' for the piano," he told me, "but for years no one paid the least attention to it. In making arrangements for the violin Fritz Kreisler came across it, adapted it for the violin, called on the composer and played it for him. Dvorak was much pleased and gave the violinist permission to use it. Not long afterwards Kreisler played it in London where it made a sensation. A publisher offered him twenty-five dollars for permission to print it, but Kreisler did not wish to sell it. Copyists were sent to his next recital who roughly took down his version. It was printed and in a few weeks forty thousand copies of it were sold. That was only the beginning of the avalanche of sales. A single store in New York, I am told, is now selling over four hundred copies a week. But neither Dvorak nor Kreisler ever made a cent out of it."

A Professor on Sanscrit Poetry

Professor Arthur William Ryder, the Sanscrit teacher at the University of California, is to be congratulated on his recently published volume of translations from Sanscrit poetry. Any work which brings the writers of the oldest Aryan language to the attention of the students of today is sure of a welcome, particularly when the work is as well done as in this instance. I cannot say whether Professor Ryder has preserved the spirit of the poetry of Bhartrihari, because my early education was shamefully neglected in the matter of Sanscrit, but it is to be supposed that the professor, a scholar in his chosen field, has done his work well. Two of Professor Ryder's statements, however, cannot but surprise his readers. One is to the effect that the old Indian literature is much more "beautifully clean" than the Greek. Having always regarded Greek poetry as being "beautifully clean" in an almost superlative degree I am taken aback at the professor's implied depreciation. In a newspaper interview Professor Ryder also stated that Bhartrihari "puts it all over" the poets of all other languages in discoursing of love. He mentions particularly Catullus and Heine as poets whom he considers inferior to the King of Ujjain. Again I am taken aback. I am surprised to hear a university professor speaking of one poet "putting it all over" another poet. 'Tis not the language of polite criticism. But more than that I am astonished at the statement. Is it possible that this Bhartrihari is greater than Catullus and Heine? Why then is he not better known? Much of course is excusable in an enthusiast, even an enthusiast who compares a "beautifully clean" Indian poet-king to one of the most erotic of the Romans; but his very enthusiasm raises doubts as to whether the professor is sufficiently catholic in his taste to appreciate Heine, Catullus and his pet Bhartrihari in equal measure.

King Edward's Recovery

One recalls with interest now the world's anxiety for King Edward's health, eight years ago, when he had typhoid fever. It is not generally known that the King attributed his rapid recovery then to his "bottle of Bass." His request for it while still ill marked the turning point in his case; and his daily bottle of Bass thereafter rapidly restored his strength, so his physicians said. In these days of violent opposition to malt and vinous beverages it is interesting to recall how much good health was given the King by that pure mild tonic, the familiar old "bottle of Bass."

Our Virtuous Society

If the swish of the tail of Halley's comet had fanned out life on our little planet, it would not have found society unprepared for the end. That at least is the opinion of several society ladies whom I have interviewed on this delicate subject. These atuhorities inform me that there is very little sin in the smart set. They will own up to a few minor peccadilloes, pale anemic transgressions of the decalogue, on the part of certain other society women whom they frankly dislike, but they insist that all our real exclusives cultivate a high moral tone. One of them pointed out that everybody had been to church at least four times within the past month and asked me if I did not think that a sign of active virtue. I was inclined to agree at first, but further questioning brought out the fact that all of the four religious ceremonies were weddings. Knowing that nobody—except the groom— ever prays at a wedding I am doubtful whether there was much spiritual significance in the attendance of society on those occasions. Another of my informants reminded me that the fashionables at Burlingame had been leading the life of the spirit since the club house burned down and that the athletic craze started by Miss Sears had brought nearly everybody closer to Nature and to Nature's God. She added that the morals of society had shown a distinct improvement since Lent, as there are not nearly so many ordinances to break once the penitential season closes. She pointed out that many of our foremost women were fasting rigorously, but admitted that it was to reduce their weight rather than to win favor with Heaven. In conclusion she told me that society people were not to be judged by the common standard of virtue anyway. I suppose I ought to be convinced. If the avoidance of open scandal is a sign of virtuous living I must admit that society has been virtuous for at least a fortnight.

Mrs. Alexander Lilley of San Rafael is actively engaged these days forming a Children's Symphony Orchestra. It is said that negotiations are in progress for the sale of the Lilley place to parties who wish to open a private hotel.

Speculation about Jennie Crocker

Those who make a scientific study of social events, particularly weddings, (and this includes professional bavardes, ambitious mothers and fortune-hunting youths), know that suggestion is a powerful factor in matters hymeneal. What does this mean? Simply that there is a subtle fluid diffused in the matrimonial atmosphere which electrifies outsiders and turns their thoughts toward the possibilities of happiness in double harness. In other words, when there is one marriage in a family there is pretty likely to be another one very soon. To speak in concrete terms, for instance, now that Mr. Templeton Crocker is engaged it should not surprise anybody to hear that his sister Miss Jennie Crocker was thinking of following his example. Mind you, I am not announcing the engagement of Miss Jennie Crocker. I am merely telling you, as a scientific observer, what is likely to occur. Miss Crocker, for some time to come, will be immersed in wedding preparations. The fragrance of orange blossoms will be the breath of her nostrils, so to speak. When her brother is not talking about it, no doubt the charming Miss Irwin will contrive to say a word or two on the subject. Being a true woman Miss Crocker will talk, think, yea dream wedding for some time to come. What more natural then that the personal equation should assert itself? that Miss Crocker should decide to go and do likewise? Miss Crocker has many admirers, several of them disinterested, sincere, ardent admirers who would lay fortunes at her feet. I for one would not be surprised if she should make up her mind to change her estate.

Fashionables Back to Nature

Since the advent of Maud Allen the "back to nature" fad has taken deep root and there isn't a girl in the smart set who is not practising the cult in one form or another. The result will be seen next winter. The ball rooms will be filled with tall lanky maids of the passive Burne-Jones type, their garments swathed about their lithe, slender bodies in careful carelessness. Robust curves on the fashionable feminine figure are anethematized with an indignation so profound that only a society elegante can understand. By the way of attaining this patrician gauntness the girls will spend their vactions in all kinds of hard-working ways. Some of them will camp in the Yosemite, carefully leaving their luxurious limousines outside the portals of the park. They're going to walk through the big park, cook their own meals, and otherwise lead the simple life with the most ascetic severity. Miss Gertrude Perry will take a party of her friends on a camping tour of Yosemite next week and will follow this program. Other girls in fashionable society have devised a way to spend their week-ends which will enable them to attain the same slimsiness. They go up the north shore on Saturday, leaving the club house at 5 in the morning, walk six or eight miles before breakfast which they cook on the beach, then resume the hike along the shore road for another ten miles when a stop is made for luncheon. Then begins the return. It was Miss Julia Langhorne who invented this method, and regularly every Saturday eight or ten of her friends, all carefully chaperoned and well protected by a guard of strong young fellows, take to the trail, enjoying their meals prepared on the beach. They say it is great fun.

Mrs. Garnett's Peacock Chapeau

Porter Garnett, bohemian and esthete, has found new expression for his originality in the design of a hat for his wife. The bit of millinery suggests the Chantecler style but instead of a plebian rooster, little Mrs. Garnett's headpiece is made of a haughty peacock which covers her coal-black tresses in turban fashion. It is a superb and daring confection and the wonder is that it hasn't been imitated. The entire body of the iridescent bird is utilized. The head, with its coronet of shimmering aigrettes, is at one side while the breast and back form the body of the hat with the wings tucked in cosily and a long sweep of shining tailfeathers adding a jaunty sauciness. If the bird could see himself as he now looks he would certainly acknowledge that his martyrdom to fashion had brought abundant compensation. Instead of strutting about the farmyard for the edification of stupid fowl, the peacock now attracts the admiration of the bohemian literati, among whom the Garnetts are leaders.

"Avalon," the palatial summer residence of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ayer of Boston, will be the scene of a brilliant wedding next Thursday when Miss Beatrice Banning Ayer becomes the bride of Lieutenant George Smith Patton Jr., lieutenant in the Fifteenth Cavalry. The guests will be taken to the wedding on a special train from Boston. The groom-to-be is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. George Patton of Pasadena and nephew of Mrs. J. de Barth Shorb.

The New Queen and Americans

The great question among American women who yearn for the conquest of exclusive London society is whether the new queen will look with favor on American hostesses backed by American millions. The prevailing impression seems to be that she will not. On this subject a California woman who is intimately acquainted with social conditions in London writes me as follows: "If it is true that the present Queen of England intends to sweep all Americans out of court (and I heard she said she would, some years ago) they can form a pretty strong opposition and will be reinforced by a great many Englishwomen who would disapprove of the Queen quite as much as she could disapprove of them. There was such an Opposition in Queen Victoria's time, and it kept society from being as dull and provincial as it would otherwise have been. True, it was headed by the Prince of Wales, but the new Opposition will find a leader."

Miss Sears in New York

Having exhausted Blingum and the Blingumites Miss Eleanor Sears, the Back Bay athlete, has moved on New York with the intention of astonishing its upper circles. That Miss Sears has succeeded goes without saying, for there is only one case on record of Miss Sears failure in what she started out to do and that was when she was forcibly deterred from finishing her walk from Burlingame to Del Monte. It was during the Ladies' Horse Show at Durland's that Miss Sears excited the comments of the fashionables of the eastern metropolis. With Mrs. John Gerken of New York and Mrs. Charles F. Hubbs of Brooklyn Miss Sears passed judgment on the saddle horses. She made the nags trot, walk and canter. She felt their necks and examined their hocks with a critical eye. And when she awarded the blue rosettes everybody agreed that she knew her business. Her dog-cart turnout took a second place because of her superior handling of the reins. With her tandem she cut figure eights and backed, turned sharp corners and stopped abruptly, showing such mastery that she took another prize. Her mannish clothes with which we are familiar, her "Harvard swagger," her unconventional freedom claimed as much attention as her knowledge of horse flesh. The papers have devoted considerable space to Miss Sears and their tone is one of unfeigned admiration. Of course they have told again the story of the famous jaunt, though with some minor inaccuracies. For instance, one paper speaks of Templeton Crocker as a "society athlete," a description which does not describe.

Rumor says that Douglas Grant, the heir of the Joseph D. Grants, is going to marry the daughter of one of our oldest and most exclusive Catholic families. Young Grant is now on his way to Europe.

An Art Institute Story

The annual exhibition of students' work at the Art Institute reminds me that the boys have again polished up the story of the model corrupted by kindness. It is a story worth retelling, even if it didn't happen last week, as the class insists. It really occurred a few winters back, but that is no reason why the spring class should be debarred from appropriating it. It seems that one day the life class was out of a model and the boys and girls were at their wits' end to find one. In desperation two of the boys went to Murray and Ready, the labor agents. Among the hundreds of idlers and unemployed they found a long lank cadaverous mortal, lean and hungry as a famished pirate and so utterly disreputable, so ragged and woe-begone and dirty that they pounced on him as a treasure, bringing him in great glee to the institute. He was the quintessence of bum, a model for all the Weary-Willies in the comic supplement. He was given a box to perch on and the class went to work. He was an inspiration, and in addition to his angularity and brigandish looking gauntness was gifted with a vocabulary that convulsed the art students with hilarity. It was a great day for art. When the class was dismissed the man's ragged appearance melted the tender hearts of the students and they made up a purse for him, telling him that they wanted him to pose for the next two weeks. The fellow had never before in his life had such an audience, so he felt duly impressed. To show his appreciation, when he came back the next day his jungle beard was gone, his long red hair had succumbed to the civilizing influence of the barber. The rags had been replaced by a cheap new outfit and the obtruding toes were hidden within squeaky new shoes. When he made his appearance early in the morning he was hooted out of the room.

Concert Parties and Bach

Concert parties at the Greek Theater this Saturday afternoon, with tea following, will bring together many of the fashionable folk about the bay. The Passion music which will be rendered by the Bach Choir has created more than the usual interest in musical affairs. Many of the women who are patronesses will entertain their friends in this pleasant manner. Mrs. Wickham Havens, Mrs. Oscar Long, Mrs. Oscar Luning and Mrs. John Galen Howard are among those interested in this ambitious enterprise. Dr. J. Fred Wolle has received much encouragement in his endeavor to give an annual musical festival at the Greek Theater and from what one hears it will be an unusual event.

The Dargie-McCarthy Marriage

Society received a genuine surprise when it learned that Andrew G. McCarthy, popular clubman and successful businessman, had taken unto himself a bride in the person of Miss Bessie Dargie, the daughter of the late Thomas Dargie of Oakland. While Mr. McCarthy had never been regarded as a bachelor confirmed, he had given no intimation to his friends that he intended to become a benedick, but when they heard of his marriage they rained congratulations upon him. Miss Dargie is a charming girl, petite and black-eyed, just past eighteen years. The ceremony was performed by Father Prendergast, the chancellor of the archdiocese, at the Cathedral rectory in Franklin street. Mrs. Thomas Dargie gave the bride away and the bride's aunt, Miss Flora Sharon Sedgwick, was maid of honor. Mr. John M. Sullivan was Mr. McCarthy's best man. On the day following the marriage Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy departed for the East. On their return they will make their home in this city. I hear their first wedding present was the finest Steinway piano in the Steinway factory, the gift of Sherman, Clay & Co. of which firm Mr. McCarthy is treasurer.

The Flight of the Bachelors

One wing of the twelfth floor of the St. Francis Hotel has for a long time borne the name of Bachelors' Hall, but unless something is done quickly the bacalaureate title will be a misnomer. All the bachelors save one have fled and the busy scenes that once were enacted about their doors, such as bell boys darting in with trays of cocktails and darting out with empty glasses soon to be refilled, have given way to a solemn calm. The strange thing about the situation is that none of the erstwhile dwellers in Bachelors' Hall has departed in the direction of matrimony; it just seems that some adverse fate has scattered them. George Lewis, the gay member of the firm of Shreve and Company who knows more about the jeweled gifts which rich men give their wives and affinities than any other man in town, has taken a cosy little flat. Paul Verdier of the City of Paris and Dr. Dunn have started for Europe. Maurice Griffin has hearkened to the call of the country and is enjoying the peace of Marin County. Jack Crothers has hied him to his chicken and butter farm at Niles. And only Willy O'Connor remains, a lone bachelor, walking the untenanted corridor is not too corpulent majesty.

The Mansfeldt Recital

A very interesting program of music will be given on Friday evening, May 27, at Kohler and Chase Hall by Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt, the pianist, Mr. Ignaz Haroldi, the violinist and Mr. Wenceslao Villalpando, the violincellist. The following numbers will be rendered: 1. Trio, Op. 97, Beethoven; 2. Violoncello Soli, a. Andante Symphonique, Op. 18, D'Erlanger; b. Rondo. Dvorak; 3. Trio, Op. 15, No. 2, Rubinstein.

Barrie's Delicious Comedy

By Edward F. O'Day

Gentle reader, of course you are aware that comedy is a game played to throw reflections upon social life, that it deals with human nature in the drawing-room of civilized men and women, where we have no dust of the struggling outer world, no mire, no violent crashes, to make the correctness of the representation convincing. Equally of course you know that in comedy credulity is not wooed through the impressionable senses. You are aware as well as I that the comic spirit conceives a definite situation for a number of characters, that it rejects all accessories in the exclusive pursuit of them and their speech; that being a spirit, it hunts the spirit in men, with never a thought of persuading you to belief. Knowing these things you know also that these are beautiful words which I have given you, but you do not for a moment wonder at that, for of course you know that the words are not mine—I would that they were! Gentle but sagacious reader that you are, you know that I borrowed these words from Meredith and that there is no chance of my passing them off as my own, supposing that I so desired, because everybody in the world reads Meredith now that he is dead and indifferent. What? Well, perhaps not everybody. I make no apology for setting a Meredith jewel here, like the brilliant in the toad's head, because when Meredith wrote those words he might well have had James Barrie in mind. If James Barrie be not the comic spirit housed in a tenement of flesh, as I verily believe, he is at least that spirit's most favored mouthpiece. Miss Maude Adams being in turn the delicate instrument which vibrates to Barrie's lightest touch, we who have had the privilege of seeing her in "What Every Woman Knows" may consider that we have established intimate relations with the spirit world. It is not a world for critics; their well-intentioned nullities, shadowy enough at times, are less ethereal than its pavement whereon only the elect like Mr. Barrie and Miss Adams may walk securely. Let the critickin try to follow them with his seven-league sentences and he will realize his limitations more poignantly than is good for his self-esteem. Let us not therefore try to penetrate this world where Mr. Barrie and Miss Adams hold laughing communion with the comic spirit. Rather let us regard them from afar, acknowledging the grossness of our too solid flesh that debars us from their company. It is a delicious spectacle that Mr. Barrie, Miss Adams and their crony, the comic spirit, are presenting. In our crude terms we might describe it as the spectacle, old as this old world, of a man making a fool of himself and a woman loving him for his foolishness. Being naught but fools we men look on this as admirable satire, but the women know that it is naked verity and they laugh with us at the spectacle, lest we be ashamed. Not that we are too much ashamed. This man of Barrie's, being a great fool, cannot be like other men, ourselves for instance; and this woman of Barrie's, being a creature gifted with uncanny knowledge of masculine weakness, cannot be like other women, our wives or sweethearts, let us say. Knowing that we belong to the stronger sex, the superior gender of life, we are not so much embarrassed as amused at Barrie's revelations. Of course they stir a bit of uneasiness, but our fine masculine pride is equal to the energency. Miss Adams is laughing at her man, of course, but she could not laugh that way at us. We have never succumbed to the failings that he succumbs to. We have never falsely estimated our strength, our ability. We know the worth of woman, though of course we do not lean on her, consciously or unconsciously, as John Shand leaned on Maggie. Of course our Shandisms are our own, not our wives'. We have the sense of humor indeed. Why, of course we have. Do we not laugh at our wives and sweethearts, as well as with them? And of course we know that they do not laugh at us. We know that they are not doing for us as Maggie did for John. Poor silly, blind weaklings that we are! Not all the witchery of Barrie and Miss Adams in league with the comic spirit can wake us from our trance of self-satisfaction. That perhaps is something more that every woman knows and knowing, laughs inwardly, not only at the spectacle on the stage but also at the spectacle by her side in the orchestra chair, the eternal masculine hedged about by conceit. To return to Meredith for a moment, you remember that he tells us: "In Comedy is the singular scene of charity issuing of disdain under the stroke of honorable laughter." Can we men allow that Meredith was right in that? The sentence is certainly a marvelous adumbration of the play we are considering. "What Every Woman Knows" is compact of charity and honorable laughter, but disdain? Must we acknowledge the disdain? Do these women, with their charity and their laughter, harbor also a sentiment of disdain? It is not a pleasant speculation, especially if in real life the disdain be not so refined by charity and honorable laughter as in the stillatory of comedy. You see, our glimpse of that other world wherein the comic spirit gambols with Barrie and Miss Adams is not altogether soothing to our complacency. If our eyes see aright they convey the impression that men are but poor creatures. Can Barrie have meant as much? I am afraid that was his intention. I fear that Miss Adams takes a keen delight in interpreting him just that way. But after all, how can Barrie know what every woman knows? Surely no woman ever told him. What a joke on John Shand if what Maggie told him was but an iota of the truth! a carefully pared truth wrapped in laughter to make it sweet to the masculine palate! What if there is more behind? Will Mr. Barrie kindly refrain from writing another such play lest men be overwhelmed with shame? Or will he kindly construct a play telling all the world what every man knows about woman? Perhaps that would not supply material enough for a playlet, but if it were eked out by what man thinks he knows about woman Mr. Barrie would be oppressed by the weight of his material. Meanwhile I have been so busy running round in circles in a vain attempt to vindicate my sex that I have no space for praise of the greatest actress on the American stage

Exit Max Beerbohm

All readers of the Saturday Review of London are sorry to learn that Max Beerbohm has given up the post of dramatic critic for that fine weekly. For twelve years Beerbohm has occupied the place formerly filled by George Bernard Shaw, with credit to himself and with profit to those interested in plays and players. His judgment has ever been sound, his articles invariably entertaining. Only a writer of exceptional ability can prove his worthy successor. It remains to be seen whether Lord Dunsany will fill the bill. From Beerbohm's valedictory I cull these sentences:

Twelve long years, all but a short month or two, have elapsed since I became a dramatic critic. I had no desire to become one. "G. B. S." had just stepped aside: I found myself in his place, blinking. Had I been told that I was destined to write about plays for twelve weeks, I should have shuddered. Had I been told that I was destined to write about them for twelve years, I should have expired on the spot, neatly falsifying the prediction. But Fate weaves in darkness (which perhaps is why she weaves so badly), and it was not long before I acquired a vivid interest in the thing that, unbeknown to me, was going to take up so much of my time on this planet. Not that my pen ever ran away with me. I do not recall that I have once sat down eager to write, or that I have once written with ease and delight. But the cause of this lack was not in the nature of my theme. It was in myself. Writing has always been uphill work to me, mainly because I am cursed with an acute literary conscience. To seem to write with ease and delight is one of the duties which a writer owes to his readers, to his art. And to contrive that effect involves very great skill and care: it is a matter of technique, a matter of construction partly, and partly of choice of words and cadences. There may be—I have never met one—writers who enjoy the act of writing; but without that technique their enjoyment will not be manifest. I may often have failed, in my articles here, to disguise labor. But the effort to disguise it has always been loyally made. And thus it is that Thursday, the day chosen by me (as being the latest possible one) for writing my article, has for twelve years been regarded by me as the least pleasant day of the week. On Wednesday I have had always a certain sense of oppression, of misgiving, even of dread. On Friday—the danger past, the sun shining, my feet dancing! And yet (such is habit, and so subtle a thing the human organism), whenever I have let pass a Thursday I have felt uncomfortable, unsatisfied, throughout the day. Even during my annual holiday, away from England, when I have kept no count of the days of the week, I have always recognized Thursday by the vague feeling of inanition in me, of impatience—the sort of feeling a clock may have when it has not been wound up. And I am wondering now, as I write, just how I shall feel next Thursday, and on the Thursdays to come.

Collier Follows Maude Adams

William Collier who last appeared here in "Caught in the Rain" is to be the next attraction at the Columbia Theater where he will present his newest comedy success, "A Lucky Star," which he brings direct from a four months' run in New York. The play has been adapted from the novel called "The Motor Chaperon" and in its transfer to the stage Anne Crawford Flexner who was responsible for "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," has been highly successful. It is said that seldom, if ever before, has a role been so carefuly modeled to fit a star's requirements as is the central figure in "A Lucky Star."

"The Squaw Man" at the Alcazar

"The Squaw Man" which is to be revived for a week's run at the Alcazar, commencing next Monday, has earned a reputation for clean, wholesome, thoroughgoing Americanism that comes close to placing upon it the stamp of the greatest play of the West. Its author, Edwin Milton Royle, was reared amid the people he depicts and all that his characters say and do in developing his cleverly-constructed plot is marked by a naturalness that charms while it convinces, while the atmosphere surprises by its realism all who have gazed from a railway-car window at the bleak Wyoming cattle country. Landers Stevens is splendidly equipped, both physically and temperamentally, for the title part, and in the cast with him will be all the members of the Alcazar company and a number of extra people. Evelyn Vaughan will again be seen as the Earl's wife, Bessie Barriscale as the little squaw, Fred J. Butler as Big Bill, the rancho foreman, and Will R. Walling as the Earl. Those who witnessed "The Squaw Man" during its three weeks' run in the Alcazar last season need not be told that its pictorial appeal is very strong.

Good Vaudeville at the Orpheum

The Herring-Curtiss aeroplane in which Glenn H. Curtiss made his championship flights at Rheims and Brescia will be exhibited at the Orpheum next week. While it is impossible to make an actual flight in the theatre the remarkable airship will be seen in operation and the audience will be given a practical and comprehensive idea of its mechanism. Miss Mabel Bardine and her company of five will present "Suey San," described as a Chinese tragedy. All the characters meet in the San Francisco Chinatown where the plot is developed. The scenery and electrical effects are elaborate. James H. Cullen, humorist and raconteur, will be in the new bill. The Morrisey Sisters and Brothers, four agile and gifted singers and dancers, will contribute a pleasing diversion. The Thomas J. Ryan-Richfield Company will appear in another of Will Cressy's sketches entitled "Mag Haggerty's Father." It will be the last week of their engagement. Smith and Campbell, the Three Brothers Mascagno, and Frank Fogarty, "The Dublin Minstrel," will also say farewell with this program.

"The Wolf" at Ye Liberty

The Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, have a splendid offering for next week in "The Wolf," which they will stage for the first time anywhere at popular prices. This play by Eugene Walter, author of "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way" and "Just a Wife," represents a type of character and phase of life different from anything hitherto done by Mr. Walter. It is a story of the Hudson Bay country in the far Canadian Northwest and depicts in the rough the passions and heroism of the people who dwell there. The men are not of the familiar stage type nor are the scenes of a mechanical order. The role of Jules Beaubien, the young French Canadian hero of the piece, will afford Sydney Ayres a splendid acting role, in which his appearance will be watched with interest, and Elizabeth Stewart will be seen in an equally congenial role in Hilda, the only feminine character in the play. "The Wolf" will be given a strong cast throughout, and the usual complete scenic surroundings will be provided. "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," George M. Cohan's musical play, is announced to follow.

The Macdonough Attractions

Grace George opened an engagement of three nights, starting Thursday with a matinee this Saturday, at the Macdonough Theater, Oakland, in Thompson Buchanan's "A Woman's Way." For Monday, May 23, the management of this theater have secured Maud Allan. Miss Allan will be seen for one night only and it will probably be her last performance in the United States. Among the dances that will be executed will be "The Vision of Salome." Miss Allan will have the assistance of an augumented symphony orchestra under the direction of Paul Steindorff, who the next day will leave for a three months' visit to his parents in Germany. Miss Allan will also leave for London where she has a special engagement of forty performances. Kolb & Dill will open at the Macdonough May 30 in a three weeks' engagement during which they will present a varied repertoire including their great San Francisco success "The Merry Widow" and "The Devil." June 7 and 8 Maud Adams will be at the Macdonough in "What Every Woman Knows" which is daily adding laurels to those already won by the little actress. July 4, 5, and 6 Willie Collier will be at this enterprising playhouse. July 7 Ferris Hartman will open an unlimited engagement in comic opera at popular prices. Every one in Oakland as well as San Francisco knows Ferris Hartman and his mirth creating qualities. His company will be picked from the best the Pacific Coast affords and the operas will be staged with great care.

Ohlmeyer at Idora

Ohlmeyer's Coronado Beach Band is duplicating the success recently scored by Ferullo at Idora Park. Herbert L. Clarke, for eleven years with Sousa as premier cornetist and assistant director, is leading soloist. Franz Helle, the great exponent of the fluegel horn; George Mulford, Sousa's famous piccolo player; Otto Jacobs, euphonium; John Hughes, cornet; P. J. Parisi, trombone and Henry Meyer Jr., xylophone, make one of the greatest combinations of soloists ever heard. Two of the solo players are heard at every concert, afternoon and evening. On next Wednesday Ohlmeyer will play a Victor Herbert program, the entire evening being devoted to the selections of America's popular composer.

Stellar attractions for the near future at the Columbia Theater are Margaret Anglin, Mrs. Fiske and Henrietta Crosman.

Margaret Anglin is to give a performance of the "Antigone" of Sophocles at the Greek Theater and elaborate preparations for that event are now being made.

Is Richard Bennett a Scotchman? His portrayal of John Shand is so lifelike, his accent so good, that many think he must be to the manner born.

Maude Allan dances for the last time in San Francisco at the Valencia Theater tonight. The "Vision of Salome" will be among her offerings.

R. Peyton Carter, David Torrence and Fred Tyler who play the parts of the three Wylie brothers in the Barrie play are excellent actors.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks—There was good week end buying of some of the leading shares with Reading in front. The buying gave rise to important developments in this property and the intimation is made that the long looked for segregation of the coal lands from the railway will occur ere long. The buying up of the Clark Montana copper properties by the Amalgamated Company gave sufficient impetus to the latter stock to make some of the short interest cover. We have stated recently that we believed that the corner had been turned in the stock market and that values would do better for some time and we have given as the reason for the change that we are now approaching the crop season and the adjournment of Congress. Both of these factors are favorable and distinctly important. The outlook for good crops means a revival of business throughout the country and the adjournment of Congress, the doing away with political agitation. We have the strong fundamentals for better stock values in the coming two months.

Wheat—Vigorous and persistent application of muscle on the part of powerful and wealthy speculators has caused a recovery in the last half of last week of most of the ground lost in the first half. Early losses in values followed the issue of the government's estimates of the acreage and condition of the winter wheat crop. These show that the crop condition had improved in April although the winter losses in acreage were extremely heavy and brought the big seeded area down to only fair proportions—714,000 acres more than was harvested last year. Timely rains have vastly improved the general condition of the winter wheat crop since the government report was issued, although there has at the same time been further abandonment of many wheat fields that were in doubt a month ago. Hessian fly damage has also caused some impairment of soft winter wheat prospects in a limited section of which southern Illinois is the center. Nevertheless it is a safe assumption that 50,000,000 bushels more could be taken off the present winter wheat promise before even a normally healthy situation would be restored. A wealthy and stubborn eastern speculator and investor owns the present stock in Chicago and has bought more wheat to be delivered this month. He has paid out several modest fortunes to carry much of this wheat since September last, the holdings being added to in December and showing little shrinkage from merchandising drains since then. The chance of merchandising it at present levels is disappearing rapidly as the new crop approaches, while the prospects of the expensive load being increased are considerable.

Corn lost very little ground last week. There was more weakness in the May delivery than in more deferred values. This was a reflection of the fears regarding the quality of some of the kiln dried mixed corn in store, but this corn is being rapidly moved out. Cold weather has retarded the growth in the southern areas, where a fair percentage of the crop was already up.

Cotton—The cotton market has been active and strong the past few days, with prices at a new high level for this year. The trading in July in particular was very active. The advance seemed to be taken advantage of by the bulls to market some cotton and traders were fairly good sellers on the advance. The sentiment in regard to the price of spot cotton for the future is generally bullish. As far as the old crop months are concerned, we look for a considerable squeeze in any one of these near months. The advance in the market was credited to the anxiety of the shorts to get out. The strength the past few days has been more of a demonstration than the shorts could stand. The influence of the confident predictions that the bull deal would be carried through the summer in an aggressive form also tended to disturb the short sellers. With all this to influence sympathetically the prices on the new crop, we still maintain that the high prices of last year and those predicted or even indicated for the new crop can never hold and that we will see a change of sentiment and lower prices.

Copper—The copper metal market has continued soft. Metal was offered at 12⅜ cents per pound, and it is reported that consumers are holding off. Last week electrolytic copper sold off five-eighths of a cent in New York. This decline may be attributed to a continued increase in foreign visible supply. During April the visible increase abroad was 7,000 tons, where it was expected that there would be a decrease. Copper stocks in the United States and Europe now aggregate 400,000,000 and the production is practically at top figures. Of late there has been heard some talk of a reduction for the Butte district. The output for April was a little more than 25 million pounds and for May will probably be more than thirty million. From advices received from Butte the managers have no intention of closing down their properties or even curtailing this production on account of the decline in the price of metal. The average price of producing copper in Butte is about 10 cents per pound and even were the price of metal to decline to 11 cents a pound the Butte mines could be continued in operation much more economically than they could be closed down, because this latter would mean deterioration in the machinery and the possible filling in of some of the mines with water. Therefore no curtailment of production can be expected from that source. The only hope of the situation is an increase in the demand for the metal and we can say advisedly in regard to this phase of the question that an increased demand is being made every day. Within a few days the American Metal Co. and the United Metals Selling Companies have, it is reported, made some very large sales of copper for immediate delivery though there is no verification of these rumors. These companies, they say, expect to buy copper at 12 cents per pound within thirty days. This low price does not worry the low cost porphyry companies. Nevada Consolidated, for instance, can make a good profit on 12½ or even 11 cent copper, as it can produce it at 7.46 cents per pound against 10 cents in the Butte mines. Should the price of metals temporarily decline to below 12 cents, the principal sufferers will be the Butte and Michigan properties, while those of Utah, Nevada and Arizona will not suffer nearly as much.

and the heat of a July sun had now increased my thirst till it had become almost insufferable. The thought too that I might wander in those mountains without finding water until I became lost, and had to lie down and die a death of torture almost distracted me. I wandered on until to my horror I discovered that I had already got turned around, and lost my way. I could not tell from the confused mass of hills around me which way to go to get out of them. I was hemmed in by a dense thicket of chapparal, and had scarcely strength to extricate myself. I now sat down on my blankets and began to think seriously of death. I had no means of knowing whether every step I took was not plunging me deeper into the lonely wilds of those vast mountains, and no reason to hope that a journey of days among them, supposing that I could have held out, would have at all bettered my condition. I was indeed in a dreadful strait. I knew that I had been at times a great sinner against the commandments of God, and asked for forgiveness. I could not, however, bring to mind a single instance where I had wickedly injured any of my fellow creatures, or where I had injured any one at all, except in retaliation for injuries done to me, and I thought my punishment was more than I deserved, if it was the intention of Heaven to let me perish there from the tortures of thirst, a lonely maniac, with no eye save my Maker's and the beasts and vultures to look upon my corpse, and no tongue to tell the dreadful story to my fellow men. I felt that, though it might be the will of Providence that I should not ultimately escape the toils of my pursuers, my sins had not been so black and many that he should have reserved me for this frightful death, and I took heart. I had a burning fever, and all kinds of wild phantasies filled my brain. I thought of the story of Aaron smiting the rock in the wilderness for the children of Israel, and actually wondered whether I might not hope for some such miraculous interposition for me. While I sat here too exhausted to move, night came on, and I then discovered what I did not know before, that thirst is never half so intense at night as it is in the day time. As the night advanced, although each hour lengthened the time of my privation still each hour refreshed me. Finally I fell asleep. When I awoke in the morning I felt much fresher than when I had halted on the preceding day, but still suffering dreadfully from thirst. I at once summoned all my courage and pressed forward again, whither I knew not, in search of relief. As the sun rose higher my agony of course increased, but nerved by despair, I pressed on eagerly looking around for any sign of water. I thought of the clear sparkling spring where I had bathed at the Arroyo Honde, and the aqueduct of the Mission of Santa Barbara and a dozen places where I had seen water clearest and coldest and freshest, and I thought the vision would madden me.

At length after walking an hour or two, just as I had become convinced that I could hold out under the increasing heat but a little while longer, I espied some leaves on the side of a rock which looked damp. I put my hands on them and to my unspeakable joy I discovered that they were quite wet. I knew there must be water near them and tried to trace them up to the source, but they became dry again only a little way up the rock and I commenced to dig with my knife among them. At first I could not discover where the water was weeping from. After a little while, however, I discovered a small aperture in the rock shaped something like a bake oven. The rock was very soft, being decomposed, and I could work on it almost as easily as clay. I dug away at it and presently drops of water began to fall out of it into a little basin at the bottom of the oven. This basin I cleaned out so that it would hold more, and after working at it more than an hour, I was enabled by inserting a reed, which I cut for the purpose, into the basin, to suck up a few drops of water. I think I must have drank all that fell into the basin for an hour and a half before I quenched my thirst. I then ate heartily of my bread and beef tongue, for I was very hungry, having abstained from eating lest it should increase my thirst. When night came I made a soft, comfortable bed by spreading my blanket on the leaves, and, throwing myself upon it, I fervently thanked God for his kindness to me in my wretchedness, and enjoyed a sweet and untroubled sleep until morning. When I awoke I found that my labor of yesterday had been rewarded by a beautiful little spring, which during the night had become full of clear cold water. I took a delicious draught of it and then washed myself and sat down to eat the slim remnants of my beef tongue and bread. I now bethought me that a desperate attempt must be made to get out of the mountains, otherwise, my provisions being exhausted, I should have only escaped death by thirst to perish by starvation.

Accordingly, I cut two long slim poles with my knife, and tying them across each other firmly, with a piece of my handkerchief, I made a cross and hung it on a small leafless tree that stood near the spot, so that in the event any other poor hunted fugitive should find himself lost and dying in those mountains, he might see by the cross that some one had been there, and find the water. I well knew that none but the persecuted and pursued would ever have business in those grim solitudes. I cut the initials of my name on the tree on which I had hung the cross, christened the place "St. Peter's Spring," and commenced my doubtful attempt to get out of the mountain. After partly walking and partly crawling on my hands
